> The bill is for the relief of a particular individual. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] proposes to amend it by adding a general clause to cover cases of a similar character. The Chair is of opinion that it is neither in order to amend the bill by the addition of a general clause nor by providing for the case of another individual. Upon this ground the Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Now, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] concedes, as everybody must, that the pending bill is special. It relates to a single individual nation—Cuba. The amendment proposed is general and relates to all nations. It is not germane to a special bill relating to Cuba.

The ruling I have cited was followed, Mr. Chairman, in the Forty-eighth Congress, where there was pending a bill to admit Oregon as a State. My venerable and distinguished colleague [Mr. GROW] moved an amendment including another—Kansas. It was ruled by James L. Orr, of South Carolina, then Speaker of this House, that the amendment was not germane. Mr. GROW appealed. On motion of Mr. Alexander H. Stephens, the House tabled the appeal by a vote of 126 to 92. Both the Speaker and the House held that as the bill in terms related to one State only, an amendment relating to another was not germane. This bill relates to Cuba. Its provisions are restricted specifically to Cuba. The amendment relates to Germany and every other country.

Again, when a bill was offered to admit New Mexico the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] who recently addressed the Chair moved to amend by inserting other States. Speaker Crisp ruled that amendment out of order. In the Fiftieth Congress a bill to admit Dakota was pending. Speaker Carlisle ruled out an amendment to admit another State. Again, in the Fifty-third Congress, it was held by Speaker Carlisle that it was not in order to ingraft upon a bill for the relief of one State a provision for the relief of another. That will be found in section 1084 of Mr. Hinds's book. The bill was offered by Mr. Bryan for the relief of Nebraska from certain expenses incurred in relation to an Indian raid. An amendment was offered affording similar relief to South Dakota. Mr. Joseph D. Sayers, now governor of Texas, made the point that it was not germane.

Speaker Carlisle cited the decision of Speaker Cobb, to which I have referred, that a bill for the relief of an individual could not be amended by inserting a general clause, or by a provision for the relief of another individual. He held that a bill relating to one State could not be amended by adding matter for the relief of another State. This is a bill for the relief of Cuba. An amendment for the relief of Germany, or any other country, or all other countries, or relating to them generally is not germane.

Now, I should like, Mr. Chairman, to call attention to this bill. It is, as its title indicates, "A bill to provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba." It is not a tariff bill. Incidentally it affects the tariff, by providing that upon certain conditions the President may reduce the tariff upon articles coming from Cuba. It relates only to Cuba.

Now, under the decisions which I have cited it is clear that an amendment would not be in order extending these reciprocal trade relations to Germany, if you please, or to any other country. The Chair would have to rule that or overrule the decisions of a dozen different Speakers of this House. But here is an amendment which is general. It relates to goods coming from all countries. It does not even provide reciprocal trade relations with those countries. It is upon a different subject. It provides that sugar from Germany and from all other countries shall come into this country under changed tariff conditions, without any reciprocal provisions whatever. It has no relation to reciprocal trade relations with any country, and it does not relate to Cuba. It violates the rule because it is "on a subject different from that under consideration."

Now, as my venerable colleague [Mr. GROW] has said, this is not a bill which mentions sugar at all. Sugar is affected only incidentally. It is affected no more than other products coming from Cuba. It does not relate to any article of commerce coming from any other country. And therefore, without longer consuming your time, I submit that an amendment proposing a provision of general law, applicable to products coming from all countries and without any reciprocal trade relations is manifestly not germane to a bill which relates only to Cuba and has for its sole object the establishment of reciprocal trade relations with that government.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I submitted this amendment to the House, and submitted it in good faith, supposing and believing the amendment to be germane to the bill now under consideration, as I now believe it to be so germane, it is proper that I should give to the House the reasons for that belief.

Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has said, provides for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba. And how does it provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba? It provides for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba by a reduction of the tariff on articles coming from Cuba. And in so far as it does that it affects the revenue, and inasmuch as it does that it was held to be in order and a privileged bill by the Speaker of this House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are certain things that this House is obliged to know. There are certain things which appear in the pubiic records of this Government, in the public documents of this House. There are certain things which have been brought to the attention of this House in this debate, now running for nearly two weeks; and what are those things?

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, what have we been talking about here for nearly two weeks? What single article have we confined our discussion to? Nothing on the face of the earth but sugar. [Applause.] It has been a sugar proposition from start to finish. What does this bill propose? It proposes to reduce the tariff upon articles coming from Cuba. And what does this House know from the records of the Government and the evidence before the House?

It knows that the principal, the chief, the overwhelming article that comes from Cuba is sugar. And what kind of sugar? This House knows, every member of it, that the kind of sugar that comes from Cuba is raw sugar, and practically nothing else. That is what the House knows, and that is what the country knows.

Now, by this reduction what do we do? We reduce the tariff on raw sugar coming from Cuba from 1.685 to 1.34. In other words, as to that sugar we have increased the gap between the duty on refined sugar and the duty on raw sugar from the difference between 1.685 and 1.95 to the difference between 1.34 and 1.95, for there is practically no refined sugar coming from Cuba, and consequently the 20 per cent reduction on refined sugar from Cuba has no effect. We have increased it from two hundred and sixty-five one-thousandths to about sixty-one hundredths of a cent per pound, and that gap is the differential.

And on how much is that increase of the differential? This House knows that that is on more than half the sugar that comes into the country. And if that be the case, is not that an increase of the differential by more than half that amount on all the sugar that comes into the country from all the world?

In other words, by this bill you have disturbed the relations fixed by our tariff laws between the duty on raw sugar and the duty on refined sugar, on all the sugar which we import.

Is it possible, then, for us to say that we have not the right to readjust the sugar schedule of our tariff law to, in part at least, correct this disturbance during the time while the agreement proposed in this bill is in operation? [Applause.] That is the question, and that is the sole question.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, my distinguished and venerated friend Mr. GROW, said the word "sugar" is not in this bill. The word "sugar" is not, but "sugar" is in it and all over it. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, coming to the decisions, you may hunt them over and over and you are not going to find a single case, as the distinguished gentleman from Maine has said, that is on all fours with this. The only case that I have been able to find in all my search at all like it is the case already referred to, decided by Mr. Blaine.

He decided that when the House was considering a bill for the reduction of internal-revenue taxes an amendment proposing to reduce customs duties was germane and in order; that to compensate for the changes made in the internal taxes the House could necessarily make changes in external taxes. Now, I will read what Mr. Blaine said, just for a minute. Mr. Blaine said that in his judgment—> the amendment was germane, from the very necessities of the case; for it might be of the utmost importance in determining the internal revenue to be derived from any article to determine also what the external revenue shall be from the same article.

Surely the case presented by this amendment is very much stronger than the one decided by Mr. Blaine. Here is a measure which proposes to change a schedule of our tariff as to more than one-half of the amount of a certain article which comes into the country in very large quantities and pays an enormous revenue. We know that the change will largely affect the revenue from a certain grade of that article, to wit, raw sugar.

Then, following Mr. Blaine, is not this amendment germane from the very necessities of the case? Might it not be of the utmost importance in determining the revenue to be derived from raw sugar to determine also the revenue to be derived from refined sugar? Might it not be of the utmost importance, from the very necessities of the case, for Congress to compensate in some measure for the change in the duty on raw sugar by making a change in the duty on refined sugar? That is the question. [Applause.]

Again I say the case now under consideration is much stronger in our favor than the one decided by Mr. Blaine. By this legislation we will be changing, disturbing, one of the great schedules of our tariff law—a peculiar schedule, differing in some respects from any other. By the change we make we entirely change the refiner's differential. We practically (I say practically, for we all know that no refined sugar comes from Cuba) increase that differential on more than half the sugar imported into the country from 12½ cents a hundred pounds to 49 cents a hundred pounds, or to one-half that amount on all the sugar imported.

Is it possible that it can be out of order to readjust in the same bill that schedule so as to compensate in part at least for that change? Surely there would seem to be but one answer. When in and by a bill you change or disturb to such an extent one of the schedules of the tariff law, surely you have a right to readjust that schedule in the same bill, and any motion which tends to readjust it and has that object is a motion relating to the subject under consideration. [Applause.]

Is it possible to say that it relates to a subject different from that under consideration? Surely not. [Applause.] And if this be true, then there can be no question as to its being germane.

How is this readjustment to be made? By the House. And if, in the judgment of the House, this amendment accomplishes it, or tends to accomplish it, then the House has a right to consider and adopt it. [Applause.]

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it is as plain as a pikestaff. It is so plain that he who runs may read, and the only way on the face of the earth, as it seems to me, that you can sustain this point of order is by entirely disregarding a plain proposition of common sense and by overruling a decision of one of the greatest Speakers that ever sat in that chair. [Loud applause and cries of "Rule!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The closing portion of section 7 of Rule XVI, which has been already read in the debate in the committee, reads:

> No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

The bill now before us is entitled "A bill to provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba." It authorizes the President to enter into negotiations with the government of Cuba when established for the purpose of securing reciprocal trade relations with Cuba, and when an agreement is made that, in his judgment, is reciprocal and equivalent, to proclaim the fact, "and thereafter until December 1, 1903, the imposition of the duties now imposed by law on all articles imported from Cuba, the products thereof, shall be suspended, and in lieu thereof 80 per cent of the duty imposed upon such articles coming from other countries shall be collected."

Clearly this is simply and solely a bill to provide for reciprocal relations with Cuba, and Cuba only. An amendment can then be in order only if it relates to trade between Cuba and the United States. In other words, it must be germane. A long line of decisions, covering a period of three-quarters of a century—because the present rule is worded precisely as it was adopted in 1822—made by distinguished Speakers of the House, from various sections of this country, have all emphasized the real intent and meaning of the rule above quoted.

These decisions have been based upon its literal construction. Except a decision of Speaker Cobb, in the Thirty-first Congress, later in the same Congress reversed by the House, seemingly by the Speaker's acquiescence, these decisions are all in one direction. Speaker Blaine made no decision upon this question. He did emphatically express his judgment upon a like proposition, and after expressing his judgment, he referred the matter to the committee for decision. So that he made no decision overruling the long line preceding.

Mr. BLACKBURN, presiding in Committee of the Whole, or Speaker pro tempore, I think, did not make the ruling that the gentleman from Tennessee says that he made. The gentleman is mistaken in the statement. He decided that the point of order was raised too late for consideration. Here is the exact wording of Speaker BLACKBURN'S ruling:

> The Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan that he is not prepared to say that he would not have sustained his point of order and ruled the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee out of order as not being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, if it had been made in time.

Speaker BLACKBURN held that the point of order was not raised in time. He expressly states that he does not hold that he would not have excluded it as not germane had it been raised in time.

If the Chair might be permitted to make a brief citation of very many decisions made by former Speakers—and the Chair will refer in the main to the decisions made by Speakers, and not by Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole—I think the committee will see that practically an unbroken line of precedents is in favor of the literal construction of the rule of germaneness.

In the Thirtieth Congress, the resolution providing for an investigation to obtain information upon which to frame a tariff bill, an amendment was offered striking out all after the resolving clause and inserting "that it is expedient to amend the present existing tariff by increasing the duties" on certain commodities. Speaker Stevenson, of Virginia, held the amendment to be inadmissible because on a subject different from that under consideration.

In the Twenty-seventh Congress to a bill under consideration authorizing the issue of Treasury notes, an amendment was offered providing that so much of the act of September 4, 1841, as provided for the distribution of the proceeds of the sale of public land among States and Territories be suspended, and the said fund be applied to the payment of outstanding Treasury notes, outstanding as well as those issued under the act, Mr. Hopkins, of Virginia, decidedly a clear and strong parliamentarian, held that the amendment was not germane.

In the Thirtieth Congress, during the pendency of a bill locating military land warrants in Virginia, it was proposed to amend by providing that these land warrants might be located on any public land subject to entry. Speaker Winthrop, of Massachusetts, held this amendment not to be germane.

And in the same Congress the same Speaker held an amendment to a resolution to ascertain and equalize the salaries of United States district judges so as to include marshals and district attorneys not in order, and upon an appeal the Chair was sustained.

In the Thirty-fifth Congress, while a bill was pending granting preemption to settlers upon public lands, an amendment was offered donating 160 acres free, upon certain conditions as to occupancy and cultivation. Speaker Orr, from South Carolina, held the amendment not to be germane.

In the Fiftieth Congress, to the bill for the admission of Dakota as a State, an amendment was offered to include New Mexico, Montana, and Washington. The question was discussed at considerable length. The gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BURROWS, now a Senator from that State, a gentleman justly famed as a parliamentarian, in arguing in support of the point of order that the amendment was not germane, fully reviewed the history of the rule and its application. Speaker Carlisle, an able parliamentarian, to whose great ability and fairness I gladly testify, held the amendment not to be germane and sustained the point of order.

On the 7th of this month, only the other day, while we were considering the Chinese-exclusion bill in the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] in the chair, an amendment prohibiting the employment of Chinese labor on American ships was held not to be germane to a bill regulating the admission of Chinese into this country.

These are but a few of the decisions which all are on one side, all covering a period of more than seventy-five years.

It has been said that the Speaker, on the day this bill was taken up for consideration, held that this was a revenue bill. The Speaker did not so hold. The Speaker did, in reply to a parliamentary inquiry, say that this was a bill affecting the revenue, and stated that it has been the custom of this House to consider bills affecting the revenue as privileged matters, and this holding of the Speaker is sustained by a direct holding upon that very proposition by Speaker Reed in the Fifty-first Congress, and by many other decisions made at prior dates.

The argument of the gentleman from Maine that we must maintain the "equilibrium," and that to maintain the "equilibrium" this amendment is in order, is not, as it seems to the Chair, tenable. As well might he say that when a bill to appropriate $50,000,000 for rivers and harbors is under consideration we must, in order to maintain the "equilibrium," attach to it a provision to raise revenue, to bring money into the Treasury, to provide for that which is going out; and that proposition has been distinctly held in this House in the Thirty-first Congress not to be in order.

The argument of the gentleman from Maine might and probably would and probably does affect the judgment of members of the committee, so far as the merits of the proposition are concerned, but with the merits of any proposition the Chair has not to do in applying the rules to a question of order which is raised for him to dispose of.

Applying the rule, applying the precedents, applying to it the construction it has received for more than seventy-five years, it seems to the Chair just as clear as the hands of the clock before him are distinct, that this amendment, which relates to the duties upon sugar from the entire world, is not germane to a bill providing for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba, and is not in order as an amendment to the bill, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? The Chair prefers that the vote on this question should be taken by tellers, and will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] to take their places as tellers.

The committee having divided and the tellers having reported,

The CHAIRMAN said: On this question the ayes are 130, the noes 171. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The decision of the Chair is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, during this debate we have heard a good deal about party consistency [cries of "Order!"] and about standing by the principle of protection.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. SULZER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. PAYNE. Let the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is in order, having been recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, here is a proposition to reduce the duty on refined sugar, the product of the beet-sugar factories of the United States. I know that the gentlemen on the other side of the House will to a man vote for this amendment. I am not talking to them. I am talking to this side of the House. I want gentlemen on this side to understand distinctly the question on which they are to vote.

I was scoffed the other day because I said I was the friend of the beet-sugar interest. I will prove it to-day by voting against this amendment, which reduces their protection. You all admit that the proposition before the committee, without amendment, will not reduce the price of sugar in the United States a single farthing. Here is a proposition that will reduce it 12½ cents a hundred pounds, because it is a reduction upon the sugar of the world. I ask the Republicans in this House, before they vote for that proposition, to consider its effect, and to consider also that the beet-sugar interest in the United States—the manufacturers of beet sugar—are opposed to the proposition.

A MEMBER. How about the farmers?

Mr. PAYNE. And the farmers are opposed to it. Every man that is engaged in raising beets or in the manufacture of beet sugar is opposed to the proposition. It is against his interest. Now I ask you gentlemen who propose to stand by the beet-sugar men—who claim to be their friends—I ask you now when you vote to remember the beet-sugar interest and to remember the friends of the beet-sugar interest.

Mr. WEEKS. Does not that appeal come a little late in the closing hour of this contest?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I have no reply to make to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend the amendment as follows: "Strike out all after the words 'United States' and insert the following: 'One cent and forty-six one-hundreths of 1 cent per pound; and upon all other sugars, on tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, molasses, concrete and concentrated molasses, 80 per cent of the duties now provided by law.'"

Mr. McCLELLAN. Only a word, Mr. Chairman. The purpose of this amendment is not only to do away with the differential, but to reduce generally the sugar schedule of the Dingley law 20 per cent. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk. It is an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the words "upon the making of said agreement and the issuance of said proclamation and while said agreement shall remain in force."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is plain enough, I think, from the reading of it. The original amendment provides that upon the making of the agreement with Cuba and the issuing of the proclamation the reduction in duty on refined sugar shall take place. The amendment to the amendment makes it general and removes the limit as to time. The amendment which I offer is to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, and it removes the limitation in that amendment. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is to take the differential duty off refined sugar and sugar above 16 Dutch standard in color from the time of the making of the agreement with Cuba and the issuing of the proclamation following the agreement, until December, 1903.

If the amendment which I offer be adopted, the differential duty upon refined sugar and the corresponding duty upon sugar above 16 Dutch standard in color will be taken off from the passage of the bill and during the continuance of the law; in other words, until there be a change in the law. If the amendment which I offer be adopted, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota as thus amended be adopted, the differential duty upon refined sugar and the duty upon sugar above 16 Dutch standard in color will be taken off from the passage of the bill, and without limitation as to time. I think it ought to be adopted; and this is all I desire to say about it.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear the amendment read again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PAYNE) there were—ayes 164, noes 111.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. On and after the passage of this act the raw or uncured hides of cattle, whether the same be dry, salted, or pickled, shall, when imported, be exempt from duty.

"Paragraph 437, Schedule N, of the act entitled 'An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States,' approved July 24, 1897, is hereby repealed."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against that amendment as not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard?

Mr. ROBERTS. In view of the wide range of discussion that has been had in this body to-day regarding the germaneness of amendments, I do not propose to occupy any time of the committee. I will take the decision of the Chair on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say that under the ruling of the committee overruling the Chair a few moments ago quite likely that would be in order; but the Chair's views have not been modified by the action of the committee, and the Chair holds the amendment not germane and out of order.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 183, noes 70.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. What has become of the great parliamentary question decided a few moments ago?

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CURTIS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. CROOK, one of his secretaries, who informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 17, 1902:

H. R. 291. An act granting a pension to Christina Heitz;

H. R. 3260. An act granting a pension to Jacob Golden;

H. R. 7525. An act granting a pension to Marion Barnes;

H. R. 9654. An act granting a pension to John S. James;

H. R. 9378. An act granting a pension to Clara B. Townsend;

H. R. 11025. An act granting a pension to Mary A. Carlile;

H. R. 12395. An act granting a pension to Ruth Bartlett;

H. R. 12275. An act granting a pension to Amelia A. Russell;

H. R. 1476. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry F. Benson;

H. R. 1485. An act granting an increase of pension to Thompson B. Moore;

H. R. 1685. An act granting an increase of pension to Augustus E. Hodges;

H. R. 1709. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin J. Godfrey;

H. R. 2613. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas H. H. Gibbs;

H. R. 3352. An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret M. Boyd;

H. R. 3354. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Young;

H. R. 3427. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Allen;

H. R. 3876. An act granting an increase of pension to Theophile A. Dauphin;

H. R. 3884. An act granting an increase of pension to Erastus C. Moderwell;

H. R. 4053. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry E. De Maise;

H. R. 4116. An act granting an increase of pension to William Berry;

H. R. 4172. An act granting an increase of pension to George R. Chaney;

H. R. 4176. An act granting an increase of pension to Nathan W. Snee;

H. R. 6023. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert L. Ackridge;

H. R. 7290. An act granting an increase of pension to Lizzie B. Green;

H. R. 7613. An act granting an increase of pension to Evaline Wilson;

H. R. 7847. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles S. Wilson;

H. R. 10710. An act granting an increase of pension to Frances E. Scott;

H. R. 10957. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Stockings;

H. R. 11916. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew B. Spurling; and

H. R. 12490. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Culbreath.

RECIPROCITY WITH CUBA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided, That the raw or uncured hides of cattle, whether the same be dry, salted, or pickled, shall, when imported from the island of Cuba, be exempt from duty."

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order against that that it is not germane, and also that it is dilatory.

Mr. ROBERTS. This relates only to hides from Cuba.

Mr. PAYNE. I did not understand that. With the understanding that it applies only to Cuba, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment, as reported by the Clerk, applies solely to the island of Cuba.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. ROBERTS) there were—ayes 120, nays 136.

Mr. ROBERTS. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused, not a sufficient number voting in favor of the demand therefor.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCCLELLAN and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN], who has an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

On page 2, line 1, strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "forty;" on page 2, lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "until the 1st day of December, 1903," and on page 2, line 20, strike out the word "eighty" and insert the word "sixty."

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Only a word, Mr. Chairman. The purpose of this amendment is to increase the reduction to and from Cuba from 20 per cent to 40 per cent and to take off the time limit. This is the proposition suggested by General Wood, and is semi-officially stated to be what the Secretary of War desires, and is called in the newspapers the Long proposition. It is a sufficient reduction to give a living profit on sugar to the Cubans and to fulfill the national obligation.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. MCCLELLAN, on a division (demanded by Mr. MCCLELLAN) there were—ayes 102, noes 162.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment as section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the rates of duty now imposed on all articles embraced in "Schedule C—Metals and manufactures of metals," of the act known as the Dingley Act, approved July 24, 1897, be revised and reduced exactly in accordance with H. R. 9056 of the present session of Congress, which is in words and figures following, to wit:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph No. 130 of Schedule C—Metals and manufactures of, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That section 2 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding after paragraph No. 705 of the free list the following new paragraphs:

"706. All iron in slabs, blooms, loops, or other forms less finished than in bars, and more advanced than pig iron.

"707. Beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, TT, columns and posts or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams, and building forms, together with all structural shapes of iron or steel, whether plain or punched or fitted for use.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. With the permission of the committee I can make a statement of this. This is the bill introduced by Mr. BABCOCK——

Mr. GROSVENOR and others. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. Regular order is demanded.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. All right, let the Clerk read.

The Clerk continued the reading of the amendment, as follows:

"708. Boiler or other plate iron or steel, except crucible plate steel and saw plates, otherwise provided for, not thinner than No. 10 wire gauge, sheared or unsheared, and skelp iron or steel sheared or rolled in grooves, valued at one and one-half cents per pound or less.

"709. Railway bars, made of iron or steel, and railway bars made in part of steel, T rails, and punched iron or steel flat rails, railway fish plates or splice bars, made of iron or steel.

"710. Steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, slabs, billets, bars, and tapered or beveled bars, except crucible steel, otherwise provided for."

SEC. 3. That the following numbered paragraphs of Schedule C—Metals and manufactures of, be, and they are hereby, amended so that they shall read as follows:

"122. Iron in pigs, iron kentledge, spiegeleisen, ferro-manganese, ferro-silicon, wrought and cast scrap iron, and scrap steel, $2 per ton; but nothing shall be deemed scrap iron or scrap steel except waste or refuse iron or steel fit only to be remanufactured.

"123. Bar iron, square iron, rolled or hammered, comprising flats not less than one inch wide nor less than three-eighths of one inch thick, round iron not less than seven-sixteenths of one inch in diameter, three-tenths of one cent per pound.

"124. Round iron, in coils or rods, less than seven-sixteenths of one inch in diameter, not specially provided for in this act, four-tenths of one cent per pound.

"125. All iron bars, blooms, billets, or sizes or shapes of any kind, in the manufacture of which charcoal is used as fuel, shall be subject to a duty of $12 per ton.

"126. Boiler or other plate iron or steel, except crucible plate steel and saw plates hereinafter provided for, not thinner than No. 10 wire gauge, sheared or unsheared, and skelp iron or steel sheared or rolled in grooves, valued at over 1½ cents per pound, 15 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That all sheets or plates of iron or steel thinner than No. 10 wire gauge shall pay duty as iron or steel sheets."

"128. Hoop, band, or scroll iron or steel, not otherwise provided for in this act, valued at 3 cents per pound or less, 8 inches or less in width, and less than three-eighths of 1 inch thick and not thinner than No. 10 wire gauge, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound; thinner than No. 10 wire gauge and not thinner than No. 20 wire gauge, three-tenths of 1 cent per pound; thinner than No. 20 wire gauge, four-tenths of 1 cent per pound: Provided, That barrel hoops of iron or steel, and hoop or band iron or hoop or band steel flared, splayed, or punched, with or without buckles or fastenings, shall pay one-tenth of 1 cent per pound more duty than that imposed on the hoop or band iron or steel from which they are made; steel bands or strips, untempered, suitable for making band saws, 3 cents per pound and 20 per cent ad valorem; if tempered, or tempered and polished, 6 cents per pound and 20 per cent ad valorem.

"129. Hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to lengths, or wholly or partly manufactured into hoops or ties, coated or not coated with paint or any other preparation, with or without buckles or fastenings for baling cotton or any other commodity, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound."

"131. Sheets of iron or steel, common or black, of whatever dimensions, and skelp iron or steel, valued at 3 cents per pound or less, thinner than No. 10 and not thinner than No. 20 wire gauge, four-tenths of 1 cent per pound; thinner than No. 20 wire gauge and not thinner than No. 25 wire gauge, five-tenths of 1 cent per pound; thinner than No. 25 wire gauge and not thinner than No. 32 wire gauge, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound; thinner than No. 32 wire gauge, seven-tenths of 1 cent per pound; corrugated or crimped, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

"132. All iron or steel sheets or plates, and all hoop, band, or scroll iron or steel, excepting what are known commercially as tin plates, terneplates, and taggers tin, and hereinafter provided for, when galvanized or coated with zinc, spelter, or other metals, or any alloy of those metals, shall pay one-tenth of 1 cent per pound more duty than if the same was not so galvanized or coated.

"133. Sheets of iron or steel, polished, planished, or glanced, by whatever name designated, 1 cent per pound: Provided, That plates or sheets of iron or steel, by whatever name designated, other than the polished, planished, or glanced herein provided for, which have been pickled or cleaned by acid or by any other material or process, or which are cold rolled, smoothed only, not polished, shall pay one-tenth of 1 cent per pound more duty than the corresponding gauges of common or black sheet iron or steel.

"134. Sheets or plates of iron or steel, or taggers iron or steel, coated with tin or lead, or with a mixture of which these metals, or either of them, is a component part, by the dipping or any other process, and commercially known as tin plates, terneplates, and taggers tin, 1 cent per pound.

"135. Crucible steel, not otherwise provided for in this act; die blocks or blanks; mill shafting; pressed, sheared, or stamped shapes; saw plates, wholly or partially manufactured; hammer molds or swaged steel; gun-barrel molds not in bars; alloys used as substitutes for steel in the manufacture of tools; all descriptions and shapes of dry sand, loam, or iron molded steel castings; sheets and plates and steel in all forms and shapes not specially provided for in this act: All of the above valued at 1.4 cents per pound or less, two-tenths of 1 cent per pound; valued above 1.4 cents and not above 1.8 cents per pound, three-tenths of 1 cent per pound; valued above 1.8 cents and not above 2.2 cents per pound, five-tenths of 1 cent per pound; valued above 2.2 cents and not above 3 cents per pound, nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound; valued above 3 cents per pound and not above 4 cents per pound, 1.2 cents per pound; valued above 4 cents and not above 7 cents per pound, 1.3 cents per pound; valued above 7 cents and not above 10 cents per pound, 2 cents per pound; valued above 10 cents and not above 13 cents per pound, 2.4 cents per pound."

Mr. GRAHAM. I raise the point of order that sufficient of that has been read to determine that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. Enough has been read to convince the Chair that, in line with his first ruling of to-day, the amendment is not in order, as not being germane to the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I shall not appeal from the decision of the Chair. This is simply the measure introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], which two counties in the gentleman's district yesterday declared in favor of, and it seems to me it is a good Republican and Democratic measure.

Mr. DALZELL. Nevertheless, it is not in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope the Chair will not hold it out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains that point of order, that it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill as section 2 the following:

"Be it further enacted, That the duty on bagging and ties and pulp out of which paper is made shall be reduced 20 per cent from the duty imposed by the Dingley tariff."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 4, page 3, the following:

"That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to enter into negotiations with Canada for reciprocal trade relations with a view to the establishment of a commercial agreement in which reciprocal and equivalent concessions may be secured in favor of the following products and manufactures of the United States, to wit:

"Furniture, stoves, drugs, boots and shoes, steel, brass, copper, and iron manufactured products, in consideration of the admission into the United States of wood pulp, hides, and sugar beets free of duty, and lumber, barley, and iron ore at 80 per cent of the rate of duty now levied upon such articles imported from foreign countries.

"Whenever, in the judgment of the President, such reciprocal and equivalent relations have been established by agreement he shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to suspend by proclamation to that effect the imposition and collection of the duties now required upon the articles above mentioned, and thereafter the duties levied, collected, and paid upon such articles shall be in accordance with the terms of said agreement."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. At the time of making the order reducing the duties on Cuban products as authorized by section 1, the President shall extend to the people of Cuba, through their duly organized government, an invitation to apply for the annexation of the island."

Mr. PAYNE. Enough has been read to show that the amendment is not germane, and I make that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would like to argue the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very clear, without any argument, that it is not germane. It is clearly in line with the former ruling of the Chair.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the Chair decline to hear me on that decision?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not decline to hear the gentleman, but says he is ready to rule.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But I wish to argue the point. I think I can give the distinction between the decision of the Chair and the question now under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, in the first place I ask the Clerk, in my time, to read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. At the time of making the order reducing the duties on Cuban products as authorized by section 1, the President shall extend to the people of Cuba, through their duly organized government, an invitation to apply for the annexation of the island to the United States as a constitutional part thereof, the said island at first to have the status of an organized Territory, and thereafter full statehood at such time as shall seem proper to the Congress of the United States, and after such annexation is completed the imposition of duties upon the products of Cuba entering the United States and upon the products of the United States entering Cuba shall cease and determine."

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will confine myself to the point of order raised by the gentleman. This is an amendment which proposes to establish free trade between Cuba and the United States through a political union, involving the annexation of the island to the United States with her free will and consent. Now, is that amendment germane to this bill? I ask for order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is this amendment germane to the bill under consideration? This bill provides for reciprocal trade relations between Cuba and the United States. It proposes to make a reduction of 20 per cent of the duties upon the products of Cuba coming into this country in consideration of an equal concession made by Cuba, and upon the condition that Cuba shall enact laws similar to our immigration and contract labor laws. What does my amendment propose? It also affects the duties between Cuba and the United States; but instead of reducing those duties only 20 per cent, it proposes to abolish them altogether and to establish free trade between Cuba and the United States by inviting Cuba to become a constitutional part of the United States.

The only distinction between the amendment and this bill is that whilst this bill seeks commercial union only, and that a limited one, my amendment seeks complete commercial and political union and seeks to accomplish commercial union through political union. It is in the same line as the bill proposed, but it goes a step farther.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires not to call any gentleman by name. But if such unseemly conduct as the Chair has recently seen is repeated, the Chair will call the gentleman by name The Chair thinks the gentleman is entitled at least to a partial respectful hearing while debating a question before the committee. [Loud applause.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, what is the condition in this bill? Why, the condition on which there is to be a reduction of 20 per cent is that Cuba shall enact our immigration and contract labor laws. The condition in my amendment is that Cuba shall by an act of legislation apply for annexation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in considering a bill proposing a reduction of duties upon the condition that Cuba shall accept a part of our laws, is it not in order to propose the abolition of duties on the condition that Cuba shall come into the Union and be subject to all our laws and our Constitution? So that the purpose of the bill and that of the amendment is similar. One provides for partial commercial union; the other for complete commercial union. One provides for the acceptance of part of our laws; the other provides for the acceptance of all. Now, the amendment may go a little further than the bill, attaching a further condition, spreading the entire body of our laws and of our Constitution over the island of Cuba through an act of legislation to be passed by the island of Cuba. [Cries of "Vote!"] I am aware that it is late and that members are impatient, but I shall insist on completing my argument. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The action of the committee will be expedited by gentlemen maintaining order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, the avowed purpose of the bill is for reciprocal trade relations which is to reduce duty. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to secure absolute free trade and is not an extension or enlargement of the other. The purpose of this bill is to reduce the restraints of trade; the purpose of the amendment is to remove them altogether.

Now, then, in another point of view this amendment is germane. This proposed bill is a substantial step in the direction of reducing Cuba to the position of a colonial possession. Already, through the Platt amendment, her autonomy and sovereignty have been seriously restricted.

We have assumed the control of her laws relating to the contraction of debt. We have taken upon ourselves the protection of life, liberty, and property there; we have also taken possession of the military and naval station, and the control of the sanitation of that island. This bill goes one step farther and seeks to impose upon her a part of the legislative system, our laws relating to immigration and contract labor.

Now, I ask if a bill were brought into this House for the purpose of organizing a government in the island of Cuba as a colonial possession, would it not be germane to that bill to offer an invitation to Cuba to become a part of the United States; in other words, to organize a Territorial government? Why, this side of the House took that position with reference to the island of Porto Rico. When it was proposed to bring in a bill for the purpose of creating a colonial government in the island of Porto Rico, what did members on this side do? They proposed to substitute a bill organizing Porto Rico into a Territory.

So with reference to the Philippine Islands bill. If the bill now being framed in the Senate comes to this House organizing a civil government in the Philippine Islands, will it not be germane to the bill to move as an amendment or a substitute that the Philippine Islands be organized into a Territorial form of government? It is true that all of us would be opposed to that so far as the Philippines are concerned, for we prefer to give them their independence and do not wish them as a part of this country. But so far as Cuba is concerned, we are willing to accept her as a part of the Union. When this bill comes to us practically providing for an extension of imperialism over the island of Cuba, for an extension of the new colonial system of government, it seems to me that it is entirely relevant and that the amendment is germane. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I assure the gentlemen that they can not take me off the floor by crying "Vote." I am determined to be heard. If the gentlemen will only listen to me, I will conclude in a few seconds.

Now, then, the island of Cuba must occupy one of four positions with reference to this country. It must either be independent or it must be a ward of this Government, or it must be a colonial possession, or it must be an organized Territory. Now its independence is gone, already taken away by the Platt amendment, and will still further be taken away by this act. It is not yet a colonial possession, but it soon will be unless this side of the House takes strong ground now. Our friends on the other side claim that Cuba is the ward of this country. Very well, take that view; then the island of Cuba passes under the legislation contemplated by this bill as the ward of the Republic. It is our right to insist upon it, and it is our right to insist by amendment that that wardship shall be merged into a closer relation of complete and equal political union with us, if Cuba is willing, and that an invitation be extended for the purpose of ascertaining her will.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Nevada to the fact that he is not discussing the point of order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is true, Mr. Chairman, I was not addressing the Chair, but I insist upon it that my argument was addressed to the point of order. I insist that this is a bill for the extension of imperialism; that it is a step in the line of establishing a colonial system in Cuba, and that it is perfectly germane to move as an amendment that she be invited to become a constitutional part of the Republic. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, and evidently the committee desires a ruling. [Applause.] The bill under consideration provides for reciprocal relations with Cuba. The amendment relates to the annexation of Cuba. The amendment is not in order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House bill 12765, to provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba, and directed him to report the same back to the House with several amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. PAYNE. I demand a separate vote, Mr. Speaker, on the amendment relating to the differential on sugar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the amendments of the committee in gross, if there is no objection.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire which amendment the Chair refers to?

The SPEAKER. There are certain amendments reported by the Ways and Means Committee, and then there is an amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole. The question is on agreeing to the amendments recommended by the Ways and Means Committee.

The question was taken; and the committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the following amendment; which the Clerk will report to the House.

"And upon the making of said agreement and the issuance of said proclamation, and while said agreement shall remain in force, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the duties thereon now provided by law on all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, and on all sugar which has gone through a process of refining, imported into the United States, one cent and eight hundred and twenty-five one-thousandths of one cent per pound."

Mr. PAYNE. On that amendment, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 199, nays 105, answering "present" 7, not voting 44; as follows:

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. SMALL.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CHINESE-EXCLUSION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent, which passed the House a few days ago, and which went to the Senate and has been returned and is on the Speaker's table with amendments. I ask that the House nonconcur in the amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13031, the Chinese-exclusion bill, which recently passed the House and has come back with Senate amendments, requesting that the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House, Messrs. HITT, PERKINS, and CLARK.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12452. An act granting to the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad Company the right to use for railroad purposes the tract of land at Choctaw Point, Mobile County, Ala., and now held for light-house purposes; and

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 5333) for the relief of George E. Rogers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5334) requiring places of business in the District of Columbia to be closed on Sunday; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5335) granting a pension to Ransom M. Fillmore; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5336) granting a pension to Ann M. Green; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GAMBLE (for Mr. BURNHAM) introduced a bill (S. 5337) granting an increase of pension to Marietta L. Adams; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 5338) granting an increase of pension to John Cook; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KEARNS introduced a bill (S. 5339) granting an increase of pension to Philemon Haskins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLARK of Montana introduced a bill (S. 5340) for the relief of William Flannery; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 5341) to set aside and reserve to the United States fishery certain Government lands on the bay of Pascagoula, Jackson County, Miss.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 5342) to quitclaim all interest of the United States in and to square 1131, in the city of Washington, D. C., to Sidney Bieber; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5343) granting a pension to George Rigler;

A bill (S. 5344) granting an increase of pension to William Hare;

A bill (S. 5345) granting a pension to William F. Ruby;

A bill (S. 5346) granting an increase of pension to Hiram T. Grayson; and

A bill (S. 5347) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Merz.

Mr. McCOMAS introduced a bill (S. 5348) relating to the Twelth and subsequent censuses, and giving to the Director thereof additional power and authority in certain cases, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Census.

Mr. DOLLIVER introduced a bill (S. 5349) granting a pension to Christopher C. Limming; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5350) for the relief of Edward T. Latta; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 5351) granting a pension to Addie M. Tarr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SIMMONS introduced a bill (S. 5352) granting an increase of pension to William Flinn; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment continuing until June 30, 1903, the Office of Commissioner of Railroads, and providing an appropriation of $9,220 to pay the salaries of the Commissioner and clerical force of that office, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS OF MAIMED EX-SOLDIERS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that Senate Report No. 1155, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, being the report of the Committee on Pensions on Senate bill No. 4850, to increase the pension of soldiers and sailors who have lost limbs in the service, together with the statements made before that committee in support of the bill, be reprinted.

The motion was agreed to.

CUBAN SUGAR INVESTIGATION.

Mr. TELLER. I offer a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it has been currently reported that nearly the entire crop of Cuban sugar has been purchased and is now held by what is generally known as the "sugar trust," which is the principal consumer of raw sugar in the United States, and that any concessions given to the raisers of cane sugar in the island of Cuba or any measures intended for their relief by admitting their sugar at reduced rates of duty into the United States will only benefit the said sugar trust, and that the Cubans will receive no real benefit from such concessions; and

Whereas it is alleged that a large number of citizens of the United States have acquired large holdings of cane-producing lands in Cuba and are now especially urging the reduction of duty on sugar under the claim that such production will benefit the people of Cuba: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Relations with Cuba be, and is hereby, directed to make an investigation as to the truth of such charges and to report to the Senate, and to report in addition thereto what is the normal cost of making sugar in the island of Cuba, and also, if any concessions shall be made in the way of a reduction of the duty on sugar coming from Cuba into the United States, what concessions should be made by the government of Cuba, about to be established, on articles produced in the United States and exported into said island of Cuba, in order to make a reciprocal and equitable arrangement as to exports to Cuba and imports therefrom to the United States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Relations with Cuba.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object to the reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Relations with Cuba.

CONSULS ACTING IN FIDUCIARY CAPACITY.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the Senate passed yesterday Senate bill 4762 may be reconsidered so as to enable me to make a verbal correction, in order to make the bill uniform.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill (S. 4762) to prevent any consular officer of the United States from accepting any appointment from any foreign state as administrator, guardian, or to any other office or trust, without first executing a bond, with security, to be approved by the Secretary of State, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time, and also by which it was finally passed, be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I move to amend the bill, in line 21, on the second page, by striking out "or" and inserting "of;" so as to read "office of trust" instead of "office or trust."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to prevent any consular officer of the United States from accepting any appointment from any foreign state as administrator, guardian, or to any other office of trust, without first executing a bond, with security, to be approved by the Secretary of State."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to have the Senate consider a joint resolution which will give rise to no debate.

Mr. HALE. Let us go to the Calendar, on page 5, which as I explained the other day is a portion of the list that has never been considered by the Senate, being "bills passed over without prejudice."

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask the Senator from Maine to allow me to have a joint resolution passed in connection with the collection of the taxes in the District, which it is very important to have passed at this time.

Mr. HALE. Let the Secretary report the first case on the Calendar, commencing on page 5, and then I will give way to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the first case.

ISTHMIAN CANAL.

The bill (S. 451) to provide for acquiring the rights necessary for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 492) for the purchase of a national forest reserve in the Southern Apalachian Mountains was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 80) postponing the payment of taxes on real estate in the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1903, from November, 1902, to May, 1903, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator if that is the correct title of the joint resolution. It strikes me that there is an error in it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the title really ought to read "to enable the assessors to readjust the taxes and extend the time."

Mr. MALLORY. The title indicates the taxes for 1903. Should it not read "for 1902?"

Mr. McMILLAN. That is right. The Commissioners have written a letter explanatory of the matter.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not raise any objection to the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan move to amend the title?

Mr. McMILLAN. I think I will not do so at this time. It can be amended before final action is had.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 492) for the purchase of a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachain Mountains is before the Senate and will be read if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why not send it to Rule IX?

Mr. HALE. It may as well go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes to Rule IX.

The next four bills on the Calendar were the following:

A bill (S. 308) to reimburse the State of Wyoming for money expended by the Territory of Wyoming in protecting and preserving the Yellowstone National Park during the years 1884, 1885, and 1886;

A bill (S. 1516) for the relief of Richmond College, located at Richmond, Va.;

A bill (S. 2213) for the relief of George W. Graham; and

A bill (S. 1680) for the relief of William A. Cowles, administrator of the estate of George Cowles, deceased.

Mr. WARREN. I think the next four cases had better go over, as they are all included in the omnibus claims bill. While all these bills should be passed, I prefer that at the present they shall be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will go over without prejudice.

The joint resolution (S. R. 8) construing the act approved June 27, 1890, entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator who reported that bill is not in his seat. I ask that it be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

The bill (S. 918) for the relief of Alphonso M. Potvin was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go to Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes under Rule IX.

The next four bills on the Calendar were the following:

A bill (S. 208) for the relief of Jeronemus S. Underhill;

A bill (S. 925) for the relief of the legal representatives of Chauncey M. Lockwood;

A bill (S. 1024) for the relief of Larabee and Allen; and

A bill (S. 172) for the relief of the estate of Charles M. Roberts, deceased.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the next four bills be passed over without prejudice for the reason stated as to the previous four. They are included in the omnibus-claims bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be passed over without prejudice.

ESTATE OF ELI AYERS.

The bill (S. 877) to quiet the titles of certain lands in the State of Mississippi, and for the relief of the estate of Eli Ayers, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] to this bill, if I may be indulged for a moment. There is no disposition to delay the consideration of the bill when we can get an opportunity for a discussion of it. It is a bill on which there is to be discussion, of course, and if we took it up this morning it would probably occupy all the rest of the time to be given to the Calendar to-day. I should like to have it go over this morning.

Mr. MONEY. I can not hear distinctly what the Senator is saying. I would be very glad to hear him.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We are under the five-minute rule this morning. There are quite a number of bills on the Calendar that we call unobjected cases which the Senators interested in are anxious to dispose of. I was saying that there is no disposition to delay the consideration of this case whenever we can get it up and have a discussion upon it. The Senator knows that it will involve some discussion, and probably it would use up the morning hour if we should take it up this morning, and it really can not be discussed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MONEY. I acknowledge the truth of what the Senator says. I am willing that it shall be passed over to accommodate those who have bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We will take the bill up at a time when we can discuss it.

Mr. TELLER. Let the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MONEY. Yes; pass it over without prejudice. I consent to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12765) to provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HITT, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. CLARK managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 11636) providing for the transfer of the title to the military reservation at Baton Rouge, La., to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College; and

A bill (H. R. 12452) granting to the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad Company the right to use for railroad purposes the tract of land at Choctaw Point, Mobile County, Ala., and now held for light-house purposes.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The bill which is called the Chinese-exclusion bill has come over from the House. I should like to have it laid before the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels bound, under parliamentary law, to appoint conferees who shall represent the majority opinion of the Senate, and he appoints the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12765) to provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, referred to the Committee on Relations with Cuba.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3536) for the relief of certain Mission Indians of California, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. STEWART. As that matter is in the Indian appropriation bill, which is in conference, I think the bill may lie over.

Mr. PERKINS. Do I understand the Senator from Nevada to say that it is in the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. STEWART. It is in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. PERKINS. If that is the case, the object we have in view will be subserved by the passage of that bill.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; the bill may lie over until the appropriation bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, if there be no objection.

The bill (S. 1618) to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Retaining its place?

Mr. LODGE. No; it may go over under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go under Rule IX.

The bill (S. 1685) providing for the adjudication by the Court of Claims and Supreme Court of pension claims involving difficult or important questions of law as a means of establishing judicial precedents for the guidance of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go under Rule IX.

The bill (S. 2992) to ratify an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut.. That is a bill which will create a good deal of discussion. I am quite anxious to accommodate the friends of the bill by having it taken up at some time when there can be more than a discussion under the five-minute rule. I think we shall be able to arrange such a time very soon, and it is agreed, I believe, that it may be passed over this morning.

Mr. McCUMBER. Retaining its place on the Calendar?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 1792) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to navigation of vessels, bills of lading, and certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with the carriage of property," was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. Let that bill go over.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask that the bill may go over, retaining its place on the Calendar, for the present. I am in hopes that we can arrange some time to take it up and have it discussed.

Mr. HALE. The bill stands exactly like the previous one, of which the Senator from Connecticut has just spoken. There is no disposition to unduly delay it. We shall be able to agree at some near date to take it up and consider it, not under the five-minute rule. This action is taken with no purpose of undue delay.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to make a statement. I hope that we can have the bill taken up and proceed with its consideration. It is a matter that all the producers and shippers, food manufacturers, wheat raisers, and lumbermen of the Northwest are vitally interested in, and all I ask is an opportunity to have the bill taken up for the purpose of consideration and to have a vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. NELSON. Retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say that the interests of shipping lines, large freightage companies, are involved in this matter upon the other side of the question, and the bill will lead to considerable discussion. But there will be no difficulty in arranging some time for its consideration.

Mr. NELSON. I hope we can agree on some time to take it up.

The bill (H. R. 3110) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That will go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1919) fixing fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts in the State of Wyoming was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was read as in Committee of the Whole March 31.

Mr. QUARLES. The bill was called up a few days since, and my colleague [Mr. SPOONER] made known the fact that he had an interest in the bill and desired to be heard upon it. He is necessarily absent from the city to-day, and I ask that the bill may go over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. May I make an inquiry? Did I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to say that his colleague desires to be heard on the bill?

Mr. QUARLES. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

The bill (S. 1347) for the proper labeling of wine purporting to be champagne was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the bill may go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill (H. R. 9960) to prevent a false branding or marking of food and dairy products as to the State or Territory in which they are made or produced was announced as next in order.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill and read to the end of section 1.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Enough of the bill has been read, I think, to indicate that it raises a very serious question, which is whether the United States has jurisdiction under the clause to regulate foreign commerce to go into a State and direct the branding and marking of articles which may become subjects of foreign commerce before they are really put into such transportation as makes them articles of foreign commerce. I do not think we can dispose of that question this morning. Therefore I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection, if the Senator wishes to debate it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over without prejudice.

Mr. HALE. Under that phrase it is not to be transferred to another list, but goes over, retaining its place?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

The bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of the civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Why should it stay on the Calendar? It is the unfinished business. It will go under Rule IX, at any rate.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

ABANDONMENT OF PUBLIC ALLEY.

The bill (S. 4221) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to extinguish a portion of an alley in square 189 was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 2, line 9, to strike out "present owner of the aforesaid lot 54, Lewis Tillman, trustee," and insert "original dedicator;" so as to read:

And any and all right, title, interest, and demand that the United States of America or the District of Columbia may have in and to the above-described portion of said alley shall revert to the original dedicator, his heirs and assigns, provided he pays to the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia an amount equal to the sum that would have been assessed against the land embraced within the above-described area of the said alley from the time it was laid out to the time this act takes effect as law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT TO BENJAMIN F. STEPHENSON.

A joint resolution (H. Res. 61) granting permission for the erection of a monument or statue in Washington City, D. C., in honor of the late Benjamin F. Stephenson, founder of the Grand Army of the Republic, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on the Library with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "Columbia," to insert "other than the grounds of the Capitol or Library of Congress;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

That permission be, and is hereby, granted the Grand Army of the Republic of the United States of America to erect a statue to the memory and honor of the late Benjamin F. Stephenson, founder of the Grand Army of the Republic of the United States of America, on one of the public reservations of the city of Washington, D. C., other than the grounds of the Capitol or Library of Congress, to be designated by the Secretary of War, the Joint Committee on the Library, the superintendent of public buildings and grounds, and the committee of the Grand Army of the Republic appointed by it for that purpose: Provided, That the statue, with pedestal, shall cost not less than $15,000, and that it shall be presented to the people of the United States by the said Grand Army of the Republic.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 5, on page 1, I move to insert the word "in" before the word "honor;" so as to read "statue to the memory and in honor of the late Benjamin F. Stephenson."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN FLORIDA.

The bill (S. 2826) for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Florida was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment, in line 5, before the word "Florida," to strike out the words "at Sanford;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the establishment of a fish-culture station for the propagation of shad and other fishes on the St. Johns River, Florida, the purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, $15,000 is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BIOLOGICAL STATION ON GREAT LAKES.

The bill (S. 1908) to authorize the establishment of a biological station on the Great Lakes under the control of the United States

Commission of Fish and Fisheries was announced as next in order.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator who reported the bill would explain to the Senate what is the purpose of the measure, what kind of a station it is, and how it differs from other fish-cultural stations.

Mr. BARD. I ask that the report be read. That will explain it.

Mr. HALE. That is better. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. BARD, April 1, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1908) appropriating the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of an investigation by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries as to the most suitable site for a biological station on the Great Lakes at some appropriate point in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, or Minnesota, to be selected by him, recommend that the bill pass, and submit herewith a communication from the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries recommending that the bill pass and giving his reasons for such recommendation.

U. S. COMMISSION OF FISH AND FISHERIES,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1902.

DEAR SIR: The Commission is in receipt of your letter of the 7th instant, transmitting a copy of Senate bill 1908 and inviting suggestions as to the advisability of the proposed legislation.

In 1900, in communications to Senator PERKINS, then chairman of the Committee on Fisheries, and to Senator MCMILLAN, I advocated the establishment by Congress of a biological station on the Great Lakes. The very important commercial fisheries carried on in those waters warrant the establishment of a laboratory at which the various biologico-economic problems connected with the prosecution and development of the fisheries may be studied. Such a station would be a valuable adjunct to the fish-cultural work carried on by the Government and the various States.

I therefore heartily recommend the passage of this bill, which carries an appropriation for the preliminary investigation and work connected with the laboratory. For the construction and equipment of the station it is thought that $25,000 additional will be required, although if the land for the site of the station be donated a large part of the original appropriation would doubtless be saved, and could be subtracted from the $25,000 estimated as being required to fully equip the station.

Very respectfully,
GEO. M. BOWERS,
Commissioner.

Hon. THOMAS R. BARD,
Chairman Committee on Fisheries, Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HALE. There is not much explanation given in the report. Let the bill go over, retaining its place. That course is agreeable to the Senator in charge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over, retaining its place.

FOOD ADULTERATION, ETC.

The bill (S. 3342) for preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitations of foods, beverages, candies, drugs, and condiments in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and for regulating interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator who reported the bill would explain whether in any way it affects any transaction outside of the Territories and the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine makes an inquiry of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. MCCUMBER. What is the question?

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator to state to the Senate, if he can, briefly, not to take up the time in reading the report, whether the bill in any way goes beyond trade, traffic, and transportation within the Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Mr. MCCUMBER. The bill does not go beyond interstate commerce. It deals with interstate commerce only. It lets go of an article of food the moment it ceases to become interstate commerce.

Mr. HALE. That is not quite an answer to my question. The question is whether in dealing with these subjects it deals with anything outside of the Territories and the District of Columbia. Does it go into all the States?

Mr. MCCUMBER. Oh, certainly.

Mr. HALE. It goes into all the States?

Mr. MCCUMBER. It goes into all the States so far as interstate commerce is concerned.

Mr. HALE. I am afraid, then, the title is misleading—"A bill for preventing"——

Mr. MCCUMBER. I did not suppose the bill would be taken up and I was not listening to the Calendar. It is one that can not be discussed under the five-minute rule, and I ask that it may go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. Let that be done, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order is made.

NEUSE RIVER BRIDGE, NORTH CAROLINA.

The bill (H. R. 12093) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Neuse River at or near Kinston, N. C., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 3, after line 10, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of the bridge constructed under this act shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same and over the approaches thereto upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the parties interested shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid and upon the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall, upon the application of either party, be determined by the district court of the United States in and for any district in which any portion of said bridge may be; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

UNION RAILROAD STATION.

The bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] what action he desires taken in regard to that bill?

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senate had that bill under consideration yesterday, and it went over with the understanding that I shall call it up again on Tuesday or Wednesday next.

Mr. HALE. Then it will not need to be read again?

Mr. MCMILLAN. No.

Mr. HALE. Let it go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over, retaining its place.

CORPORATIONS ENGAGED IN TRANSPORTATION.

The bill (S. 1812) to authorize the registration of the names of persons, firms, or corporations engaged in transportation business was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. From the title of that bill it may be far-reaching in its nature. If there is any Senator here who is acquainted with its object, I wish he would explain it to the Senate.

Mr. KEAN. If the Senator will permit the bill and report to be read, they will show exactly what it proposes. It is a bill authorizing the registration of the names of firms engaged in the transportation business.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill be read. It may speak for itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HOAR. I think the first section of that bill should be modified by an amendment, which I will send to the desk, to complete the description of interstate commerce. The section as it stands merely refers to transportation between the States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 1, line 7, after the words "United States," where they first occur, it is proposed to insert "or between the District of Columbia and any State or Territory, or between any Territory and any State or any other Territory;" so as to make the section read:

That any person, firm, or corporation incorporated under the laws of the United States, or of any of the States or Territories thereof, engaged in transportation for hire of passengers, goods, merchandise, and other property between any of the States of the United States, or between the District of Columbia and any State or Territory, or between any Territory and any State or any other Territory, or between the United States and any of its possessions, or in foreign commerce, or in any or all thereof, may register the trade, firm, or corporation name under which such business is conducted, in the Patent Office, by complying with the provisions of this act and with such rules and regulations not inconsistent with this act as the Commissioner may make.

Mr. KEAN. The amendment is entirely acceptable, Mr. President.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. When does that bill take effect, Mr. President?

Mr. KEAN. On and after the 1st day of July, 1902.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FINDLAY, OHIO.

The bill (S. 2204) to provide for the erection of a public building at Findlay, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other governmental offices in the city of Findlay and State of Ohio, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, not to exceed the sum of $100,000.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Findlay, in the State of Ohio."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The bill (S. 177) for the erection of a public building at Providence, R. I., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, on page 2, line 2, after the word "law," to strike out "and shall not exceed for the said building complete" and insert:

The cost of said building complete, including vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches shall not exceed.

And in line 18, after the word "alleys," to strike out:

; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Rhode Island shall have ceded (if it has not heretofore ceded) to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept, as a donation from the city of Providence, in the State of Rhode Island, a suitable lot of land situated in Exchange place, in said city, easterly of the east line of Exchange street extended, and cause to be erected thereon a commodious and substantial building, with fireproof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States post-office, district and circuit courts, custom-house, internal-revenue, and other Government civil offices in that city. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be, upon the acceptance of said site, made and approved according to law. The cost of said building complete, including vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches shall not exceed the sum of $1,500,000. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been so accepted, to cause plans and specifications for said building to be prepared, which plans and specifications shall have reference to the probable increase of the population of the said city and the consequent needs of the Government for the next twenty years, but not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building exceeding the sum hereby appropriated: Provided, That the site so accepted by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be of such dimensions as to leave the building to be erected thereon unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, after the completion and occupancy of said building, whenever in his judgment the public interest will admit, in his discretion, to sell and convey the present property of the United States in said city, now occupied as a post-office and court building, with the site thereof, the proceeds of the sale of said property to be covered into the Treasury.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLASSIFICATION OF SALARIES OF POST-OFFICE CLERKS.

The bill (S. 4949) to provide for the classification of the salaries of clerks employed in post-offices for the first and second classes was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that bill go over under Rule IX, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over under Rule IX.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MERIDEN, CONN.

The bill (S. 653) for the erection of a public building at Meriden, Conn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, on page 1, line 12, after the words "one hundred," to insert "and twenty-five;" and in line 13, after the word "dollars," to strike out "which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Meriden and State of Connecticut, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 15, to strike out the following clauses:

So much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary to defray the expenses of advertising for proposals, actual traveling expenses of said agent, and the compensation and actual traveling expenses of said commissioners, and other expenses incident to the selection of the site, and for necessary survey thereof, shall be immediately available.

So much of said appropriation as may be necessary for the preparation of sketch plans, drawings, specifications, and detailed estimates for the building by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department shall be available immediately upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of such site.

No money appropriated by this act shall be available, except as hereinbefore provided, until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Connecticut shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

After the said site shall have been paid for, and the sketch plans and detailed estimates for the building shall have been prepared by the Supervising Architect and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster-General, the balance of said appropriation shall be available for the erection and completion of the building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators and approaches.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Meriden, in the State of Connecticut."

REFUND OF DUTIES COLLECTED IN PORTO RICO.

The bill (H. R. 11096) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to render judgments for the principal and interest in actions to recover duties collected by the military authorities of the United States upon articles imported into Porto Rico from the several States between April 11, 1899, and May 1, 1900, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico with an amendment, on page 2, after line 10, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the certification of such judgments, or any of them, from which the United States does not take an appeal, is authorized to pay the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to refund the amount of duties paid in Porto Rico upon articles imported from the several States from April 11, 1899, to May 1, 1900, to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to render judgment thereon, and making an appropriation therefor."

ALEXANDER STEWART WEBB.

The bill (S. 4973) to place Lieut. Col. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Alexander Stewart Webb on the retired list of the United States Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Alexander Stewart Webb a lieutenant-colonel, and to place him on the retired list of the Army with that rank and pay.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL HAYES.

The bill (H. R. 6847) to correct the record of Michael Hayes was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] desired that bill to be passed over without prejudice in his absence. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BRIDGE ACROSS EMORY RIVER, TENNESSEE.

The bill (S. 4776) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Emory River, in the State of Tennessee, by the Tennessee Central Railway or its successors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in section 2, page 2, line 2, after the word "route," to insert:

Upon which no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroads leading to the said bridge.

In line 9, after the word "telegraph," to insert "and telephone;" and in line 11, after the word "telegraph," to insert "and telephone;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be constructed for the passage of railway trains, and shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroads leading to the said bridge, and shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States, and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal telegraph and telephone purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 21, after the word "built," to insert:

And no changes shall be made in said bridge during the progress of construction, or after completion, unless approved by the Secretary of War; and the said company shall, at its own expense, make from time to time such changes in said bridge as the Secretary of War may order in the interests of navigation: Provided, That if said bridge shall be built as a drawbridge the draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of all water craft; and upon whatever kind of bridge is constructed the said company shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals as the Light-House Board may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 7, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of railroad trains over the same and the approaches thereto upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies or any one of them desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid and upon the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in the use of said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 22, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Retaining its place?

Mr. HEITFELD. Retaining its place on the Calendar.

CONSTRUCTION OF PENSION ACT OF JUNE 27, 1890.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I understand that the joint resolution (S. R. 8) construing the act approved June 27, 1890, entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," was passed over. I should like to have it considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, after the word "navy," to insert "nor to those who, having had such prior service, enlisted in the military or naval service of the United States after the 1st day of January, 1865;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the act approved June 27, 1890, entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," is construed and held to include all persons who served for ninety days in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion and who have been honorably discharged therefrom: Provided, however, That the foregoing shall not apply to those who served in the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth regiments United States Volunteer Infantry who had a prior service in the Confederate army or navy, nor to those who, having had such prior service, enlisted in the military or naval service of the United States after the 1st day of January, 1865.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HALL OF RECORDS.

The bill (S. 5113) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon, to be used for a hall of records, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. NELSON. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without prejudice?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so ordered.

Mr. FAIRBANKS subsequently said: Senate bill 5113 was passed over temporarily. I ask that it may be now considered.

Mr. HALE. I shall have to ask that the bill go over. There are some Senators who wish to discuss it when it comes up.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If Senators desire to discuss it, that is entirely satisfactory. I did not know that any Senator desired to do so.

Mr. HALE. There will be some discussion on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill go over without prejudice?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Without prejudice, retaining its place upon the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. Yes, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order is made.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment on page 3, line 2, section 2, after the word "war," to insert "and the said company shall at its own expense make such changes in said bridge as the Secretary of War may at any time direct in the interest of navigation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SHREVEPORT BRIDGE AND TERMINAL COMPANY.

The bill (S. 4663) to authorize the Shreveport Bridge and Terminal Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Red River, in the State of Louisiana, at or near Shreveport, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "Louisiana," to strike out "between the parishes of Caddo and Bossier, at a point within 1 mile from the upper or lower limits of said city, or between said points" and insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, and in accordance with such plans as may be approved by the Secretary of War;" so as to read:

That the Shreveport Bridge and Terminal Company, a corporation existing under the laws of Louisiana, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and all approaches thereto across Red River, at or near the city of Shreveport, La., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, and in accordance with such plans as may be approved by the Secretary of War, and to lay on or over said bridge a track or tracks for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or shall be constructed to said river, on either or both sides thereof, at or opposite such point, under the limitations and conditions hereinafter provided, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 17, after the word "be," to strike out "said" and insert the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers or to exempt this bridge from the operation of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 21, before the word "bridge," to insert "That said," and in line 22, after the word "trains," to insert:

And at the option of said company may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot passengers for such reasonable rates of toll as may be fixed by said company and approved by the Secretary of War.

So as to read:

Provided further, That said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railroad trains, and at the option of said company may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot passengers for such reasonable rates of toll as may be fixed by said company and approved by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be provided with one or more openings, each having not less than 100 feet clear channel way at low water, and in addition to said openings one or more fixed channel spans, if required by the Secretary of War, each having not less than 50 feet clear channel; and every part of the superstructure of said bridge shall give a clear head room of not less than 6 feet above extreme known high-water mark: Provided, That all spans shall be so located as to afford the greatest possible accommodation to the river traffic: Provided also, That if the physical characteristics of the locality so require, and the interests of navigation be not injured thereby, the length of the fixed spans or the number of openings may be reduced: Provided also, That for any two adjacent openings of 100 feet each, one opening of 200 feet or more may be substituted, if in the opinion of the Secretary of War the interests of navigation be not injured thereby: Provided also, That if the location of said bridge be such that fixed spans can be constructed so as not to interfere with the free navigation of said river, said company, its successors and assigns, shall have the right to construct a bridge with fixed spans; but the height of such spans above high water and low water and the width of such spans shall be approved by the Secretary of War before the construction thereof shall begin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 4, line 3, after the word "That," to strike out "all drawspans, if any are found necessary and are required by the Secretary of War under this act," and insert "if the bridge authorized shall be built as a drawbridge, the draw;" and in line 10, after the word "trains," to strike out:

And also that in case the opening of a draw is delayed by reason of the passing of a train after the signal has been given from a boat ready to pass through, the draw shall be opened for the passage of such boat before another train is allowed to pass over the said span or spans; nor shall there be any unnecessary delay in the passage of trains over the bridge.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That if the bridge authorized shall be built as a drawbridge, the draw shall be operated by steam or other reliable power and shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats, except when trains are passing over said span or spans; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening said draw after the passage of trains.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 7, line 16, after the word "alterations," to strike out "conform to the provisions of this act and;" and in line 19, after the word "bridge," to insert "before or after completion;" so as to read:

SEC. 7. That any bridge constructed under the authority of this act shall be built under the general supervision of the Secretary of War, and no changes or alterations in plans shall be made during the construction of said bridge or after its completion unless said changes or alterations are authorized by the Secretary of War. That such alterations and changes as may be required by the Secretary of War in said bridge, before or after completion, so as to preserve free and convenient navigation, shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of War, at the expense of the company or persons owning, controlling, or operating such bridge, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MARBLEHEAD, MASS.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire, out of order, to report, with an amendment from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the bill (S. 1478) for the erection of a public building at Marblehead, Mass.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be put upon its passage at the present time for reasons which, if necessary, I can state.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which has just been reported by the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. SCOTT). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committeee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other governmental offices in the town of Marblehead and State of Massachusetts, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, not to exceed the sum of $50,000.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said town of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall within thirty days after such examination make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Marblehead, in the State of Massachusetts."

ERI W. PINKHAM.

The bill (S. 5153) granting an increase of pension to Eri W. Pinkham was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Eri W. Pinkham, late of Company E, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 15th instant:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5153) granting an increase of pension to Eri W. Pinkham, have examined the same and report:

This bill proposes to increase from $12 to $30 per month the pension of Eri W. Pinkham, of Nashua, N. H., who served in Company E, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Cavalry, from March 29, 1865, to July 15, 1865, when he was honorably discharged.

Mr. Pinkham is now receiving a pension of $12 per month under the act of June 27, 1890, for total inability to earn a support by manual labor. His medical examination shows that he is totally blind and helpless from locomotor ataxia. He is bedridden and dependent on assistance for the most trivial services. His condition in every respect is pitiable in the extreme and such as excites the greatest measure of sympathy. His physician states that his condition is hopeless.

Mr. Pinkham is as poor financially as he is helpless physically. In his stricken condition he has no means of support except his pension, and how inadequate this is may well be imagined when his need for medicine and medical attendance is so great. He has borne an excellent character and is in every way worthy, and your committee report the bill back favorably with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator reporting this bill if the pension received at present by this applicant is under the law of June 27, 1890?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then of course it can not be increased by the Pension Bureau.

Mr. GALLINGER. It can not be increased by the Pension Bureau.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM G. GRAY.

The bill (H. R. 11550) granting an increase of pension to William G. Gray was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of William G. Gray, late of Captain Daniel's company, Georgia Volunteers, Cherokee Indian disturbances, and to pay him a pension of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS HAHN.

The bill (H. R. 2207) granting an increase of pension to Louis Hahn was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Louis Hahn, late of Company F, Twenty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. M. BLOOM.

The bill (S. 2229) for the relief of J. M. Bloom was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Postmaster-General to cause the account of J. M. Bloom, late postmaster at Clearfield, Pa., to be credited with $189.12, and that he cause the said credit to be certified to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, being on account of loss of $123 in postal funds by robbery of the post-office on the 10th of February, 1897, and $66.12 for expenses incurred in the effort to apprehend the burglars, it appearing that the loss was without fault or negligence on the part of the late postmaster, and appropriates $189.12 to pay the claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS J. M'GINNIS.

The bill (S. 3779) for the relief of Thomas J. McGinnis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Postmaster-General to cause the account of Thomas J. McGinnis, superintendent of the Bourse station of the post-office at Philadelphia, Pa., to be credited with $819.78, and that he cause the said credit to be certified to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, being on account of the loss of $819.78 in postage stamps by robbery of the station on the 29th of November, 1899, and appropriates $819.78 to pay the claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. FINNEY.

The bill (S. 2709) for the relief of John F. Finney was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The preamble recites that on the 16th of March, 1901, Thomas Dougherty, messenger in the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States, Philadelphia, Pa., received from the registry department of the post-office two letters addressed to the assistant treasurer of the United States, Philadelphia, Pa., namely, one from the postmaster at Moorestown, N. J., and said to contain $500, and one from the postmaster at Meyerstown, Pa., said to contain $112.45; that the letters were stolen from Thomas Dougherty in the corridor of the post-office; that Thomas Dougherty not being in position to make good the amount to the Government, John F. Finney, the assistant treasurer of the United States at Philadelphia, was compelled to pay the amount, namely, $612.45, into the Treasury of the United States. The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to reimburse to John F. Finney, assistant treasurer of the United States, $612.45, in consideration of the aforesaid payment made by him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

JUDSON N. POLLARD.

The bill (S. 1300) granting a pension to Judson N. Pollard was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Judson N. Pollard, late of Company B, One hundred and fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and scout and spy, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. PATTERSON on the 16th instant, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1300) granting a pension to Judson N. Pollard, have examined the same and report:

This bill proposes to grant a pension of —— per month to Judson N. Pollard, late of Company B, One hundred and fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and scout and spy, United States Army.

Judson N. Pollard served in Company B, One hundred and fortieth Illinois Infantry, from May 14, 1864, to June 10, 1864, when he was discharged by reason of being under size and age. He subsequently served with General Thomas as a scout and spy. A full history of his service is contained in his affidavit, as follows:

"I, Judson N. Pollard, enlisted in May, 1864, in One hundred and fortieth Regiment, Company B, Illinois Volunteers, at Morrison, Whiteside County, Ill. Immediately after my enlistment I was examined by the United States surgeon and pronounced perfectly sound and able-bodied recruit, and was then sworn in. Camped at Dixon, Ill., for one month. At the end of this time we were ordered to the front. The regimental mustering officer, in looking the company over, discharged me with some other boys on account of being under age and under size, as my discharge papers will show. When I returned to my home I was ridiculed so by my boy companions that I got mad and resolved to go anyway, so I ran away from home, went back to camp, arriving there just as the regiment was about to leave for the front. Some of my friends who were going put together and rigged me out with a suit, cap, and all necessary equipments, so no one knew but what I was a regular member of the regiment.

"After going to the front I left the One hundred and fortieth Regiment, Company B, Illinois Volunteers, and beat my way on trains through Tennessee, joining Major-General Thomas's army just as he was about to commence that terrible long-fought battle against General Bragg, General Thomas being stationed down the valley a few miles from Chattanooga. Many times it seemed as if we would have to give up the fight, but encouraged by the stern, courageous, and resolute flash of those blue eyes and set lips of our general, we would move onward steadily and with a renewed determination. Our army suffered terribly with the cold. We had a part of the time a cold sleet rain, the ground being covered with ice. We were not allowed to have any fire on account of some changes which the general wished to make during the night unknown to the enemy. Neither had we anything to eat during that time.

"However, the next day found us at our post ready for duty, every nerve strained, and, fired by the shout of that gallant old soldier, Steadman, we gave another effort and the gain was ours. Never can I forget the 20th day of September, 1864. During this hard-fought battle I made myself useful in aiding the hospital corps and carrying water to the wounded and dying on the battlefield, the bullets flying all around us at times like hailstones; but we gave no thought of our danger, only to relieve the suffering comrades scattered all about us. After the battle was over General Thomas sent for me to come to headquarters. He then asked me my name, where I came from, and how I came to be there. I told him how I enlisted in the One hundred and fortieth Regiment, Company B, Illinois Volunteers, at Morrison, Ill., was in camp at Dixon, Ill., and drilled with the rest, but upon going to the front the mustering officer discharged me on account of being under age and under size; but for all that I was determined to go, and with the help of some of the boys I went to the front with the regiment.

"How I had, after leaving my regiment, beat my way through Tennessee, arriving just in time to be of good service during this terrible battle. I also told him I had two brothers, two uncles, and four cousins who had enlisted ahead of me and were now serving their country. I said I wanted to stay with the Army. He said, 'I can make use of you.' So then it was that he sent out and got the old dirty, ragged suit and dressed me up as a plantation boy and sent me out as scout and spy. I remember well one morning I was sent out to work my way the best I could into a rebel camp to gather all the information that I could in regard to their movements and intentions of their army. I was very successful, representing, dressed as I was, that I was a poor, homeless boy, saying everything I could against the Yankees. Told them the Union Army had burned our home, and ruined our plantation, stealing our cattle, horses, mules, etc., and that I was very hungry and came into their camp to get something to eat, remaining one day and night.

"After gathering the information I wanted I wandered back into our lines again. I distinctly remember General Thomas complimenting me very highly for my work, and afterwards called me his 'mascot boy spy.' I remained with General Thomas from that time on, he afterwards being stationed at Nashville. About the middle of December, 1864, we had a hard-fought battle, during which time General Thomas had taken some seven or eight thousand prisoners and about 60 pieces of artillery. During this battle General Thomas wanted reenforcements. To get them a message must be taken through a thicket, with hidden enemies bushwhacking. I was told this was a very dangerous route to go, as several of our men had been shot through the attempt; but I was willing to make an attempt to deliver the message. After traveling several miles on horseback I was shot at several times by the bushwhackers hidden in the brush. Nearing my journey's end I was fired at again from ambush. I put spurs to my horse and ran him as fast as possible, throwing my body on the opposite side of the horse and his neck. The horse received a flesh wound in the side of his neck, and I a bullet hole through my coat sleeve and a slight wound through the fleshy part of the leg between the knee and thigh. However, I arrived at my journey's end, delivered my message, and found my shoe and sock saturated with blood. My wound was dressed, and I returned with the reenforcements for General Thomas's army. The next day the battle was successfully won.

"About the last of this month Hood left Tennessee, which seemed to close the war in the valley of the Mississippi. During the month of January, 1865, General Thomas's army was dispersed for want of further use there.

"In all this time, which was about eight months, I never received one cent of pay for my services, only a proud beating of my heart that I was doing all I could for my country. Neither did I receive any bounty as other comrades did, who volunteered in that time, getting $1,200. I have never asked for any pension, being heretofore able to care for myself, but now I am totally disabled to earn a dollar, being broken in health and blind, and have no means to support myself and family.

"I therefore pray that the Pension Committee of the Senate will report favorably on the bill in the Senate for me to have an invalid's pension. Owing to my feeble condition, it is not likely I will need help very long.

"JUDSON N. POLLARD.

"Witness:
"ROXY M. PATTERSON.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 21st day of November, 1901.
"[SEAL.] ADOLPHUS B. CAPRON,
"United States Commissioner for Colorado."

Mr. Pollard's service in Company B, One hundred and fortieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, is a matter of record in the War Department, and his statements regarding his service with General Thomas are corroborated by evidence of comrades.

Mr. Pollard has never made claim at the Pension Bureau, having no title under existing laws. He served less than ninety days as an enlisted man, and his wound was received after his discharge as such and while he was irregularly attached to the Army and used by General Thomas as a scout and spy.

For a long time Mr. Pollard has been a confirmed invalid and unable to support himself and family. He is blind and partially paralyzed and needs the care of an attendant almost constantly. What little money he had been able to lay aside in other days has been entirely used up for medicine and medical attendance, until now he and his family are reduced to the most destitute circumstances and they have been aided by their charitable neighbors. He is a total physical wreck and is in a most pitiable and destitute condition. He is a worthy comrade of the Grand Army of the Republic and has been honored by the highest offices of his post.

While Mr. Pollard's service as an enlisted man was short, yet his subsequent service with General Thomas was of a most extraordinary character, and he was wounded while in the performance thereof. Your committee regard his case as worthy of favorable consideration, and therefore report the bill back with a recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Judson N. Pollard, late of Company B, One hundred and fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and scout and spy, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOAN OF TENTS TO KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS ENCAMPMENT.

The bill (H. R. 11839) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for use at Knights of Pythias encampment to be held at San Francisco, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War to loan, at his discretion, to committee of citizens in charge of arrangements for the encampment of the Uniform Rank, Knights Pythias, to be held in San Francisco, Cal., August 10 to 20, 1902, and to deliver to Charles L. Patton, president and executive director of said committee, 1,000 wall tents, size 10 by 12, with poles, ridges, and pins for each; but no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of such property.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCREASED PENSIONS FOR LOSS OF LIMBS.

The bill (S. 4850) to increase the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost limbs in the service was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, on page 2, line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $45 per month; that all persons who, in like manner, shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow or a leg at or above the knee, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $50 per month; that all persons who, in like manner shall have lost an arm at the shoulder joint or a leg at the hip joint, or so near the shoulder or hip joint as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, shall receive a pension at the rate of $60 per month, and that all persons who, in like manner, shall have lost one hand and one foot, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $60 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let a part of the report be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before that is done, will the Senator allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 2, line 3, after the word "limb," I move to insert "or are totally disabled in the same."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3, after the word "limb," it is proposed to insert "or are totally disabled in the same," so as to read:

That all persons who, in like manner, shall have lost an arm at the shoulder joint or a leg at the hip joint, or so near the shoulder or hip-joint as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, or are totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $60 per month, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read from the report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 17th instant, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4850) to increase the pension of soldiers and sailors who have lost limbs in the service, have examined the same and report:

Two bills have been presented to this committee during the present session of Congress proposing an increase of pension to soldiers who lost limbs in the service or were totally disabled in them, to wit, S. 1887 and S. 4850. A hearing was given to the advocates of the first-named measure on March 25, which will be printed as an appendix to this report. The provisions of that bill were somewhat sweeping, going beyond a mere increase to those who had lost limbs, providing, among other things, for compounding all existing disabilities due to Army service. It will be observed from the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions, included in the hearing, that he estimated that the enactment of that bill into law would add about $5,000,000 to the pension appropriation. It is probable that that estimate was an excessive one, as some of the provisions of the bill are speculative, the cost of which is not susceptible of definite determination. The second bill (S. 4850) follows the precedents established in the matter of increases to this class of pensioners, as will be found by reference to the several statutes on that subject. After careful consideration your committee are satisfied that the provisions of S. 4850 give an adequate degree of relief to the deserving classes included in its provisions, and is worthy of the favorable consideration of Congress.

The legislation concerning soldiers who lost limbs in the service is as follows:

For the loss of both hands, the pension granted from July 4, 1864, was $25; from June 4, 1872, $31.25; from June 4, 1874, $50; from June 17, 1878, $72, and from February 12, 1889, $100.

For loss of a leg at hip joint, the pension granted from June 6, 1866, was $15; from June 4, 1872, $24; from March 3, 1879, $37.50, and from August 4, 1886, $45.

For loss of an arm at shoulder joint, the pension granted from June 6, 1866, was $15; from June 4, 1872, $18; from June 4, 1874, $24; from March 3, 1883, $30; from March 3, 1885, $37.50, and from August 4, 1886, $45.

For loss of an arm at or above elbow, or a leg at or above knee, the pension granted from June 6, 1866, was $15; from June 4, 1872, $18; from June 4, 1874, $24; from March 3, 1883, $30, and from August 4, 1886, $36.

For loss of a leg above the knee causing inability to wear an artificial limb the pension granted from June 6, 1866, was $15; from June 4, 1872, $24; from March 3, 1883, $30, and from August 4, 1886, $36.

For loss of one hand and one foot the pension granted from March 3, 1865, was $20; from June 4, 1872, $24, and from February 28, 1877, $36.

For total disability in one arm or one leg the pension granted from June 6, 1866, was $15; from June 4, 1872, $18; from March 3, 1883, $24, and from August 4, 1886, $36.

For total disability in one hand and one foot the pension granted from June 6, 1866, was $20; from June 4, 1872, $24, and from February 28, 1877, $33.

For total disability in both feet the pension granted from June 6, 1866, was $20, and from June 4, 1872, $31.25.

For loss of a hand or a foot the pension granted from June 6, 1866, was $15; from June 4, 1872, $18; from March 3, 1883, $24, and from August 4, 1886, $30.

For total disability in one hand or one foot the pension granted from June 6, 1866, was $15; from June 4, 1872, $18; from March 3, 1883, $24, and from August 4, 1886, $30.

It will be observed that there have been several increases for maimed soldiers, but no increase has been allowed since the year 1886 except for soldiers who had lost both hands, which pension was increased from $72 to $100 per month by act of February 12, 1889.

The fact that Congress has heretofore recognized the increasing suffering and dependence of soldiers who have lost limbs in the service is a reason for further action in their behalf at the present time. They are pensioned simply for amputations, no other disability incurred in the service being taken into account. According to a recent letter (herewith attached) from the Commissioner of Pensions it will be seen that increased expenditure under this bill will be $1,312,656 for the first year, which will rapidly decrease from year to year. By amending the bill as the committee proposes by striking out the word "fifty" and substituting the word "sixty" the amount will be increased $2,040, making the total $1,314,696.

During the first session of the Fifty-second Congress a favorable report was made from this committee on a somewhat similar bill (Report No. 736), from which the following extracts are made:

"There is no question as to the justice of the claims of the men who left limbs on the battlefield. Whatever frauds, if any, have been committed on the Treasury by those now drawing pensions, the men who suffered amputations have not been a party to them. And it should not be forgotten that these amputations were hurriedly performed, often by ignorant or inexperienced surgeons, and without any of the precautions deemed so necessary in private or hospital practice, the result of which was diseased stumps and other sequelæ that will follow the soldier through life. Beyond a question a large proportion of these men are suffering from nervous affections, from heart disease, or other painful disability, the direct result of the amputations they underwent. The celebrated physician, Dr. Pancoast, of Philadelphia, expressed a great truth when he said concerning this class of cases:

"'One of the prominent symptoms observed in this condition of the nervous system is a weakness of the heart action, causing an abnormal blood pressure which deranges the secretions and excretions of the various organs of the body, seriously interfering with nutrition. He is easily fatigued, and when this occurs it invariably produces weak and compressible pulse and not infrequently an intermittent pulse, all of which results from neurasthenia of the medulla, the seat of nerve energy, which controls the action of the heart as well as that of respiration. Permit me to say that during a period of thirty-five years of active practice I have found that where large nerves are injured by shock, laceration, or by cutting they are seldom restored to normal activity, and the nervous debility thus produced not only shortens life, but it incapacitates the one so unfortunately afflicted from continued mental or physical exertion.'

"These men, as a class, are great sufferers, and much more liable to accidents than others. Besides this, they are shut out from life insurance, the means used by prudent men to protect their families from possible want. The mortality in this class is unusually large, reaching the enormous figure of 57 per thousand annually, with a constantly increasing death rate; and as the average age of the soldiers of the war of 1861-1865 is 56 years, the ranks of these men will be rapidly decimated by natural causes. For these reasons we are impressed with the justice of their demands, sympathizing with them when they say:

"'Give back the legs and arms, give back the sight, make helpful the now helpless body, and the largest pension that might be provided by a grateful country would not be accepted as the price of either by the man who has suffered such a loss.'"

The soldiers who are on the roll as a result of wounds on the battlefield, which deprived them of legs and arms, are, beyond question, greater sufferers than any other class. That heart disease results in a large proportion of the cases is beyond question, and in addition to this many of them are suffering from irritable stumps and consequent neuralgic affections. The mortality among this class is very high, and as they now average about 65 years of age it will be recognized that their names will rapidly disappear from the pension roll.

Being deeply impressed with the justice of the proposed measure, your committee recommend that Senate bill 4850 be enacted into law after amending it by striking out the word "fifty," in line 4, page 2, and substituting the word "sixty," and that Senate bill 1887 be indefinitely postponed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, April 12, 1902.

MY DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request I have the honor to submit an estimate as to the cost of enacting into law Senate bill 4850, to increase the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost limbs in the service.

The first provision increases the pensions of those who shall have lost one hand or one foot or been totally disabled in the same from $30 to $45 per month, an increase of $180 per year. The number of beneficiaries under this provision now on the rolls is 3,353, and the cost of increasing their pensions to $45 per month would be $905,340 per year.

The second provision embraces pensioners who have lost an arm at or above the elbow or a leg at or above the knee, or been totally disabled in the same, and provides an increase from $36 to $50 per month, amounting to $168 per year. The 2,357 pensioners of this class now on the roll would receive an additional sum of $395,976 per year.

The third proposition takes in those who have lost an arm at the shoulder joint or a leg at the hip joint, or so near the shoulder or hip joint as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, and provides an increase of $180 per year for this class. The 1,724 pensioners of this class now on the roll would receive the additional sum of $310,320 per year.

The fourth provision increases the pensions of those who have lost one hand and one foot, or been totally disabled in the same, to $50 per month. There are only 17 pensioners of this class. The cost of this provision, so far as it relates to amputations, would be $1,020 per year, but the number of beneficiaries who would come in under the provision "or been totally disabled in the same" can not be estimated.

The approximate cost of enacting this bill into law would, therefore, be as follows:

Cost of first provision	$905,340
Cost of second provision	395,976
Cost of third provision	310,320
Cost of fourth provision	1,020
Total	1,312,656

Very respectfully,

H. CLAY EVANS, Commissioner.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on Pensions, United States Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I should like to make a single observation while the bill is under consideration.

Formerly the law establishing rates of pension for loss of limbs included a phrase "or disability equivalent thereto," so that where the disability in the limb was equivalent to the loss of a limb the pension was granted at the rate prescribed in the act for the disability. That continued to be the law, I think, up to the time when Congress raised the rate from $24 to $36 for the loss of an arm below the elbow, and correspondingly for the loss of an arm above the elbow or a leg below the knee or above the knee. In the passage of that bill the clause "or disability equivalent thereto" was left out, and this clause "or are totally disabled in the same" was inserted.

I believe there was no intention of changing the law from what it was before; but that the words "or are totally disabled in the same" were intended to have the same meaning as the words "or disability equivalent thereto." However, in the Pension Office there has been in its administration a great injustice done in the construction of the law as it now stands. The examining surgeons, who perhaps are not very familiar with the law, make reports that a soldier is suffering from a disability equivalent to the loss of an arm or leg, as the case may be. Then the Pension Office says "that is not a certificate of total disability. We are not permitted to grant this rate of pension in cases of equivalent disability." It appears, to illustrate from this case, that a soldier who can really grasp a book and raise it a little, or whose foot hangs down and he can just touch it to the floor, and who therefore is not totally disabled in the use of a limb, is not entitled to the rate.

I have had some decisions of that sort in the Pension Office recently under the present Commissioner and under his chief of medical staff—I do not know what he is called, perhaps medical referee—that have certainly tried my patience beyond anything I have ever had to do in the Pension Office; and if I had time, I should like to suggest some amendments to the pending bill. I do not know that I shall do so, but I desire here in the Senate to speak of what seems to me has been most faulty administration of the Pension Office in this respect.

I remember one case where the examining surgeons in describing the limb—it was the case of an arm which was useless—said that the applicant would be better off if his arm had been amputated, and yet, because he could clasp a pen, get his fingers together on a pen so as to raise it a little from the table, the Pension Office held that he was not totally disabled in the use of his arm.

I want to say, also, that I have found it to be an absolute impossibility—I think I may use that strong language—to get a ruling from the Commissioner of Pensions in opposition to the report made by his medical referee. I do not know who is the medical referee in the Pension Office, but I have come to the conclusion that he is the medical dictator of that office, and that when he says that a thing is so there is no use of going to the Commissioner or anyone else about it. I do not know that I wish to make any attack upon him, but I understand he never was a practicing physician. He never had any experience as a practicing physician, and yet the affidavits of the most distinguished physicians and surgeons in the United States have often been turned down by him, he setting up his judgment as a medical officer against that of the first talent in the land. I think it is quite time that there was a change made at least in the administration of the law in the Pension Office in respect to these cases.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the title should be amended so as to read: "A bill to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs in the military or naval service of the United States."

Mr. COCKRELL. What effect will that have on the clause we put in after the word limb, "or are totally disabled in the same?"

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it should read: "A bill to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs in the military or naval service of the United States or are totally disabled in the same." I think that ought to be in the title.

Mr. COCKRELL. It must be in the title or it will be nugatory. That is what I was going to suggest. It would be useless to leave that matter in there and yet not express it in the title.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that if he will refer to the last law he will find that the phraseology of the bill and the phraseology of the title are the same as in the last law. Still, I think it would be well to have the title describe the purpose of the bill accurately.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think so.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the title be amended so as to read: "A bill to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs in the military or naval service of the United States or are totally disabled in the same."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the title will be amended as indicated.

GENEVIEVE ALMIRA SPRIGG LUDLOW.

The bill (S. 2455) granting a pension to Genevieve Almira Sprigg Ludlow was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Genevieve Almira Sprigg Ludlow, widow of William Ludlow, late brigadier-general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Genevieve Almira Sprigg Ludlow."

THOMAS MILSTED.

The bill (H. R. 1811) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Milsted was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Thomas Milsted, late of Company F, Sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNIE L. EVENS.

The bill (H. R. 5560) granting an increase of pension to Annie L. Evens was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 3, after the word "and," to insert "he is," and in the same line, after the word "hereby," to strike out "is;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Annie L. Evens, widow of John H. Evens, late first lieutenant Company K, Forty-third Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said John H. Evens until they reach the age of 16 years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS P. SMITH.

The bill (H. R. 7782) granting an increase of pension to Thomas P. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Thomas P. Smith, late of Company K, Seventy-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. HOLDEN.

The bill (H. R. 9413) granting a pension to Mary E. Holden was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary E. Holden, widow of John W. Holden, late of Company B, Twelfth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUSTUS CANFIELD.

The bill (H. R. 639) granting an increase of pension to Justus Canfield was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Justus Canfield, late of Company B, Second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALVIN A. RICE.

The bill (H. R. 3379) to correct the military record of Calvin A. Rice was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to insert at the end of the bill the words "as of January 8, 1863;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to correct the military record of Calvin A. Rice, late captain Company G, Seventy-seventh New York Volunteer Infantry, and issue to him an honorable discharge from said regiment, as of January 8, 1863.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4932) providing for the extension of the Loudon Park National Cemetery, near Baltimore, Md., was announced the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over without prejudice.

The bill (S. 1359) authorizing an increase of pension in certain cases was announced the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

GEORGE W. DODGE.

The bill (H. R. 3826) granting an increase of pension to George W. Dodge was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of George W. Dodge, late of Company G, Forty-ninth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM J. SIMMONS.

The bill (H. R. 2526) granting an increase of pension to William J. Simmons was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of William J. Simmons, late of Company E, Thirty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERNEST WAGNER.

It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Ernest Wagner, late of Company I, Sixth Regiment Massachusetts State Militia Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. F. GILMAN.

The bill (H. R. 1678) granting a pension to Mary E. F. Gilman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary E. F. Gilman, widow of Samuel D. Gilman, late of the Strafford Guards, New Hampshire Militia, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET M. GRANT.

The bill (H. R. 7994) granting an increase of pension to Margaret M. Grant was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret M. Grant, widow of Marcus Grant, late major First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Engineers and Mechanics, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HENRY LANE.

The bill (H. R. 3592) for the relief of Henry Lane was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War to revoke and set aside the special orders of the War Department dismissing from the service, for absence without leave, Henry Lane, late first lieutenant Company F, Thirtieth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, to date March 1, 1863, because he was then, and for weeks before had been, on duty in the field, and to grant him an honorable discharge as of date April 7, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR KYLE.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Secretary will read the resolutions submitted by the Senator from South Dakota.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. JAMES HENDERSON KYLE, late a Senator from the State of South Dakota.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tribute may be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit to the family of the deceased a copy of these resolutions, with the action of the Senate thereon.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect at the conclusion of these exercises the Senate do adjourn.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, JAMES HENDERSON KYLE was born at Cedarville, Greene County, Ohio, on the 24th day of February, 1854. He was of Scotch-Irish ancestry. His father's ancestors came from Scotland and settled in Pennsylvania at a very early period. His grandparents on his mother's side came from the north of Ireland.

Senator KYLE sprung from a strong, vigorous, and liberty-loving race. The Scotch-Irish has done heroic service in the cause of human liberty the world over. It has given to our own country many noble characters who have rendered the highest service in every field of human endeavor. It has given to us soldiers and statesmen and scholars among the most illustrious in our history. I doubt if any race in proportion to its numbers has contributed so largely in forceful and high characters to the progress and development of mankind.

The family of the deceased were patriots and were not unworthy of the history or traditions of their race. His great-grandfather, with six great-uncles, served with credit in the war of the Revolution, while his father, inspired by their example and with devotion to his country, was a faithful soldier in the late civil war. Born of such blood and with such a heritage and inspired with such traditions, we would not expect to find a youth with mean aspirations. We would look for the unfolding of a life of high purposes, with ideal aims and worthy ambitions.

His father had great solicitude for the education of his family. Although his means were meager at this time, he was anxious to surround his children with the best influences and afford them the greatest opportunities within his reach. With this object in view, on his removal from Ohio to Illinois in 1865 he located with his family at Urbana, near the proposed location of the State University.

Senator KYLE, as a boy, was an industrious, careful, and painstaking student. He had the confidence of and enjoyed the intimacy of his parents and his teachers, as well as his classmates. He succeeded as a student, and graduated with credit from the high school at his home.

In his desire for an education he was not satisfied to stop at the threshold. A college education at this time was the goal of his ambition. It was not based on a false pride, but he was anxious for the equipment it would give him and the service it would render him in the future that was then opening to him. In this Senator KYLE displayed the highest wisdom and foresight.

For life's activities we can not be too highly equipped. The young man should open to himself every avenue that will bring to him not only culture and high character in its truest sense, but power and strength as well. His ambition should be to discipline and develop every faculty of his being so as to equip himself in the highest degree for the best service in the race for life and life's endeavors. He owes this much to himself as well as to society, so that into whatever position he may be called or by the strength of his individuality force his way, he has made himself capable within his own limitations of rendering the highest possible service.

He has only one life to live, and he should make it the most potential possible with the faculties with which he has been endowed. To this end his ambitions, in the larger sense, need neither be selfish nor narrow nor solely for the development or enlargement of his own individuality. At best the real life is one of supreme service. Its equipment should be the amplest, so as to be able to meet its highest duties and to develop each individual character for its greatest efficiency.

Senator KYLE, both in his youth and in his maturer years, was possessed with high purposes and worthy ambitions. He especially emphasized this during his early life in the sacrifices he made in order to secure an education. He took a full course in Oberlin College and graduated from that institution in 1878. He did not secure his education without severe labor and the exercise of much self-denial. He was without means and was obliged to largely provide himself with funds with which to meet the obligations incurred throughout his entire college course. To do this he either worked upon a farm during the vacations or taught school.

In this Senator KYLE displayed much of true heroism. It is no light or easy task for a student to successfully meet the requirements and obligations of a college course without thought or consideration of the means for that purpose. To assume and carry through both with credit, in competition with those more favored in that regard, is an undertaking from which most young men shrink. To have succeeded indicates that he was a young man of resolute purpose and that he possessed a spirit that would not rest satisfied with present accomplishments. He supplemented his college course with the study of theology, and was graduated four years later, was ordained and entered the ministry.

I do not understand in the shaping of his career or of his life work political ambition ever entered. He had planned his future and had trained himself for a minister of the gospel. To this work he had for some years conscientiously devoted himself. His political career can not in the first instance be said to be of his own choosing. His nomination as a candidate for the State senate in 1890 came unsolicited to him and practically as the result of an accident. He was elected as an Independent, and he demeaned himself during a most stormy and turbulent session of the legislature with dignity.

Through a cooperation of Independents and Democrats they secured control of the legislature against the Republicans. A United States Senator was to be elected, and a long and fruitless struggle was carried on for many weeks in behalf of the candidates of the respective parties. The Independent membership far exceeded that of the Democratic, and the former insisted upon naming the candidate and that in the election they should have the cooperation of the Democrats. Many different Independents had been voted for, and each had been dropped in turn. Toward the latter part of the session an agreement was finally reached whereby it was arranged that Senator KYLE should be the candidate, and he was elected by the combined votes of the Independent and Democratic membership.

At the same time a like contest was being carried on in the legislature of Illinois. It required the cooperation of the independent membership of that body with the Democrats to insure the election of General Palmer. This for a long time they refused. These two contests attracted national attention. It was asserted, whether truthfully or not, that a joint agreement was arrived at whereby the independents in the Illinois legislature were to vote for General Palmer, a Democrat, upon condition that the Democratic members in South Dakota should cast their votes for an independent.

Upon the election of Senator KYLE he announced himself as an independent, but during his first term as a member of this body he largely aligned himself on party questions with the Democrats.

In 1896 Senator KYLE was a candidate to succeed himself. It appeared to be understood throughout the campaign should the Populists control the legislature he would be selected as their candidate and elected to the position. His party was successful, but he met with bitter and persistent opposition within its membership, and he could not control the caucus. This led to a protracted struggle. In order to end the controversy, the Republicans finally voted for Senator KYLE, and with the aid of sufficient votes from his own party he was elected.

Notwithstanding his election was made possible by Republican votes, he still maintained his position as an independent. The position of many of the leaders of his party toward him in this contest doubtless estranged him from them and from his former party affiliations. The questions involved in the Spanish-American war soon arose, and on these he supported the Administration of President McKinley. Upon the reelection of the latter in 1900 he made public announcement that thereafter he should be a Republican and would cooperate with that party. Later he announced his candidacy, as a Republican, as his own successor.

It is not my purpose to speak at length of his party associations, his attitude for or against political organizations, or his independence of them, or to question or impugn in any sense his political motives during his public service. His career certainly is marked and anomalous in our political history. To have been elected, in the first instance, as the result of a compromise between two distinct party organizations; in the second, to have been opposed in the legislature by a large majority of his party associates, and the Republican organization being responsible for his election, and finally giving his adherence to that party and declaring his purpose to be the Republican candidate as his own successor, is a situation worthy of passing reference.

If I may be permitted to express my own judgment, I believe Senator KYLE'S natural convictions more nearly led him in sympathy with the Republican party. His early training, his education, his associations, his convictions, aside from the question of the tariff, until a very recent period before his entry upon politics, were largely with that party. Local conditions, in addition to the tariff, had much to do, I believe, in determining him in taking his position in the first instance with the Independent party.

Senator KYLE was a man of high and unsullied personal character. In business affairs or of detail, he possessed the highest sense of honor. No man ever questioned his personal integrity. In his daily life he walked upon a high and noble plane. There was nothing in his life of artfulness or deceit. He was ideal as a citizen, beautiful in his domestic life, a devoted husband, and a noble and affectionate father.

He was conscientious and high-minded as a public servant. He rendered faithful service to his people, his State, and to the nation. He had high concern for the welfare of his country, and devoted himself to its upbuilding and to the welfare of its people.

He always gave especial interest to the rights of the individual, the safeguarding and the elevation of labor, the integrity of the home, and the extension of national legislation for its protection. He also believed in the broadening and elevating influences in our national life of higher education. He especially emphasized his interest in these questions while chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, and also as chairman of the Industrial Commission, which conducted such an extended and exhaustive investigation covering the vital and complex questions of our industrial life. To this, during his later service in this body, he conscientiously devoted his energy, his strength, and his ability. The result of his labors in this particular must prove of great service to his country.

His death was sincerely mourned by the entire people of the State. It was a shock for which they were not prepared. He was comparatively young, and his friends looked forward to many years of service and of usefulness. His State misses him and grieves at his untimely death. His community had for him the most profound regard and tender affection. He was simple in his life, cultivated in his tastes, approachable and generous in his manner, most companionable and sincere in his friendships, and just alike always to friend or foe. I do not believe I ever witnessed expressions of more sincere and genuine sorrow than on the occasion of his funeral. All were and had been his friends, and they all felt a truly noble and generous spirit had gone out from amongst them.

To the widow and the children we offer our tenderest sympathy. The luster of his pure and noble character will always illumine the home and the lives of those he left behind. He left them the richest possible heritage that a husband or father could bequeath—a noble, true, and Christ-like life.

In closing, I appropriate substantially his own words, used on a similar occasion upon one of the State's representatives:

JAMES H. KYLE has gone from us. The life immortal is now his—where progress is unhindered and where, free from the conflicts and suffering of mortality, his soul rests with the all-wise and beneficent Creator. He is mourned by citizens of South Dakota, irrespective of party, and they unite with the State's representatives in paying this tribute to a hardworking, painstaking minister, a wise statesman, and a kind husband and father.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, once more the Senate of the United States suspends its labors to pay a well-merited tribute of respect and honor to Hon. JAMES HENDERSON KYLE, the late senior senator in this body from the State of South Dakota, who, on July 1, 1901, at his home in the city of Aberdeen, in that State, in the meridian of an illustrious career in the public service of our country, was called from the scenes of his labors and duties in this earthly existence to enter upon an immortal life in the—to us—invisible existence beyond the grave.

The deceased Senator was born near Xenia, in the State of Ohio, on February 14, 1854.

During his boyhood his parents removed from Ohio to the State of Illinois, and in his seventeenth year, in 1871, he entered the University of Illinois, taking a course in civil engineering, and in 1873 entered Oberlin College, in Ohio, and was graduated from the classical course in 1878. He then studied law, preparatory to admission to the bar. After pursuing his legal studies for some time he determined to enter the ministry of the Congregational Church, and entered the Western Theological Seminary, at Allegheny, Pa., and graduated therefrom in 1882.

During these years of college work he was also engaged as teacher of mathematics and engineering.

Prior to his graduation from the seminary at Allegheny, Pa., he was married at Cincinnati, Ohio, on April 27, 1881, to Miss Belle Dugot, an accomplished young lady, who was a graduate of Oberlin, and with whom he had become acquainted while at that college.

After leaving Allegheny Seminary Mr. KYLE engaged in educational and ministerial work for several years, and went to Utah and was pastor of Congregational churches at Echo City and Salt Lake City, Utah, from 1882 to 1885.

On account of the ill health of his wife he moved to South Dakota in 1885, and was pastor of a church at Ipswich until 1889, when he moved to Aberdeen and was pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church at that place, and was such pastor when he entered political life and was elected to the State senate as an independent and soon afterwards to the United States Senate to succeed Gideon C. Moody for the term beginning March 4, 1891.

Combined with his labors as pastor of the Aberdeen church he served as financial secretary of Yankton College, the only educational institution of that denomination in South Dakota at that time.

After his name was placed upon the ticket for the office of State senator as an independent in the fall of 1890, he spent most of his time up to the day of election in his work as financial secretary of Yankton College in the Eastern States. After his election as State senator he returned before the legislature convened and entered upon his duties as State senator, and during the term was elected to the United States Senate and entered upon his duties as such Senator at the beginning of the first session of the Fifty-second Congress.

The contest in the legislature of South Dakota for United States Senator to succeed Judge Moody lasted for twenty-seven days, and upon the fortieth ballot Mr. KYLE was elected as an independent, receiving 75 votes as against 55 for Hon. Thomas Sterling, Republican; 8 for Hon. Bartlett Tripp, Democrat, and 1 for Hon. Hugh J. Campbell.

When Mr. KYLE entered the Senate in the Fifty-second Congress, first session, in December, 1891, there was a question as to which party should provide for Mr. KYLE and Mr. PEFFER on the committees of the Senate.

Mr. KYLE chose to have the Democratic party provide for his committee assignments, which was done.

In the Fifty-third Congress the Democratic party controlled the selection of the majority committees and chairmanships, and Mr. KYLE was made chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, and was assigned to the Committees on Patents, Indian Depredations, Irrigation, Forest Reservations, and University of the United States.

In the Fifty-fourth Congress, when the Republican party controlled the majority committees, Mr. KYLE was made chairman of the Select Committee to Establish the University of the United States, and was left on the remaining committees he had been on in the Fifty-third Congress except the Committee on Patents.

In 1897 Mr. KYLE was reelected as an independent, as his own successor, for the term beginning March 4, 1897. In the extraordinary session of the Fifty-fifth Congress, in 1897, he chose that the Republican majority in the Senate should provide his committee assignments, and he was made chairman of Committee on Education and Labor, and was assigned to the Committees on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, Indian Depredations, Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, Pensions, and Territories.

In the Fifty-sixth Congress, March 4, 1899, to March 4, 1901, he was given assignments to the same committees as in the Fifty-fifth Congress, and was also placed on the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Under the act of Congress approved June 18, 1898, entitled "An act authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital," to be composed of five Senators, five members of the House, and nine other persons who shall fairly represent the different industries and employments, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Mr. KYLE was appointed one of the five members from the Senate and was made chairman of the Commission. The Commission was organized and proceeded to the discharge of their onerous duties. To the work of this Commission Mr. KYLE earnestly devoted much time and labor. It was the intention of Mr. KYLE to return to Washington about the time he was taken sick, to give attention to the compilation of the results of the work of the Commission. The reports of the Commission constitute 19 volumes.

As a Senator he was diligent and faithful in the discharge of his duties in committee work and in the Senate. He was ever courteous, pleasant, and affable in his conduct and bearing, and an exemplary Christian gentleman. He was ever mindful of and attentive to the interests of his constituents.

His death-causing disease attacked him at the time he had attained the position and attainments for the greatest usefulness. Death is no respecter of persons or of their conditions in life.

His wife, one daughter, and an infant son bearing his honored name survive him to mourn and grieve over their irreparable loss. He has left them an invaluable legacy in a good name—better than precious ointment or worldly riches. We join them in mourning his loss, and tender to them sincere condolence.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I beg the privilege of saying a few words in testimony of my esteem for our late colleague, Senator KYLE, who passed away last summer, during the recess of Congress, at his home in South Dakota.

His death, I am sure, was a surprise to us all. He died while yet a young man. I knew him well, and the more thoroughly I knew him the higher became my estimate of his worth as a man, as a citizen, as a friend, and as a Senator.

He was a man of untiring industry. He was a student and a well-trained scholar. He had been a teacher and had qualified himself for the ministry, went West and finally located in the State of South Dakota; was elected to the State senate, and finally elected to the United States Senate by the legislature of that State, and was reelected.

Mr. President, Senator KYLE had an unusual and honorable career. He was a member of this body for more than ten years. He was a faithful servant of the people, always at work, doing what his conscience and his heart prompted him to do. He was a retiring, modest man, disposed to shrink from the public notice rather than seek the applause of the people. He was guided by his convictions. He desired to do right as God gave him to see the right. He was a quiet man and seldom talked—never unless he deemed it his duty in defense of a measure which he regarded of great importance to the country or to his State, or unless he regarded a measure as injurious and vicious to the public welfare, when he sought to defeat it.

It is said, Mr. President, that every man builds his own monument. It can be truthfully said that Senator KYLE builded his monument by constant, faithful work in the interest of his fellowmen—a monument more enduring than any that can be builded of stone or bronze.

There are great and good men in this country, who were benefactors of their race, whose ashes rest in some quiet cemetery with nothing but a modest mound of earth to mark the spot, yet the memory of whose noble deeds will endure with the ages, while monuments in occasional instances rise high above the graves of the unworthy.

That thought, Mr. President, was most beautifully expressed by Oliver Wendell Holmes when he said:

A breath of noble verse outlives all that can be carved in stone or cast in bronze.

The world loves to manifest its appreciation of the great and noble lives and deeds of men and women by building monuments to their memories, and it is right and beautiful to do so; but great deeds and the noble acts of men live after they are gone longer than the marble monuments erected by grateful people to their memory.

Mr. President, it was my fortune to know Senator KYLE before he came to this Senate, and while he was yet a student. As the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has referred to the Illinois University, the institution at Champaign, in my State, I may say that on one occasion, when I had occasion to go there, I met this young man, as he was then, and I had quite a talk with him. But after I left there I lost thought of him, until finally he was introduced to me here in the Senate after he had been elected. I expressed my delight at meeting him, whereupon he reminded me that he had met me before. I asked him when? He said, "On the occasion when you came to the university to make an address, and I was there as a student." I then remembered him, and it occurred to me that in this country to-day a boy is at school and to-morrow he is in the Senate of the United States.

His father and family reside in the State I have the honor to in part represent. He was raised on a farm, surrounded by right influences and taught by parents to be honest, sober, and industrious. Honesty, sobriety, and industry are the essential foundations for a useful and successful life. Without these great essentials in character, talent and even genius go for naught.

Senator KYLE, soon after his entrance into the Senate, was made chairman of the important Committee on Education and Labor. He held the position at the time of his death, and was also a member of the important committees on Territories and Pensions. His inclination was to deal with educational and labor questions. His mind inclined to such subjects. He was always specially interested in the success of schools and colleges and also in the laborers of the country, and thought, rightly, that as between the poor and the rich, the poor man was entitled to be specially cared for and protected in these days of combinations of capital and organized trusts. Hence he was, by his own request, placed on committees having the subjects of education and labor in charge.

He had much to do with the passage of the act creating the Industrial Commission, which only recently finished its labors and which has given to the country a large number of volumes, containing a vast amount of information touching the relation of labor and capital. He was appointed a member of that Commission, and naturally was made its chairman.

Mr. President, Senator KYLE was a church and Christian man, and his life was guided by the principles of justice and Christianity. It was said of Sidney that he was a Christian, but a Christian in his own way. The same might be said of any man who is a Christian. But the remark was perhaps made of Sidney because he did not observe the forms or ceremonies of the church, but yet possessed the true Christian spirit. Senator KYLE early became an avowed Christian, in word and deed, and, as such, his works and faith were known of all men with whom he was associated.

Senator KYLE was elected to the State senate and to the United States Senate, the first time, as a Populist. He became such during the excitement, in the West especially, on the question of the free coinage of silver. He was elected the second time as an Independent, but was supported by the Republicans of his State. He acted substantially with the Republican party in the Senate during his second term until his death.

Senator KYLE died in the prime of his manhood, surrounded by those most dear to him, having the confidence of his constituents and the respect and esteem of his colleagues in the Senate.

But the grave is not the end. We look beyond to the great fact of immortality, and we cling to the thought that we are immortal; that there is light and life beyond the grave.

There is no death; what seems so is transition.
This life of mortal breath
Is but the suburb of that life Elysian
Whose portal we call death.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, in speaking of a Senator from the new States of the Northwest I can not separate the recollection of his services from the great and unique region of our country that has been the theater of his labors. If he has won the esteem of the people of that country, there is an eminence in that fact that gives tone and strength to his reputation after he has passed away. On this crowning mesa of the continent there is everything to attract the spirit of American enterprise, to gratify the pride that the whole world feels in honorable success, to promise rich rewards for toilsome and courageous effort, and to fix devotion to free republican institutions in faithful and intrepid hearts.

The Senator, in honor of whose memory these obsequies are observed, worked strongly, steadily, courageously, and with honorable success in this great field of American progress, and his memory is honored by those with whom he worked.

The Alpine regions of Europe have been the nurseries of a people for many ages who have been renowned for public and private virtues, and we have in these mountain lands of our Northwest a home in which many noble and true generations will be reared. The rooftree planted there will spread its prosperous branches in peace, and no storms will be strong enough to uproot it.

It is a land of wonderful natural features, the native land of strong, bold, and strenuous manhood.

Many Switzerlands are congregated in this vast tableau, with their towering Mont Blancs and Matterhorns that celebrate, in their silent grandeur, the sublime power of the creative hand.

It is beyond our present comprehension to realize the wealth of beauty, strength, and progress that in a thousand years will be developed on the mountain slopes and in the valleys of this great divide that forms the watershed between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. The farms, the orchards, the vineyards whose roots are nurtured in beds that are rich with the salts that extinct volcanoes have lifted to the surface, and, far beneath them, mines of useful and precious metals; the farmhouses, chalets, towns, and cities that will rise in the picturesque landscape, and the churches that will lift their spires above them all to testify the eternal and supreme truth of Christianity as the solid foundation of all human progress, will come forth as the fruits of peaceful industry and good government.

Those who have labored to institute this crowning glory of the Republic and are yet engaged in adjusting its strong foundations can work in peace and security such as the builders of commonwealths have never heretofore enjoyed.

So balanced in equal counterpoise will be the sovereign States that will complete the perfect union when statehood has invested all our territorial area with the organized sovereignty of the people that aggressive men will not dream of conflicts to gratify their selfish ambitions. The people for whom the Senators of the Northwest are providing and for whose prosperity Senator KYLE labored will never hear the tramp of moving armies unless they are summoned to the frontier of the Republic to resist the invasion of some foreign enemy.

I almost envy the Senators of the great Northwest the opportunity to legislate for a homogeneous people, and I bid them all godspeed in their great and peaceful labors.

Senator KYLE was of your number, and he worked also in harmony with the Senators from all the States for the general welfare as he comprehended it; and I honor him for the quiet, sincere, and earnest zeal that was the chief characteristic of his work in the Senate.

The birth of a sovereign State in the American Union is an event of the most important and majestic character, and such a Commonwealth is the most symmetrical and beautiful creation of political power. It is the child of peace and fraternity, created in the councils of patriotic love, and is crowned a representative sovereign, whose realm is the hearts of the people and whose sole inspiration is the good of mankind.

The birth of a sovereign State in the American Union is a marvelous achievement of the growth and development of the principles of right government, which stands at the head of all progress in statecraft and social advancement.

While this event is possible there can be no reverse movement in the upward and onward march of civilization.

Whether the birthplace of a State is in a wilderness, or in the distant islands of tropical seas, or is in the land where ice and snow seal up life in keeping for a physical resurrection and substitute for the absent sun the beautiful northern light, there is one unfailing truth that witnesses the legitimacy of the sovereign power of a State of the American Union and presides at its advent to crown it with authority that can not perish. That truth is proclaimed in the Declaration of our Independence. The one immortal and imperishable institution that can not die while time shall last is the sovereignty of a State under our Constitution and form of Government, vitalized by the sovereign will of the people.

Such a nativity is not an imitation or copy of the Kingdom that was born in the manger at Bethlehem. But it is the legitimate fruit of the greatest of events and a reproduction of the principles and rights of government then for the first time established.

The principle is that sovereignty resides in the soul of the individual man, not in his ancestral strain of blood, and the right is self-government; and the sanction that alone can sustain the principle and secure the right is individual responsibility to the demands of duty that they enjoin, with corresponding liberty of action.

No social right decreed to mankind was more important, in this divine nativity of representative and responsible government, than the equality of rights which the King of Kings established when He laid aside His crown and changed the relation He bore to His people, the liege subjects of the Kingdom of David, into a brotherhood in which all were made His equals in the exercise of personal rights.

The political truth established in that renunciation of absolute power over men who are responsible is the soul of free government. Until that truth perishes free self-government can not fail, and while such government exists liberty can not die.

I hold firmly to the conviction that the powers of sovereign statehood in the American Union are the highest, the most beneficent, and the most firmly secured that can be devised by human wisdom. I believe that all nations will ultimately become educated to understand their value, will approve their form and principles, and will adopt them, because they are true and just. A century hence it may be as difficult to find a ruler who claims royal prerogatives through the divine right to rule as it is now to find one who claims to be a descendant of Jupiter or of any of the gods of mythology in Greece or Rome.

Believing this, I do not fear to witness the extension of the sovereignty of the people into new areas of the world, and I feel assured that each addition to the number of States in this great Republic, made in accordance with the principles of our Government, will add strength to the entire Union, will increase the separate strength of each of the sovereign members of this great Republic of republics, and will equally secure justice to all, the least and the greatest alike.

Each jewel that shone resplendent in the diadems of liberty that sat upon the brows of the old thirteen States like a sunburst of glory, has grown brighter by the addition of each of the thirty-two States that have since been added to increase the sublime effulgence, and no State has lost its distinctive honors or powers in this grand congregation, represented here in the Senate.

To what extent this Union may be enlarged by the admission of new States will always be determined by our convenience, as occasion may present, when, according the free will of the people to be admitted to these high honors, powers, and privileges lawfully expressed, they are prepared for admission and seek it.

When and where we shall find the just and convenient limit of the expansion of the Union must depend upon the sense of duty that Congressmen yet unborn shall recognize and obey. We are not their creators, their mentors, or their judges. Neither will they recognize us as being their masters, with the right to pledge them to fixed policies as to the limits of this Republic. We can only appeal to existing facts and to the traditional policies of the United States to justify our own action and to convince them that aggression is not the motive of any act of ours, and that Congress has always been slow, considerate, and careful when moving in the direction of territorial expansion. If we leave them a just example, we will have no need to leave them pledges, instructions, or advice.

Our growth has not been ambitious or aggressive. States that we might well have admitted into the Union, with immense advantage to them and with no harm to us, have applied to us with prayers for annexation that we have refused. In this we have been reluctant even to obey the calls of duty, and other people have suffered because we excluded them from the blessings we enjoy. For no people can possibly be harmed by being admitted to the sisterhood of our sovereign States.

Between the 2d of November, 1889, and the 10th of July, 1890, six great States in one magnificent group were born into the Union of our Federal Constitution. They were North Dakota and South Dakota, the twin stars of the galaxy, Montana, Washington, Idaho, and Wyoming.

In eight months six imperishable sovereignties sprang from the will of the people and were accepted by Congress into the perfect vigor and full equipment of great commonwealths.

No pageantry celebrated their inauguration. No drop of royal blood established their title or quickened their impulses of life or sealed their right to sovereign attributes. No strife, bloodshed, revolution, or agitation had attended their birth or had laid their solid foundations. They were born to a strong, happy, and renowned future, as strong as the granite mountain ranges that hold their vast plains within their embracing walls, as bright as the streams that pour from their bosoms, and as pure as the snows that crown their lofty heights; and they were born to honors that liberty will forever acclaim.

The birth of these six States was an event to arouse the world with joy. Yet the breath of fame was not clamorous at their coming, but was content to whisper their advent to the listening multitudes of people who were eagerly waiting in silence for the message which invited them to put on the robes of sovereignty, to enter into the possession of the rights and powers of self-government, and take upon themselves the obligations and duties of the full powers of American statehood and a place and a name among the sovereign powers of the world.

The homeless man, even of other countries, was invited to become the owner in fee of a landed domain and to build upon it for his family, and, whether it would be a shack, humbly hiding itself in the earth, or a mansion, framed in tasteful architecture, he was invited to write over the portal the one word "Home," and to possess in that sacred word the fullness of human happiness. And they came in multitudes, rejoicing.

The Dakotas, one in spirit, but separated in sovereign authority, each had its high mission in which they worked together. In spirit they were "the voice of one crying in the wilderness," and when the people flocked to the call, that vast and beautiful land was dedicated to the sovereignty of the people, and was set apart by their will, in separate sovereign statehood, and Congress consented.

Among these thronging pioneers was a young man, not distinguished by birth or fortune from others in the same walk of life. It was not a lowly walk that was pursued by these young pioneers. It measured up to the grandeur of nature which sat upon that land in beautiful but simple dignity. These pioneer youths confronted the toils of that wilderness region with the same firm and adventurous spirit that nerved the men of earlier generations to subdue the land of other and wilder regions. A spirit of wrestling with the trials of frontier life, which has left its deep impression upon the character of millions of people and makes them distinctively American, had entered the heart of young KYLE while he was in Kentucky under the care of his aged grandfather, who was among the noble band of pioneers in "the dark and bloody ground."

When he emigrated to Dakota he caught the inspiration of the people, and it gave him purpose and strength to work with them and for them in all the lines of duty. Desiring to serve his fellow-man and to encourage a people he loved in every good work, he conceived that his duty led him to the ministry of the gospel.

In this vocation there is always a furnace of trial that proves the man. He was faithful to his calling, and engaged the confidence of the people. He was earnest in his work, and when they needed an earnest worker they called for him. He stood erect and firm in his character, and did not stoop from his high calling to take up another less conspicuous for its purity. He did not rise to the occasion, but the occasion rose with him, and through the esteem of the people who followed and supported him he found no embarrassment in representing them in their political capacity. The people sought him out, and he reluctantly consented to serve them.

It is a cruel trait that causes all of us to suspect the purity of a Christian who lays aside the sacred robes to do the work that a political career is supposed to require. It is the character of the political vocation that, after all, provokes such criticism; and if a minister can become a politician without doing harm to his cloth, he deserves the greater credit.

He made a speech at the celebration of the Fourth of July, being substituted for the orator of the occasion who had failed to attend. The next day he was nominated by the Independents for the legislature, for the want of a politician who would venture the chances of election. To his great surprise he was elected. The want of party harmony in the legislature caused factions of the two great parties to prevent the choice of some distinguished man, and they united on Mr. KYLE and elected him to the Senate of the United States.

Within a year after he gave up his charge as a Christian minister he took his seat in this Chamber.

In this rapid evolution of a State and of a Senator to represent it there was no risk to good government, but there is a lesson that all Americans may study with satisfaction as to the character of our people and their institutions.

In the observations I had the opportunity to make as to Mr. KYLE's daily walk and conversation, I am glad to be among those who bear testimony to the upright and earnest integrity of his conduct as a Senator. I was glad to enjoy his friendship, whatever political differences we had, and some of them were serious.

The Senators from these six new States that I have had the honor to meet in this body are the worthy representatives of a magnificent country and of a people who are building up those Commonwealths on the most advanced lines of enterprise, activity, and skill with unparalleled success. Among those Mr. KYLE was an earnest, intelligent, and faithful worker.

Naturally, these builders of new and great Commonwealths are absorbed in the local and practical duties that rest almost exclusively upon them, but all here will bear witness that this Government at large and in all of its new and vast interests within and beyond the continental limits leans with security upon the stalwart patriotism and wise counsel and learning of this body of statesmen, but recently intrusted with the highest powers and most important trusts of this great Republic.

I rejoice that it was my privilege to support the rapid and almost violent expansion that added 12 Senators to this body in the period of eight months. Since I have witnessed that marvelous growth of the great Republic and its splendid results I have not feared that it would lose its self-control, even if it should reach out its arms to rescue any people from the evils of monarchic rule who are willing and ready to be saved.

The wider the reach of its power or influence the greater will be our need for adhering to constitutional government strictly construed and administered in the unselfish, just, and equitable spirit of a true American democracy.

If our principles of government are adapted only to a certain race of people, and to certain geographical boundaries and limits of jurisdiction, they fail to coincide with the best hopes of mankind. They are adapted to all climes where homes are found and altars are dedicated to Christian worship.

The breath of liberty that warms the American citizen with patriotic ardor in the ice fields of Alaska will cool the hot impulse that engenders seditious strife in the tropical lands, if we will clothe them also with the honors, liberties, and responsibilities of American citizenship. American liberty teaches one lesson to all her votaries. It is graven in the language and spirit of a written creed, an organic law, that is inviolable. It consecrates personal rights and bestows political privileges on such as are prepared to exercise them for the general welfare. Its lessons, once learned, are never forgot.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am always reluctant to speak on occasions of this character and never do so except only from a sense of duty or some kind of obligation. I feel prompted in that way in this instance.

JAMES H. KYLE was born in Ohio, and, as we have been told in the speeches to which we have been listening, he was educated in Ohio and married in Ohio. I may say, in addition, what has not yet been said by any other, that he spent a good part of his time in Ohio after he had ceased to be a citizen of our State. So it is. Mr. President, that, although he did not represent Ohio in this body and never represented the State in any capacity, so far as I am aware, yet he was so identified with the people of that State that they took a keen interest in his welfare. They noted his career, they rejoiced at his successes, and they mourn more, perhaps, than the people of any other State, except the one he represented, because of his early demise.

He belonged to a class—a pretty large one—of which Ohio is proud. I refer to that class who, born in Ohio, have moved to other States, and from them have entered public life and led distinguished careers. Among these are many who have become members of this body, representing other States of the Union.

I had occasion recently to look at the record in that respect, and I was surprised to find how many members there have been of this body who, born in Ohio, have come here representing other States—more, I may say than there were of those who, born in Ohio, have represented that State in this body. I think, all told, there have been but seven native-born Ohioans to represent that State as Senators. The State of Indiana alone has sent as many native-born Ohioans to represent her here. Other States have been generous to our sons.

But, however the record may stand, as we all know, the class is a large one, and the people of Ohio are justly proud of all who, going out from their midst, have won the honor and distinction involved in being sent to represent their adopted Commonwealths in this body. Mr. KYLE belonged to that class. Therefore it was that we had an interest in him, and that I felt attracted to him when I became a member of this body.

He was a modest, unassuming man, who devoted himself to his duties, and unless you cultivated his acquaintance you were not likely to know him familiarly. I was so thrown with him that I came to know him and to appreciate him as being possessed of all the good qualities for which he has been commended here to-day.

He was not only a modest and unassuming man and a faithful and devoted public servant, but he was, as has been truthfully said, a Christian gentleman, a man of culture and refinement, a man who devoted himself principally in his public duties to educational matters and to the uplifting of the laboring classes of his countrymen in so far as he could contribute thereto.

Such a man is of great value because of the example he is to others. Such a life can not be lived in vain. All who study it find that a man can be distinguished in public life, that he can take part in practical politics, can be elected to office, can engage in campaigns and be identified with political parties without sacrificing his moral character in any respect.

It is the testimony of all who knew him, as it has been the testimony of all who have spoken here to-day, that he never forgot his manhood or his moral obligations, but was true at all times to both. His career well illustrates the possibilities and opportunities of our American life. He was not only self-made, but he was unusually successful. He was a graduate, a teacher, a minister of the Gospel, a State senator, and for more than ten years a United States Senator, and all this in the short life of 47 years. The country may well be proud of such a citizen, and his State, as its Senator [Mr. GAMBLE] beautifully said in the opening address of these exercises, may well mourn for one who so honored her.

I do not feel called upon, Mr. President, in view of the eulogies which have already been pronounced, in view of the detailed account which has been given of his life and his public services, to extend my remarks. I rose only that I might, as representing in part the State in which he was born and a State, the people of which are interested in him, join in a tribute to his memory and in saying that the life he lived will be an inspiration to all who study it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, less than a generation ago the great plains of the Dakotas were a wilderness occupied by roaming bands of savages and buffalo, but before long the advancing tide of American civilization swept over those great plains, and there was an invasion of immigrants pouring in from all quarters of the New World, as well as the Old, to occupy the virgin fields of that great domain.

Among those pioneers, one of the most progressive men who joined in that great advance guard, was Senator KYLE. He went there in the early days and endured all the vicissitudes and hardships of frontier life. He went there as a minister of the gospel, to minister, first of all, to the spiritual wants of his neighbors; but he was a man so constituted that he did not confine his work wholly to that sphere. He cooperated with his neighbors in promoting the political and material improvement of that great country.

As a minister of the gospel—and I have the testimony of one of his neighbors, an old teacher of mine—he was a most fervent, thorough, and eloquent preacher; and as a pioneer settler he was one of the most progressive and most neighborly, one of those pioneers who would share his last loaf and his last penny with his fellow homestead settler. He was not by nature and makeup a partisan, as we understand that term in politics.

When the hard times swept over the Northwest in the early nineties, it came to the Dakotas as it came to all the States west of the Mississippi River with distress and misery in its wake. The people of the country became restless. They sought legislative and political reform. They felt that some assistance, some relief, some help, could be secured through new party organization, through new legislation. Those men embued with these hopes and aspirations we called Populists. Some of us were disposed to regard them with unfriendly criticism; but while they aimed to secure reform on new lines and in new ways—while they differed with both of the old parties—they were not actuated by that spirit of socialism and anarchy which we find existing among the lower classes of the Old World. They were zealous and real reformers, and above all they were intensely loyal, everyone of them, to the flag and institutions of our country.

In the midst of that wave of reform—for I can call it nothing else, with which I sympathized, although I was not part of it—in the midst of that wave of reform in that young frontier State, the neighbors of Senator KYLE all turned to him, the young clergyman, who had come there from the State of Ohio and had cast his lot in their midst. They turned to him, and looked to him as one of their leaders. He was elected to the legislature, not by his own seeking, but as the first choice of his neighbors. It was a case where the office sought the man, and not the man the office. In the legislature he became one of its most efficient, industrious, and energetic members; and soon, in the political upheaval which took place in those stirring and restless times, he was sent here to the halls of Congress.

We are all familiar with his work here. While he was not one of the great constructive statesmen, yet he was one of those strong and efficient men that constitute the scaffolding on which the great Republic is reared and rests. He was one of that trained army of men who constitute the foundation and bulwark of American institutions. Here, as in the pulpit and on the frontier, he was a quiet, modest man. He made but few speeches, but whenever he addressed the Senate he always had something to say—some facts and solid arguments to offer. It was not with him a mere matter of lip service, a mere matter of delivering an oration. He spoke to elucidate and to instruct. He was a most industrious and energetic member of this body, and always devoted to the work before him.

He was particularly interested in the welfare of the laboring man. He was one of the leading members of the Industrial Commission, and into that great work his whole heart and soul entered. I frequently talked with him about the work of the Commission, and I never met a man who was so enthusiastic and so deeply interested in the task before him as was Senator KYLE in the work of that Commission.

Mr. President, it is always sad and always a loss to part with one of our associates here, but in parting with Senator KYLE we feel that we part with one who was a good, an honest, and a most useful member of this body; we feel that we part with one who had the true interests of his people and his country at heart. I remember well speaking with him in his last sickness—and it was a long and lingering sickness. He felt as though his task here was done, and still as if there was something more for him to do which he would like to accomplish. He said to me: "I feel as though my race was run, as though my end were near, and yet, after all, with all the great work before me, I have a desire to live in order that I may do some more good."

That spirit which actuates the honest and noble minister of the gospel he never parted with, even in the midst of his political work and his work in this Chamber. He was always in all his work imbued with the spirit of the reformer and the spirit of the true Christian. He had nothing of the partisan in his make-up. He was essentially a reformer. He acted with the Populists and Democrats as long as the reforms he sought for seemed most likely to be reached through those channels, but when he became convinced that more good could be accomplished and more substantial relief secured through the Republican party he had no hesitancy in cooperating with that party. He aimed at results—beneficial results—rather than party advantage or party affiliation. It were better for our country that more of our public men were possessed of such a spirit of independence. He is with us no more, but the spirit and purpose of the work he wrought will abide with us forevermore.

Mr. President, standing, as it were, around the bier of our departed brother, I feel like repeating, as I have no doubt Senator KYLE repeated in his last moments, and as we all in our better and sadder moments feel like repeating, those beautiful words of the great poet of the South:

My feet are wearied, and my hands are tired,
My soul oppressed,
And I desire, what I have long desired—
Rest—only rest.

My way has wound across the desert years,
And cares infest
My path, and through the flowing of hot tears
I pine—for rest.

'Twas always so; when but a child I laid
On mother's breast
My wearied little head; e'en then I prayed
As now—for rest.

And I am restless still; 'twill soon be o'er;
For down the west
Life's sun is setting, and I see the shore
Where I shall rest.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, Senator KYLE died the early evening of July 1, 1901. He was buried the afternoon of July 4, eleven years—almost to an hour—after he delivered an address which gave him a seat in this body. Since his serious illness at Cleveland, September, 1898, he had not been well, although his appearance otherwise indicated. His vitality was gone. The wire and fiber of his constitution was wasted and worn, and a complication of ills overtaking him, the thread of life was easily broken, and in a few days he crossed the dark river. The Christian faith, his guide through life, sustained the departing spirit, and with perfect confidence he beheld the opening scenes of his eternity.

JAMES HENDERSON KYLE was born at Cedarville, near Xenia, Greene County, Ohio, February 24, 1854, and was the second of a family of six children—three brothers and three sisters—of whom one brother and two sisters survive. His father, Thomas B., was born at the Kyle homestead, near Xenia, Ohio, January 24, 1824, and when 7 years of age moved with his father to the then Territory of Kentucky. When it was admitted as a slave State they returned to the Senator's birthplace and near where his father was born. The father served as a Union soldier and officer in the civil war, and in the fall of 1865 with his family moved to Urbana, Champaign County, Ill., where he still resides. The influencing reason for the selection of this home was on account of the proposed location of the State University, affording an opportunity for the education of his children. The Senator's grandfather was born in Pennsylvania in 1773 of parents who came from Scotland to this country in a very early day. The Senator's great-grandfather, with six brothers, served their country during the Revolutionary war. His mother, Jane Henderson, was born in Westmoreland County, Pa., May 30, 1829, of parents who came from the north part of Ireland.

While living at Xenia, Ohio, the Senator attended the common schools and received his primary education. At Urbana he graduated from the high school and entered the State University at Champaign in 1871. Not being able to secure the course of study he desired, he entered Oberlin College, Ohio, in 1873, and graduated from that institution in 1878. While attending school and the University of Illinois he worked on a farm during vacation, and when at Oberlin College he also worked on a farm and taught school to defray his expenses, and very largely supported himself while obtaining his education. He then entered the Western Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Pa., where he wholly sustained himself by giving private lessons in Greek, Latin, and mathematics until his graduation, in 1882.

April 27, 1881, he was married at Cincinnati, Ohio, to Miss Anna Isabel Dugot, who, with two children, Miss Ethelwyn and James H. Kyle, jr., survive.

After graduating from the seminary and receiving his license to preach, he accepted service with the Board of Home Missions and located at Mount Pleasant, Utah. There he had charge of a seminary in connection with his church duties. To secure a climate more healthful to his wife, he removed to the then Territory, now State, of South Dakota, in 1885, and was in charge of the Congregational Church at Ipswich, in that State, until 1889, when he removed to Aberdeen and became pastor of the First Congregational Church.

At a celebration of the Fourth of July, 1890, at Aberdeen, he delivered a memorable address. A spirit of political unrest prevailed in the State and an advanced position was taken in the remedies proposed. This speech attracted marked attention and provoked much discussion, not only at his home, but throughout the State, and from that date he was well known by all its people. The next day the "Independents" of his senatorial district held their convention, and without effort and against his will a unanimous nomination was tendered. His election followed, and early in January, 1891, the duties of office were assumed. From this period in his career a personal recollection dates.

He was a man of imposing presence, a fine specimen of physical manhood and intellectual force—vigorous in mind, acts, and the accomplishment of results.

To the duties of this office he applied himself with rare fidelity and honesty of purpose, and he immediately won the respect, confidence, and esteem of his colleagues in that body. Although inexperienced in legislation, his evident desire to be right and do right was apparent, and his industry, kindness, and courtesy was unfailing. A just measure commanded his support with the certainty that day follows night, and in the perfection of details he never wearied.

February 16, 1891, he was chosen United States Senator to succeed Gideon C. Moody, receiving the combined Independent and Democratic votes. In 1897 he was reelected for a second term expiring March 3, 1903. During his term of office he served on the Committees of Indian Affairs, Patents, Territories, Pensions, Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, Indian Depredations, Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, and was Chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Senator KYLE's ability for hard and effective work was fully recognized in his appointment as chairman of the United States Industrial Commission, created by act of Congress of June 18, 1898, and the volumes of testimony taken under his personal direction and supervision and his exhaustive reports upon the subject justified the confidence reposed. He did not live to see the completion of the work of the Commission; but the vast amount of testimony and the great variety of subjects covered in the report show that the plans were well conceived and carried to a successful conclusion. The work done by the Commission will undoubtedly be of great assistance in shaping future legislation.

Another notable and salutary Congressional act proposed and accomplished by him was the designation of Labor Day and making it a national holiday. For all time will this day be recognized and observed by the laborer and his friends. Labor never had a better friend than Senator KYLE, and no one better understood its needs or extended a more sympathetic and helpful hand. As a boy he worked upon the farm to aid in securing the education he so eagerly sought and highly prized; as a man and Senator he did not forget the labor of his youth. His experience taught him the true dignity of labor and its necessity in every walk of life.

In time of the nation's danger party politics are laid aside and animosities forgotten. In the events leading up to and during the Spanish-American war Senator KYLE was not an exception to this rule, although not identified with the party in power. He stood loyally with the President and fearlessly supported the Administration in war measures and in every detail which would assure a speedy and successful termination of the conflict.

When the war ended, Senator KYLE earnestly and consistently worked to secure the ratification of the treaty of peace. He did not stop here. As a true American he kept pace with the progress of our country's development, cheerfully, courageously, and hopefully accepting the burdens necessarily assumed as the result of the war.

Time does not permit a detailed statement of his services as a member of this body, but the accurate and eloquent tributes of affection and esteem paid his memory by Senators who knew him best show the record and impression he made. He performed every duty to which he was assigned with conspicuous zeal, industry, and ability. His patient attention to the details of business, even when pressed upon him by those not entitled, indicate the kind heart which always influenced him, and his candor and fairness inspired all with confidence.

In manner he was unassuming, caring little for society, bending his whole energy to the performance of official duties. He was charitable in act and thought. His modest, quiet, kindly way endeared him to a host of friends, who mourned his loss with personal grief.

He was a dutiful son, of tender sensibilities and noble impulses, a kind and loving husband and father, an upright, pure, and courteous gentleman, most loved by those who knew him best.

When death called him he was at the zenith of his power, absorbed in public duties with such energy that he was unable to withstand the strain, and the desire, unconsciously in his mind, found expression in his last words, evidencing as well his Christian faith, "Now I shall rest."

Mr. President, I move the adoption of the resolutions submitted by my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from South Dakota.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 21, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 19, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read, corrected, and approved.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES IN HONOR OF WILLIAM M'KINLEY.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask the present consideration of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the House an amount not exceeding $1,094.40 for expenses incurred in connection with the exercises held in the House of Representatives February 27, 1902, in memory of William McKinley, late President of the United States, upon vouchers approved by the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the same.

The resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CHATTAHOOCHEE RIVER AT COLUMBUS, GA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13246) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Chattahoochee River between Columbus, Ga., and Eufaula, Ala., or in the city of Columbus, Ga., with the committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13246) which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill and amendments at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question being taken, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT AT KANSAS CITY, KANS.

Mr. BOWERSOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7642) to amend "An act to create a third division of the district of Kansas for judicial purposes, and to fix the times for holding court therein," approved May 3, 1892, and repealing all acts and parts of acts in conflict therewith.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That terms of the circuit and district courts for the judicial district of Kansas shall be hereafter held in said State at the city of Kansas City on the second Monday of January and the second Monday of June of each year.

SEC. 2. That all civil suits wherein any one of the defendants reside in Wyandotte County, in said State, shall hereafter be filed and shall be triable at said city of Kansas City, unless a change of venue be granted as provided by law.

SEC. 3. That the transcripts of the record of each suit hereafter removed from the State courts of said Wyandotte County to the circuit court of said district shall be filed and the suit shall be triable at said Kansas City, unless a change of venue be granted as provided by law.

SEC. 4. That all the parties to a suit filed elsewhere in said district than at Kansas City may file a stipulation in writing agreeing to and consenting that such suit be transferred for trial to said Kansas City, and on filing such stipulation the clerk shall enter the order of the court transferring such suit according to such stipulation, and it shall be thereafter triable at said Kansas City, and the clerk shall place such suit on the proper docket for trial at the next term of said court to be held at Kansas City. But the judgments in said suit shall be entered upon the records of the court where said suit was originally brought, and all of the files and papers shall be returned to the clerk thereof.

SEC. 5. That the clerk of the circuit court of said district shall appoint a deputy who shall reside and maintain his office at the city of Kansas City; the clerk of the district court of said district shall appoint a deputy who shall reside and maintain his office at the city of Kansas City; the marshal of said district shall appoint a deputy who shall reside and maintain his office in the city of Kansas City, and in the absence of said clerks, or either of them, or the said marshal, said deputies shall respectively exercise the powers and perform all the duties of their principals: Provided, That the clerk of the circuit court and the clerk of the district court of said district may appoint the same person to act as deputy clerk of both of said courts: Provided further, That the appointment of such deputies shall be approved by the judge of the court for which they shall be respectively appointed, and they may be removed by such court at pleasure; and the clerk and marshal shall respectively be responsible for the official acts and neglects of all their deputies.

SEC. 6. That all crimes and offenses against the laws of the United States hereafter committed within the county of Wyandotte in said district shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined at the terms of the district court held at Kansas City: Provided, That no grand jury shall be called to sit at Kansas City except upon the order of the district judge; but all indictments for offenses committed within said counties shall be found by the grand jury at Topeka or Leavenworth: Provided further, That all such crimes or offenses heretofore committed within such counties shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 7. That all civil and criminal suits and proceedings now pending in the circuit or district court of said district which would, if instituted after the passage of this act, be required to be tried at Kansas City are hereby transferred to Kansas City, to be there disposed of in the same manner and with like effect as if the same had been there instituted; and all processes, writs, and recognizances relating to such suits and proceedings so transferred shall be considered as taken at and returnable to the terms of court to be held at Kansas City in the same manner and with like effect as if they had been issued or taken in reference thereto originally.

SEC. 8. That all acts and parts of acts so far as in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill as read?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman give us a brief explanation of the bill and the offices it creates, if any. As I understand the bill, it does not create a new court or a new judge, but it provides an additional place for holding the United States court. Now, how many new offices are created and what additional expense is to be incurred by the bill?

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the bill comes from the Judiciary Committee unanimously recommended. It does not create any new office, it does not add a penny of expense to the United States, except incidental to holding the court. On the other hand, it will save more expense than it will create by reason of having this court held in Kansas City, a very large city. It, in effect, creates a new division and simply provides for the holding of a court in that division.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understood it created some additional clerk or assistant clerk.

Mr. RAY of New York. No; it does not. It provides that the clerk shall appoint a deputy, who shall reside there. Of course that creates no additional fees whatever.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question now is on agreeing to the substitute amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended as recommended by the committee.

There was no objection.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10847) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER NEAR SHREVEPORT, LA.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12867) to authorize the Shreveport Bridge and Terminal Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Red River in the State of Louisiana at or near Shreveport.

The bill and amendments recommended by the committee were read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 715.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 715) to provide for two additional associate justices of the supreme court of the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the supreme court of the Territory of Oklahoma shall consist of a chief justice and six associate justices, any four of whom shall constitute a quorum, but four judges must concur to render an opinion reversing a judgment or other determination of the district court.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint two additional associate justices of said supreme court, who shall hold their office for the term of four years, or until their successors are appointed and qualified, and the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court of said Territory shall each receive as compensation the sum of $4,000 per annum.

SEC. 3. That the Territory shall be divided into seven judicial districts, and a district court shall be held in each county, as now provided by law. The supreme court of said Territory shall define said judicial districts and shall fix the times and places at each county seat in each district where the district court shall be held and designate the judge who shall preside therein. Each judge, after assignment, shall reside in the district to which he is assigned. The supreme court of said Territory, or the chief justice thereof, may designate any judge to try a particular case or cases in any district or to hold the district court in any other district when the judge of said district is absent from his district or has been of counsel or is of kin to either party to the action or interested or biased or prejudiced in the cause, or if for any other reason said judge is disqualified or unable to hold said court.

SEC. 4. That the district court in each of said districts shall have the same jurisdiction that district courts of said Territory now possess.

SEC. 5. That the supreme court, or any justice thereof, shall have power to stay the execution or enforcement of any judgment or final order in any cause taken to said court by appeal or proceedings in error on such terms as may be prescribed by the court or justice granting such stay.

SEC. 6. That no justice of the supreme court of said Territory shall sit as a member of said court or participate in the trial, hearing, or decision of any case decided by him in the district court or in which he has any interest.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

After the word "court," in line 11, page 1, insert the following: "who shall have been residents of said Territory for at least one year, and.".

After the word "and," in line 12, page 1, insert the word "have."

After the word "thousand," in line 2, page 2, strike out the words "five hundred."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Judiciary Committee has considered this matter.

Mr. FLYNN. I will say to the gentleman that it is a unanimous report from the Committee on the Judiciary. The same bill was also favorably reported in the last Congress, prior to the opening of those new counties and the influx of this large new population last summer.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. A necessity exists for it, in the opinion of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. FLYNN. And I believe it is the opinion of everybody, if the gentleman please, who has looked into the situation. Oklahoma has over half a million people.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is a very current report that Oklahoma is to be admitted into the Union as a State. Does the gentleman think this will interfere in any way with the admission of Oklahoma?

Mr. FLYNN. I will state to the gentleman that I would not advocate this bill if I thought it would interfere. I would like to substitute the statehood bill for this.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will agree to that, if the gentleman will ask it.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. FLYNN. I would like to have the matter of consent for the consideration settled first.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to the consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to ask a question in regard to the amendment which provides that no appointment shall be made except from those who have resided in the Territory at least one year. I desire to know if that is not an unusual provision.

Mr. FLYNN. No; I do not think it is. I will say to the gentleman that that was in the bill as originally introduced, both in the House and in the Senate. The Senate have stricken out that provision, and the House committee, I believe, very righteously insisted upon its retention in the bill. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is just that all these officers in the Territory should be residents of the Territory.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to ask the gentleman if a provision of that kind has been made in other bills providing for the appointment of judges in Territories.

Mr. FLYNN. There is do question about it. You take the officers appointed under the recent bills that we have passed for all the new Territories. There has been an exception made, I believe, in the case of Porto Rico; but I remember well being in the committee and that it was insisted in the committee that these appointments should be from residents of the Territory. They ought to be.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no candidate for judge, but I hope the amendment suggested will not be adopted. I think the President of the United States should have the right to appoint men from any State or Territory of the Union as judges in Oklahoma, if he so desires, and it would be wrong to limit him to the Territory in making the appointment.

Mr. FLYNN. Would the gentleman believe in authorizing the President to send carpetbaggers to Kansas?

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, no; that is a different case. Kansas is an old settled State, but many people have gone to Oklahoma within the last year.

Mr. FLYNN. I feel the same about Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas demand a separate vote?

Mr. CURTIS. I demand a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11, page 1, after the word "court," insert "who shall have been residents of said Territory for at least one year, and"

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on that amendment. I think that the Committee on the Judiciary of the House acted with wisdom in putting this amendment on the bill. I can see no reason why these judicial positions down even in the Territory where the gentleman resides should be used as patronage for people who had never had their foot in that Territory before.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Judiciary Committee in putting that amendment on there was to stop this carpetbagism of which some of us in one section of the country have had a very baneful experience; and I hope that gentlemen on this side of the House will vote, without one exception, to maintain that amendment. It is proper and right, and ought to be there. If they have not enough good men in that Territory to furnish the judge of this court, they ought not to have a court. I believe it is competent that the President be confined in his selection to residents of that country.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FLEMING. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. Is the gentleman afraid to trust the President with this appointment?

Mr. FLEMING. Does the gentleman from Kansas think there are not competent men for this position in the Territory of Oklahoma?

Mr. CURTIS. There are hundreds of them. There are 16 candidates for the vacancy that already exists there. I think the President should appoint residents of the Territory, but it is not fair to tie his hands. If he desire to appoint a man from Ohio or Iowa, or any other State, he should have the right to do so.

Mr. FLEMING. My answer to the gentleman from Kansas is this: That so far as the present President is concerned, I consider him just as competent to make a selection to fill a judgeship as any other man who ever sat in the White House; but at the same time I say it is perfectly proper that we should limit him in that action to what is just to the Territory in the selection and appointment to a judgeship just as he is limited by law to similar judgeships, appointments to which are made in the States. Furthermore, a sort of indefinite rumor has reached our ears that there were certain parties trying to get the positions. I will not say where they are, but they had their eyes fixed upon these Government jobs with the express idea of getting them to the exclusion of men who are natives or now living as residents in the Territory. The Judiciary Committee did not believe it was the proper thing in the matter of appointments, and I hope the committee will stand up to the people in making that rule.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FLYNN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have no objection to the passage of the bill. I think it should pass. I think that this amendment should be limited so that parties—lawyers—living in this Territory would be eligible. In these three counties that were opened last summer there are three large towns—Lawton, Anadarko, and Hobart. There are many good lawyers in them. I think there probably ought to be a district in one of those towns, and there should be an opportunity for those men living in that part of Oklahoma to be appointed. That section of the Territory has been opened up less than twelve months, and of course those lawyers have not been there the twelve months, and I think it would be wrong to make these lawyers now living there ineligible to the position.

Mr. FLYNN. In reply to the gentleman from Texas, I want to say that there is no desire to bar anybody from Oklahoma. I want to say here and now, in fairness to all sides, that there is no desire on the part of the Delegate from Oklahoma or the Judiciary Committee to cast any reflection on the President of the United States. Were the provision not in this bill I am confident no carpetbagger would be sent there, but Territories have a right to look after their own interests in legislation. The gentleman from Kansas would object to a provision which permitted the importation into Kansas of outsiders to hold offices. I have as much confidence in the President of the United States as any man in America. Not only that, I expect to continue to have. I was one of those who had confidence in him when many other gentlemen who now profess confidence were wavering by the wayside. [Laughter and applause.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withhold his motion?

Mr. FLYNN. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would the gentleman permit an amendment striking out "twelve months," so that any citizen of Oklahoma would be eligible to the office? That would let in these other three counties.

Mr. FLYNN. I will say that the Judiciary Committee have reported the bill with this provision in it, and I do not like to change anything that they have reported.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many lawyers have lived in Oklahoma for twelve months previous to this time?

Mr. FLYNN. About 5,000, I guess.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I think this provision is entirely wise, and it should be adopted. I believe it is a safe and conservative rule always to select the officers for the people from among the people to be served, and I believe that there are as many competent, well-qualified lawyers to be found in Oklahoma, according to its population, as in any other similar Territory in this Union; men who will measure up to the standard of men in any other section of our great country can be found there well qualified to fill the judicial positions. I believe that the Judiciary Committee has done a wise thing to limit this selection of judges to the lawyers in Oklahoma Territory.

Now, I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that we ought to remove this limitation as to the period of residence, because if you do that you destroy the effect of the amendment and you permit a man to go in and reside there ten days before the appointment is made and claim citizenship and be appointed to a judgeship.

Mr. GROSVENOR rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FLYNN. I do.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I have no interest one way or the other in the question of whether this amendment shall be voted up or voted down. Here are 500,000 carpetbaggers living largely upon Government land, and they do not want any more carpetbaggers to come down there. [Laughter.] The whole gang of them, nine out of ten, have not lived there five years.

Now, they are shouting "carpetbag." They will shout "carpetbag" a long time before they get what they are asking for. The point I wanted to make was this: Has the gentleman from Oklahoma considered the question of limiting the power of the President of the United States in the appointment of an officer, the appointment of which is cast upon him as a duty by the Constitution? Over and over again it has been attempted; over and over again it has been defeated in the courts; and I think you might just as well describe the color of the eyes and the color of the hair as to undertake to say that you will limit the President in the exercise of the appointing power by a geographical limitation upon his right to appoint.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does the gentleman call this a constitutional court?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The constitutional power of the President to appoint relates to all courts in the Territories.

Mr. FLYNN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to be fair with the House, but I want to pass this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. FLYNN. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I only want to call attention to the fact that in a bill similar to this for the government of Hawaii, both the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] are recorded as in favor of a provision similar to this, which is home rule, and I compliment them on their vote. Both gentlemen voted for it. What does the gentleman from Ohio say to these provisions of the Hawaiian organic law? Section 66, on the subject of the appointment of governor, it reads, "shall be a citizen of the Territory of Hawaii;" on the subject of Territorial judges, it reads:

SEC. 80. All officers appointed under the provisions of this section shall be citizens of the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say I do not know now. I just asked the gentleman from Oklahoma in charge of the bill whether the question has been considered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It has been acted upon by the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That may be. We have passed many bills that I would not vote for again.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would the gentleman from Oklahoma be willing to strike out the provision for twelve months' residence and insert "who was a bona fide resident of Oklahoma on the 1st day of January, 1902?" That would let in these three counties.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, the Judiciary Committee have had this provision before them and considered it. In fairness to myself I want to say that there is no desire on my part to bar anybody. Good Lord, there will be a hundred candidates.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They can not come from these three counties.

Mr. FLYNN. They should not be barred.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This amendment that I propose would give the citizens of these three counties a chance to become candidates, but if this limitation of twelve months is put in they would be ineligible.

Mr. FLYNN. I have no objection to that amendment if it is acceptable to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. RAY of New York. With the permission of the gentleman——

Mr. FLYNN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, under the ordinary conditions existing in Territories of the United States newly formed, there would be no thought of making a restriction of this kind as to the residence of the appointee, because it might be in Territories sparsely populated that the President could not find a man thoroughly competent to hold the office of judge of the Territorial court. When competent men can be found in the Territory, the appointments should be given them. There should be home rule so far as possible, consistent with the proper administration of justice. And men appointed to judicial positions should be selected because of peculiar fitness, experience, and qualifications. They should come from the localities in which they are to serve, so far as possible, because they are better acquainted with the people. They should come from the Territory in which they are to serve because acquainted with the laws of the Territory, having studied them and practiced in the courts where administered. No man should be made judge of the United States courts or of a Territorial court unless thoroughly versed in the laws he is to interpret and administer.

But the conditions in Oklahoma are peculiar. They have a large and intelligent population, and they have a large number of lawyers who have settled there, gentlemen of great ability and high character; so there is no question in my mind that these offices ought to be filled by persons who are now residents of that Territory.

And I think that the President would select such persons for appointment. That was the setiment of the committee. The committee was substantially unanimous in the opinion and desire that this restriction be made. I do not know, of course, what the Senate will think about the question. I presume the bill will go into conference anyway and the question can be settled there and proper limitations made, if necessary.

In regard to a question suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] I wish to say that there is no constitutional difficulty whatever. When we create judges for the Territories they do not come under the provisions referred to. We have the power to create inferior courts, and the constitutional limitation as to appointment does not apply, and we have the power to say that the appointees shall be residents of the Territory. This question has been thoroughly examined and there is no doubt about it. This bill makes no reflection upon the President. It is desired by the citizens of the Territory; it conforms to their sentiment and judgment; it respects their wishes. If justice is to obtain they must have the judges, and the salaries fixed are moderate.

One other thing I wish to say. This bill was introduced in the Fifty-sixth Congress, and reported favorably. It has been considered again—thoroughly considered—in this Congress. I have received many letters and communications, and some visits, from certain parties from various States, asking me to oppose this limitation. These persons desired me to oppose it and, if possible, defeat it, because they wanted to be candidates for these offices, and they are not residents of the Territory. Now, if you cut down the time of residence required, these gentlemen, I suppose, will rush in and try to claim residence in that Territory and obtain the appointments, to the exclusion of bona fide residents who are acquainted with the people of the Territory.

I do not think the President will be offended if the bill should pass in the form presented. In fact, I think it will be a relief to him to have this provision in the bill, so that he may confine his appointments to persons residing in the Territory. Then, acting under the advice of Congress, he may feel under an obligation to confine his appointments in this way, even if he does not think we have the constitutional power to put such a provision in the bill.

Congress having power to create the court and provide for the appointment of a judge, may constitutionally limit the territory from which he is to be selected and even prescribe qualifications that he must possess. We can not take away the appointing power, and this amendment suggests nothing of that kind. We can fix the term for less than life and prescribe that these judges come from the Territory.

Mr. FLYNN. I call for the previous question on the amendments and on the bill to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken, the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill as amended to a third reading.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have an amendment to offer.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HILL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. FLYNN. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 4555, similar in purport to the bill just passed, be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT QUINCY, ILL.

Mr. LLOYD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4798) to authorize the Quincy Railroad Bridge Company, its successors and assigns, to rebuild the draw span of its bridge across the Mississippi River at Quincy, Ill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide a proper and separate passageway for vehicles and foot passengers across the draw span of its bridge across the Mississippi River at Quincy, Ill., built under authority of an act of Congress approved July 25, 1866, the Quincy Railroad Bridge Company, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to rebuild the draw span of said bridge with such clear width of openings on each side of the central or pivot pier as may be approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LLOYD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLIC PARK IN OREGON.

Mr. TONGUE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 4393) reserving from the public lands in the State of Oregon, as a public park for the benefit of the people of the United States, and for the protection and preservation of the game, fish, timber, and all other natural objects therein, a tract of land herein described, etc., was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the tract of land bounded north by the parallel 43° 4′ north latitude, south by 42° 48′ north latitude, east by the meridian 122° west longitude, and west by the meridian 122° 16′ west longitude, having an area of 249 square miles, in the State of Oregon, and including Crater Lake, is hereby reserved and withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or sale under the laws of the United States, and dedicated and set apart forever as a public park or pleasure ground for the benefit of the people of the United States, to be known as Crater Lake National Park.

SEC. 2. That the reservation established by this act shall be under the control and custody of the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it shall be to establish rules and regulations and cause adequate measures to be taken for the preservation of the natural objects within said park, and also for the protection of the timber from wanton depredation, the preservation of all kinds of game and fish, the punishment of trespassers, the removal of unlawful occupants and intruders, and the prevention and extinguishment of forest fires.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person to establish any settlement or residence within said reserve, or to engage in any mining, lumbering, or other enterprise or business occupation therein, or to enter therein for any speculative purpose whatever, and any person violating the provisions of this act, or the rules and regulations established thereunder, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 and not more than $500, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, and shall further be liable for all destruction of timber or other property of the United States in consequence of any such unlawful act: Provided, That said reservation shall be open, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, to all scientists, excursionists, and pleasure seekers: And provided further, That restaurant and hotel keepers, upon application to the Secretary of the Interior, may be permitted by him to establish places of entertainment within the Crater Lake National Park for the accommodation of visitors, at places and under regulations fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and not otherwise.

SEC. 4. That the marshal of the United States for the district of Oregon may appoint one or more deputy marshals for said park, who may reside in said park. That said park, for all the purposes of this act, shall constitute a part of the United States judicial district of Oregon, and the district and circuit courts of the United States in and for said district shall have jurisdiction of all offenses committed within said park.

SEC. 5. That all costs and expenses arising in cases under this act, and properly chargeable to the United States, shall be certified, approved, and paid as like costs and expenses in the courts of the United States are certified, approved, and paid under the laws of the United States.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of War, upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized and directed to make the necessary details of troops to prevent trespassers or intruders from entering the park for the purpose of destroying the game or other natural objects therein, or for any other purpose prohibited by law, and to remove such persons from the park, if found therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not wish to make objection without knowing what the bill is. Reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE] to state the substance and effect of the bill.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, this bill, although somewhat formidable in its title, is not in fact a very formidable bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman state what is the character of this body of land that is proposed to be appropriated as a park?

Mr. TONGUE. I think, possibly, I can best answer the gentleman's question by reading from the report of Prof. Hart Merriam, chief of the Biological Survey, who has visited the park, and who makes this statement, which will be found on page 4 of the committee's report:

> The proposed park is a very small affair—only 18 by 22 miles, if I am correctly informed—and contains no agricultural land of any kind, but consists wholly of a mountain, a little more than 9,000 feet in altitude, whose summit has been destroyed by volcanic action, and is now occupied by a gigantic caldron nearly 6 miles in diameter and 4,000 feet in depth.

That is the character of the land included in the park. I requested Professor Diller, of the Geological Survey, who has visited this lake at different times, to draw the boundaries of this park so as to include no valuable land. Now, the object of the bill is simply this: Crater Lake is one of the most interesting natural objects on the continent, if not in the world. It is an extinct volcano. The top of the mountain has apparently been cut smoothly off. There is a cavity about 4,000 feet in depth, 2,000 feet of which is water. Along the sides of the mountains there seem to be an unusual variety of fauna and flora, a great variety of timber, of mammal, birds, etc., rendering this place of great scientific value. The object of this bill is simply to withdraw this land from public settlement. The most of it has been withdrawn already by reason of being in a forest reserve, and also, which is the most important object, to punish mutilation and destruction of the natural objects of interest within the park and to preserve it in its present condition, in its natural beauty and native wildness, both for its great beauty and great scientific value.

This bill has been reported three times in three separate Congresses unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands. It has been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, by the Commissioner of the Land Office, by the officers of the Geological Survey, by the Biological Department, and two or three others of the bureaus of the Agricultural Department, and is favored by all the scientific offices of the Federal Government.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman allow a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TONGUE. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does this contain any mineral lands?

Mr. TONGUE. No mineral lands. Nothing of any value. It will simply preserve the curiosity of the scenery and of the growth of animals and vegetation, trees, flowers, and so forth, for scientific purposes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is there any provision for the lease of mineral lands?

Mr. LOUD. It prohibits that.

Mr. TONGUE. There is none.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Did the clause remain in this bill that permits prospecting? We had that matter up when the bill was considered once, I know, and I offered an amendment allowing prospecting.

Mr. LOUD. If I understand the bill correctly, it prohibits that and imposes a penalty, both minimum and maximum, for entering the reserve for this purpose.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think you will find that it allows prospecting and the locating of mineral claims. At least that was an amendment that was put in the bill at my suggestion one year.

Mr. LOUD. If you think it is there, you had better find it.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think this bill ought to pass, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think that amendment must be in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Does the bill stand on a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. TONGUE. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do you not think this reservation ought to be thrown open for the location of mining claims under the mineral laws of the United States?

Mr. TONGUE. There is no mining in that vicinity or in that range of mountains or near that locality.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Suppose there should be. We do not want to lock it up perpetually.

Mr. TONGUE. If there should be, I have no doubt there would be means and methods found to get it mined. At the same time, if it is thrown open indiscriminately for prospectors, then it will be of little use to undertake to preserve the natural conditions.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It would be impossible to ascertain whether there are any minerals there or not unless prospecting is allowed.

Mr. TONGUE. This is close to one of the oldest settled sections of Oregon. It is in one of the counties where the first mines in that State were discovered and where the most prospecting has been done; but the mining is in the other range of mountains opposite from this. None has ever been discovered here, so far as I ever heard of.

Mr. LOUD. Why do you prohibit mining if there is no mining there?

Mr. TONGUE. The object is to prohibit people from coming in under the name of prospecting and destroying the natural conditions of the park and the natural objects of beauty and interest.

Mr. LOUD. Then you provide for a deputy United States marshal. Is not that something unusual?

Mr. TONGUE. The deputy United States marshal is simply proposed as the cheapest way of arresting people who violate the law. This is simply a provision to give him authority to make arrests.

Mr. LOUD. Is not such a provision new in the establishment of reservations of this kind?

Mr. TONGUE. I could not say as to that. That provision was placed in the bill by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman will admit that the prohibition in regard to mining should not be in that bill. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] seemed to think that there was an amendment in the bill allowing prospecting. He has evidently had to do with the bill before. There is not a park in this country set aside in this way that you can not go into for mining purposes. Now, it will not do to say that there is no mining land there, because if this provision is put in the bill they never will be able to enter this park to find out whether there is or not.

Mr. TONGUE. So far as mining is concerned, I am just informed by a gentleman at my right that mining is prohibited in all the national parks, including the Yellowstone.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is mistaken; that is all. I had occasion to read this law yesterday, in response to an inquiry of one of my constituents. If I did not know, I would not say anything about it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Would the gentleman from Oregon object to inserting after the word "seekers," in line 3, page 3, the words "and for the development and location of mining claims?"

Mr. TONGUE. I have no objection.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And also strike out the words in line 16, page 2, "or to engage in any mining."

Mr. TONGUE. I have no objection to the amendment the gentleman proposes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no objection to the bill if that is done. I have no doubt this is a meritorious bill if these amendments are included. I think we ought to have considerable to say as to what shall be done with these lands.

Mr. TONGUE. I have no objection to the amendments proposed by the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Colorado stated a while ago that the amendment in reference to mining was in the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It was in the bill one year, I know, but I did not remember whether it was in the bill introduced in this Congress or not.

Mr. McRAE. I suggest to the gentleman that he permit this bill to go over until Monday. It is unusual and unprecedented, in my opinion, to open national parks to free mining. That carries with it the right to utilize any and all of the public timber in the park in the operation of mines, and you may defeat the very purpose of the park if you allow that to be done. I do not want to object to consideration of the bill, but I hope the matter will go over until that feature of it can be considered. I am opposed to this amendment, and will also ask some other amendments.

Mr. TONGUE. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that I am so well satisfied that there is no mining there that I regard any provision on that subject as of no importance one way or the other, and in order to avoid objection to the bill, I am perfectly willing to submit to the amendment.

Mr. McRAE. The creation of a national park is a very different thing from the making of a public reserve, and we should see to it that the parks are established for public and not private purposes. To set these public lands aside as a national park, and then to allow miners to go into and work it freely and at pleasure may result in dedicating it to mining, if there is mineral there. If there is mineral in the land, it ought not to be a park. The two are inconsistent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Suppose it were discovered that there were some valuable mines on this land, that it was infinitely more valuable for mining than for any other purpose?

Mr. McRAE. If there is a probability of that, then I say there ought not to be any park created. The idea of a national park and a mining camp are inconsistent with each other.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You can not determine that at this time, nor possibly for ten or twenty years, whether there is to be any mining done there.

Mr. McRAE. Then if you can not determine that, you ought not to undertake at this time to make a park of the lands in question. Declare it a reservation and wait.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then you exclude them from the privilege of having a public park there. I think they ought to have a public park there.

Mr. McRAE. I am not certain but we are overdoing the business of establishing national parks; but I do not arise for the purpose of objecting to this one if the facts stated in the report are true and some other amendments are made as to the administration of the park.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his amendment. There is not a national park in the country that is open to exploration under the mining laws. There is no reason why this national park should be so open.

The SPEAKER. No amendment can yet be offered, as the bill is not yet before the House. It is pending on a request for unanimous consent for its consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I have hastily glanced at this bill, and I am not prepared to say that I would object to it if I had a little more time to examine it; but I will say to the gentleman that I notice that it prohibits settlement. I notice that it binds the United States to pay all cost and expense. I am not sure but what it binds the United States to extinguish title to any lands that may be owned. It puts a troop of soldiers in there—a superintendent, full fledged. I think that the bill ought to be considered in committee; and I suggest to the gentleman that he modify his request; that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. And it seems to me that if it could go over until Monday it would be better. I do not want to object.

Mr. BARTLETT. Let the gentleman withdraw his request.

Mr. LACEY. The suggestion that the gentleman from Illinois makes ought to be acceded to, and then these matters of detail could be speedily arranged. I do not think the bill would take very long in Committee of the Whole. It is not at all a complicated bill; and I would suggest to my friend from Illinois that this land is all from six to ten thousand feet above the sea. It is a very high altitude park.

Mr. CANNON. The Government owns all the land inside of it?

Mr. LACEY. The Government owns all the land.

Mr. CANNON. Every foot?

Mr. LACEY. I understand every foot of it. It is not a very difficult proposition. In Committee of the Whole these matters could be considered as separate propositions, and could be readily adjusted.

Mr. TONGUE. I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request and asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CANNON. Just a word.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. One word, Mr. Speaker. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that all after section 1 be stricken out. That reserves it as a national park and leaves to the future for Congress to say how it shall be made and policed. There it is; it is not suffering. I do not think this bill ought to pass in its present shape if it is desirable to make it a national park.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. LACEY. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman consent to strike out all after the first section?

Mr. TONGUE. I will not do that.

Mr. CANNON. I will have to object for the present. I do not want to be discourteous to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

GEORGE T. WINSTON.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10819) for the relief of George T. Winston, president of North Carolina College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, and W. S. Primrose, chairman board of trustees.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to relieve W. S. Primrose, chairman of the board of trustees, and George T. Winston, president of the North Carolina College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, Raleigh, N. C., from all money responsibility for so much of the ordnance and ordnance stores issued to said college under its bonds dated May 28, 1894, and February 18, 1901, as were destroyed by fire on November 29, 1901.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. POU, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MONUMENT TO MARK SITE OF FORT PHIL KEARNY MASSACRE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 305.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 305) providing for a monument to mark the site of the Fort Phil Kearny massacre.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to mark the site of the Fort Phil Kearny massacre, that occurred on the 21st of December, 1866, by erecting on said site a monument of rough masonry and an historical tablet: Provided, That the site of the proposed monument, of not less than one-fourth of an acre in area, situated upon the most sightly portion of Massacre Hill, shall be donated to the United States.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying this act into effect the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any public moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under direction of the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in all the blood-stained history of this warring old world there is record of but three battlefields from which there came no survivor of the vanquished. Even Thermopylæ had her messenger of defeat, but the land beyond the father of waters has been the theater of three conflicts where the story of the immortal valor of American soldiers is told only in the mute eloquence of their self-sacrifice or by the boasting tongues of the victorious enemy.

Of these three fields, unique in all the history of wars, two have been marked and cared for. The Alamo has her monument in the historic old building from within whose walls the intrepid Texans fought back the hosts of Santa Anna with a grim and desperate valor until the last brave heart was stilled in death.

On the lonely hillside in the far Northwest, where the gallant commander, surrounded by his faithful and heroic band, fell before the murderous onslaught of the savage Sioux, there is planted a plain slab, eloquent with one brief sentence, "Here lies Custer," while all about the wrinkled surface of that sun-baked hill are placed the simple headstones that mark the spot where each valiant trooper fell, fighting to the last.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is a battlefield from which no American soldier came to tell the story of stubborn defense and overwhelming defeat, which is to-day unmarked and, except in the locality of the field itself, almost unknown; and yet, of all the tales that have ever been told of courage and valor and heroism, and of all the songs that have ever been sung of devotion to flag and duty, sealed by the last great measure of men's devotion, none have had a more thrilling, dramatic, and inspiring theme than that of the battle fought under the shadows of the Big Horn Mountains, hard by old Fort Phil Kearny. Through the pitiless rigors of a northern winter, guarding the Boseman trail 200 miles from the nearest support, the little garrison of Phil Kearny held at bay 3,000 warriors of the great Sioux Nation under the leadership of the cunning and crafty Red Cloud.

On the 21st day of December, 1866, leaving but a handful of men to guard the post, Colonel Fetterman and his troopers issued forth from the sheltering walls of the stockade to rescue a small detachment which had been attacked a short distance above the fort. A few miles out they were set upon by overwhelming numbers of Sioux. Falling backward slowly, but in perfect order, toward the post, they were cut off and completely surrounded, and then followed one of the most desperate and bloody conflicts in all the annals of war. Dismounted, back to back, the well-armed troopers fought with all the courage of despair and the valor of American soldiery. The ever-increasing horde of painted, hideous, yelling savages, ten times their number, closed in on all sides, and though the troopers met them with a murderous fire from their repeating rifles, used here for the first time in a general engagement, the savages fought with reckless desperation and finally bore them down by sheer force of numbers, completing the horrible work of annihilation by torturing such as fell into their hands alive.

A story is told of that battle which deserves to be preserved and immortalized as an example of the intrepidity and undying devotion to duty of the American soldier. It is said that when the remnant of the garrison came upon the field of conflict—the victorious Sioux having withdrawn to bury their dead and care for their wounded—they found their dead comrades lying stark upon the frozen ground, mutilated in all the forms that savage malice and hatred could invent—all save one. On the highest part of the field, where the last stand had been made, they found lying amid the mutilated bodies of his comrades, that of a young trumpeter, a blonde giant, stretched at full length, his sightless eyes turned heavenward, in his outstretched hand his trumpet, battered and bloody, his body undisturbed and unmutilated, the only one on that sanguinary field.

For years they sought to wring from the Sioux who had participated in the battle an account of the conflict and an explanation of the fact that the trumpeter alone, like Custer on the field of the Little Horn, was considered worthy of the honor of being left unmutilated. Through the natural taciturnity of the red man and fear of possible punishment their lips were sealed, until an old warrior about to pass to the happy hunting ground told the tale. It was this: As on that fatal day the column dashed up the ridge near its head was seen the giant form of a young soldier, hatless, yellow haired, leaning far forward on his steed, his trumpet to his lips, as in tones that awoke the echoes amid the hills he blew the inspiring notes of the charge.

Later, when the command was surrounded, dismounted, grouped together in defense, this fair-haired warrior, rising in stature above his fellows, still held his trumpet to his lips, and without pause or intermission sent again and again the thrilling blast of defiance echoing from hill to mountain top, sounding shrill and clear above the rattle of musketry, the sharp cracking of the revolvers, and the demoniac yell of the savages. As the foe pressed closer and closer, and his comrades fell about him like the leaves of autumn, the survivors knelt to seek some protection from the bowlders which strewed the hilltop, still he stood proud and erect, and his trumpet's clarion tones called back the echoes which the awful sounds of savage war sent chasing to the wooded heights; but nothing could withstand the overwhelming numbers and fury of the savages, as with fiendish yells they made a last desperate rush for the few survivors, shooting, spearing, clubbing, until the trumpeter alone remained, and as his last comrade pitched forward, pierced through with a savage spear, he leaped across the prostrate form, and swinging with tremendous force the trumpet, which he had at last withdrawn from his lips, he sent a warrior reeling headlong with a mortal blow, and then, swinging right and left, he struck down one after another the savages about him till a spear thrust found his fearless heart and stretched him low, the last survivor of that heroic struggle.

Mr. Speaker, it is to commemorate, in a modest way, deeds like these that we ask the passage of this bill. We seek to rear no towering monument upon the spot where these men met their death in the uniform of the American Army, fighting the battles of civilization against the hordes of barbarism. History and romance shall build their monuments. We wish only to erect of the rough and scarred bowlders strewing the field where they fought and fell a single cairn, and place upon it a tablet upon which shall be briefly written the story of this, one of America's more than Thermopylaes, that it may be an inspiration to duty to all who shall pass that way and a reminder that the Republic is not ungrateful and does not forget those who fight valiantly her battles.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF WAY TO THE WARRIOR SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13575) to grant a right of way to the Warrior Southern Railway Company through the tract of land in the State of Alabama reserved for the use of the United States in connection with the improvement of the Black Warrior River and known as Lock 4.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT ST. CHARLES, MO.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 12498.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12498) extending the time for completing bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo.

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of a wagon and motor bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., as fixed by an act approved June 3, 1896, be extended to June 3, 1904.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTHOLDT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUPPRESSION OF TRAIN ROBBERIES.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 11412, for the suppression of train robberies in the Territories of the United States, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who within any State or Territory of the United States, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, obstructs or derails or makes an assault upon any railroad train, railroad cars, or railroad locomotive operating within such State, Territory, or place, and upon which the United States mail is carried or which is engaged in interstate commerce, for the purpose and with the intent to commit murder, robbery, or any other felony, upon said train, cars, or locomotive, or upon or against any person or persons lawfully on said train, or cars, or locomotive, shall be punished as follows: If the death of any such person is effected or thereby caused such offender shall suffer death; if death is not caused he shall be imprisoned not less than five nor more than twenty years.

SEC. 2. That any person who attempts to commit the offense mentioned in section 1 of this act shall be imprisoned not less than one nor more than ten years.

SEC. 3. That any person who aids, abets, or incites another to commit either of the offenses mentioned in sections 1 or 2 of this act shall be deemed a principal offender.

SEC. 4. That upon the trial of a person charged with the violation of this act it shall not be necessary to prove, nor shall it be deemed material to a conviction, that the defendant or defendants intended to effect the death of or to rob or commit a felony upon or against any particular person, but it shall be deemed sufficient if it is proved to the satisfaction of the jury that as a result of such unlawful act some person or persons had been killed, robbed, or injured, as the case may be, or that such act was committed with the design to commit any crime.

With the following amendments recommended by the committee:

On page 1, line 5, after "an," insert "unlawful."

On page 1, lines 7 and 8, strike out "and upon which the United States mail is carried or."

On page 1, line 9, strike out "for the purpose and" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "or which is operating within a Territory of the United States."

On page 1, from lines 10, 11, and 12, strike out the following: "upon said train, cars, or locomotive, or upon or against any person or persons lawfully on said train, or cars, or locomotive," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "or who with such intent makes an unlawful assault upon any person lawfully on such train, cars, or locomotive."

On page 1, line 13, strike out the word "such."

The section will then read as follows:

"That any person who within any State or Territory of the United States, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, obstructs or derails or makes an unlawful assault upon any railroad train, railroad cars, or railroad locomotive operating within such State, Territory, or place, which is engaged in interstate commerce, or which is operating within a District or Territory of the United States, with the intent to commit murder, robbery, or any other felony, or who with such intent makes an unlawful assault upon any person lawfully on such train, cars, or locomotive, shall be punished as follows: If the death of any person is effected or thereby caused, such offender shall suffer death; if death is not caused, he shall be imprisoned not less than five nor more than twenty years."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Speaker, I object. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the object of it.

The SPEAKER. A Delegate can not object.

Mr. RODEY. Then I except to the ruling, but at present will ask the gentleman from Iowa to reserve the objection for me.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object until the gentleman can make an explanation.

Mr. WILEY. The object of the bill is to confer on the United States courts concurrent jurisdiction with the State courts to try men who wreck trains or rob trains on which there are interstate passengers or interstate commerce. It does not interfere with the State courts or the Territorial courts. It only confers upon the United States courts, concurrently with the State courts, jurisdiction to try offenders in respect to those matters in which Congress has alone the right to legislate—matters of interstate commerce.

Mr. RODEY. As far as New Mexico is concerned, we have a law now on the statute books for that purpose.

Mr. WILEY. Well, this does not interfere with that.

Mr. RODEY. I have not had any opportunity to examine this law, and would like an opportunity to see its exact phraseology before it passes.

Mr. RAY of New York. It does not interfere with State or Territorial courts at all.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I believe this bill exceeds the powers of the Federal court. It is too important a measure to be considered by unanimous consent, and I therefore enter my objection.

PAUL CRUM.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5096) to place the name of Paul Crum on the muster rolls of Company B, First Regiment North Dakota Volunteer Infantry.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Paul Crum, of the city of Fargo, State of North Dakota, upon the muster rolls as a private, Company B, First Regiment North Dakota Volunteer Infantry, lately engaged in service in the war with Spain, as of date February 3, 1899, and to grant him an honorable discharge therefrom as of date March 28, 1899.

SEC. 2. That said Paul Crum be, and he is hereby, entitled to all privileges and immunities belonging to a private soldier of said regiment the same as though he had been regularly enlisted therein.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman for the purpose of this bill.

Mr. MARSHALL. This bill provides for the enrollment of Paul Crum, who was a man too young to be enrolled under the military regulations, without the consent of his parents. He failed to secure this consent, but by some means worked his way over to Manila, where he was told that he would be allowed to enlist. Reaching there he found that it was impossible for him to be enlisted, but he was furnished with equipment by a captain of one of the companies of a North Dakota regiment and served over a month with that regiment, doing regular military duty, and was in ten or twelve engagements participated in by that regiment.

Mr. LOUD. He must have been very active to be in ten or twelve engagements in thirty days.

Mr. MARSHALL. The bill has been favorably reported twice from the Committee on Military Affairs, which committee I have found to be very careful in scrutinizing such measures.

Mr. LOUD. What is the object of putting him on the muster rolls?

Mr. MARSHALL. For the purpose of giving him the honor and credit of being enlisted in this regiment, and nothing more.

Mr. LOUD. He was not enrolled and he could not enlist and now you want Congress to enroll him?

Mr. MARSHALL. Well, he served with the regiment thirty days in active service, and then he went and served with a Nebraska regiment.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. MARSHALL. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. This man lives in North Dakota. He tried to enlist in the regiment before it went to the Philippines. He could not under the law, but he was told that if he would go to the Philippines with the regiment he would probably have a chance to enlist there. He worked his way over on a transport——

Mr. LOUD. He was taken along.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; he was taken along and served—in how many engagements I do not know, but he found they had no authority to enlist him there, and then he went with a Nebraska regiment for some time, and the Nebraska colonel reported that he served in several engagements. After he found that he could not enlist, he came back to the Dakota regiment and came home. Now he wants to have the muster that he was entitled to for the service he rendered. The bill contains the usual provision that no pay, bounty, or emolument shall be given him.

Mr. LOUD. How do you distinguish where he shall be mustered? You say he served with two regiments.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. We provide that he shall be placed on the muster roll of the First Regiment of North Dakota Volunteer Infantry, the regiment that he went out with originally.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MARSHALL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL LAND OFFICE IN MONTANA.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 3449, to establish an additional land office in the State of Montana.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all that portion of the State of Montana bounded and described as follows: Beginning at the northeast corner of the State and running thence west on the national boundary line between the United States and British Columbia to the point intersected by the eastern boundary line of the Blackfoot Indian Reservation; thence south along the line of said reservation to where it is intersected by the eastern line of the Lewis and Clarke Forest Reservation; thence south on said line to the northern boundary line of Lewis and Clarke County; thence along said line in a southeasterly direction to the western boundary line of Meagher County; thence east along said line to where it is intersected by the eastern boundary line of Cascade County; thence north and east along said line to where it intersects the southern boundary of Choteau County; thence along said line in a northeasterly direction to where the line strikes the Missouri River; thence east, following the Missouri River, to the east line of the State of Montana; thence north along said line to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, constituted a new land district, to be called Great Falls land district of the State of Montana; and the land office for said district shall be located at the town of Great Falls.

SEC. 2. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized to appoint a register and receiver for such land district, who shall discharge like and similar duties and receive the same amount of compensation as other officers discharging like duties in the other land offices of said State.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have a statement as to the necessity of the bill.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, this asks for the location of an additional land office at Great Falls, Mont., for the reason that there are large areas of land embraced within its provisions that would go to this office, where the people are compelled to travel the whole length of the State, through Great Falls, through Bozeman, to go to Miles City. A portion of the people have to undergo all that expense and trouble, and a great many have to come down to Great Falls and go to Helena, and the area of land that would be embraced in this land office is second largest of any in the State. It is an immense territory. The bill is recommended by the Department as necessary and desirable in every particular. It has received the unqualified indorsement of the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Is there very rapid settlement there?

Mr. EDWARDS. There is very rapid settlement in the northern part of the State.

Mr. PAYNE. The bill has been favorably reported from the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I may be allowed to state that the offices in Montana are very few indeed; and this seems to be a central point, where there is a junction of railroads.

Mr. LOUD. How many offices are there? You say the offices are "very few."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Six.

Mr. LOUD. That is not "very few."

Mr. SHAFROTH. For a State of that size six offices are very few. It must be remembered that Montana is a very large State, the third in size in the Union, Texas and California being the only two larger.

Mr. LACEY. There will be over 17,000,000 acres of land in this district.

Mr. EDWARDS. Seventeen million six hundred and nine thousand acres.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDWARDS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EGGS OF GAME BIRDS FOR PROPAGATION.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10995) to regulate the introduction of eggs of game birds for propagation.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall have the power to authorize the importation of eggs of game birds for purposes of propagation, and he shall prescribe all necessary rules and regulations governing the importation of eggs of said birds for such purposes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from New York give us some explanation of this bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. This bill is in line with certain legislation adopted heretofore—advocated by the gentleman from Iowa

[Mr. LACEY], and I will turn the matter over to him for explanation. He introduced the bill, and I will simply state that the Committee on Agriculture has reported it unanimously.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture; and it grows out of this situation: We have now on the statute book a law forbidding the importation into the United States of eggs of any wild birds. That provision was inserted in the Dingley Act because of the fact, as alleged, that persons were engaged in robbing the nests of ducks and wild geese and other waterfowl in Canada and shipping the eggs into the United States, to be used here for commercial purposes. This business tended, of course, to the extermination of these birds at the fountain head. The object of the proposed legislation is to permit the importation of partridge eggs, grouse eggs, blackcock eggs, and the eggs of various game birds of Scotland, England, and Europe. The present bill simply authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to issue permits for the introduction of these eggs. The bill ought to be passed promptly on account of the breeding season for this year being now at hand.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Does the prohibition of the present law apply only to Canada?

Mr. LACEY. No; to the whole world. This bill places the matter under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture, so that no improper advantage may be taken of the measure in order to introduce into this country birds that will be detrimental or injurious. We have had some experience of that kind with the English sparrow. The Secretary of Agriculture will of course grant permits for the introduction of the eggs of those birds only that we desire to have introduced into this country.

Mr. WILEY. Is this an original bill or an amendment to a bill already passed?

Mr. LACEY. It is an original bill, prepared by the Secretary of Agriculture, and introduced at his request, to obviate the difficulty to which I have already adverted.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RAILWAY BRIDGE ACROSS PEARL RIVER, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. CANDLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12938) to authorize the New Orleans and Mississippi Midland Railroad Company of Mississippi to build and maintain a railway bridge across Pearl River.

The bill with the amendments reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was read.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANDLER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Senate bill 305, which was taken up this morning on my motion, and passed.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

PUBLIC PARK IN OREGON.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for reconsideration of the bill (H. R. 4393) reserving from the public lands in the State of Oregon as a public park for the benefit of the people of the United States, and for the protection and preservation of the game, fish, and all other natural objects therein, a tract of land herein described, etc., just read, to say that if such consent is granted, I ask to amend the bill by striking out the last two sections, and by striking out the word "mining" on page 2, line 15, and on page 3, in line 1, after the word "seekers," insert "and the location of mining claims and the working of the same."

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will consent to the striking out the words "not less than $50 and," being the minimum penalty, found in line 19, page 2, after the word "of," and will consent to strike out section 4, which should go out if 5 and 6 go out, I will offer no objection; otherwise I will object.

Mr. TONGUE. Very well, I will consent to those additions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will report his amendments.

Mr. LOUD. If I am recognized for that purpose, I shall do so.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oregon yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. TONGUE. Yes.

Mr. LOUD. Then I move to strike out, in line 19, page 2, after the word "of," the words "not less than $50 and." It simply removes the minimum penalty, leaving the maximum penalty in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 19, after the word "of," strike out the words "not less than $50 and."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOUD. Now, I suggest that my other amendment striking out section 4 be coupled with the motion of the gentleman from Oregon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon will state his amendment.

Mr. TONGUE. I move to strike out the last three sections of the bill, and to strike out the word "mining" in line 15, page 2, and on page 3, line 1, after the word "seekers," insert "and the location of mining claims and the working of the same."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the tract of land bounded north by the parallel 43° 4′ north latitude, south by 42° 48′ north latitude, east by the meridian 122° west longitude, and west by the meridian 122° 16′ west longitude, having an area of 249 square miles, in the State of Oregon, United States, and dedicated and set apart forever as a public park or pleasure ground for the benefit of the people of the United States, to be known as Crater Lake National Park.

SEC. 2. That the reservation established by this act shall be under the control and custody of the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it shall be to establish rules and regulations and cause adequate measures to be taken for the preservation of the natural objects within said park, and also for the protection of the timber from wanton depredation, the preservation of all kinds of game and fish, the punishment of trespassers, the removal of unlawful occupants and intruders, and the prevention and extinguishment of forest fires.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person to establish any settlement or residence within said reserve, or to engage in any lumbering or other enterprise or business occupation therein, or to enter therein for any speculative purpose whatever, and any person violating the provisions of this act, or the rules and regulations established thereunder, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, and shall further be liable for all destruction of timber or other property of the United States in consequence of any such unlawful act: Provided, That said reservation shall be open, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, to all scientists, excursionists, and pleasure seekers, and to the location of mining claims and the working of the same: And provided further, That restaurant and hotel keepers, upon application to the Secretary of the Interior, may be permitted by him to establish places of entertainment within the Crater Lake National Park for the accommodation of visitors, at places and under regulations fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and not otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TONGUE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

URGENT DEFICIENCY.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 13627) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, which the House passed a few days ago, and to concur in the Senate amendment, which is for $9,000 to the Board of Children's Guardians, which is a deficiency that exists, I find upon inquiry, and which ought to be made.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not understand what the item is, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CANNON. The item is one for $9,000 to the Board of Children's Guardians for the maintenance and care of children that are placed under its charge.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill entitled "An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes."

The amendment was read, as follows:

"District of Columbia Board of Children's Guardians: For care of feeble-minded children, board and care of all children committed to the guardianship of said board by the courts of the District, and for temporary care of children pending investigation or while being transferred from place to place, $9,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MARY J. CLARK.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2113) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Clark, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANCES T. ANDERSON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6081) granting an increase of pension to Frances C. Anderson, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the Honse concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANCES L. ACKLEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9290) granting a pension to Frances L. Ackley, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. RUMPLE, DEEMER, and MIERS of Indiana.

MARY L. DIBERT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8415) granting a pension to Mary L. Dibert, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

MARGARET BAKER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5102) granting a pension to Margaret Baker, formerly Maggie Ralston, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS THATCHER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1326) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Thatcher, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

THEODORE F. COLLINS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 611) granting an increase of pension to Theodore F. Collins, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Appropriations was discharged from the further consideration of House Document 555, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, submitting an estimate of appropriation for additional storage space, office of assistant quartermaster, United States Marine Corps, Philadelphia, Pa., and House Document No. 564, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, submitting an estimate of appropriation for the Government lot at Mount Moriah Cemetery, and the same were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WHITE, for twenty days, on account of important business.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE POLK.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers the following resolution, asking unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, May 10, beginning at 1 o'clock p. m., be set apart for the purpose of paying a tribute of respect to the memory of the late Hon. RUFUS K. POLK, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 13359, being the fortifications appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13359) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, with Mr. HASKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not make any extended remarks on this bill. The report filed with it explains its provisions fully and sets out in detail the various items carried on the bill.

The estimates were $15,399,308. The bill carries $6,562,455, or $9,836,853 less than the estimates. The bill last year carried $7,414,633. The present bill therefore carries $852,000 less than the bill of last year. Unless some gentleman desires to ask a question——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman what our annual fortification expense is?

Mr. HEMENWAY. From 1897 up until now, it has averaged from six and a half to seven million dollars. Prior to that time it averaged about $2,000,000 for a number of years.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is there any expenditure known as armament expense; and if so, what is that per year?

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is included in the total I gave the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That was what I presumed.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If no one desires to ask any questions or to discuss the bill, I will ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a few minutes on this bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. How much times does the gentleman desire?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Probably not more than ten or fifteen minutes, but I do not care to be limited.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield to the gentleman fifteen minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, powerful as this country is, and rich in financial resources as it is, nevertheless economy is still a most desirable quality in the administration of a great government.

I had hoped that the preparation of this bill might have been delayed until after the occurrences of yesterday, for I suspected that some action might be taken by this branch of Congress that would materially affect the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations in the making up of this provision.

Fortification is a preparation for war and for hostilities between nations. Every event which may give rise to friction between two great nations naturally affects the question of peace or war.

One trouble which we have feared, and it has been more or less before our eyes constantly, has been the irritation and bad blood that has grown up occasionally between our country and some foreign countries, growing out of our trade relations. You will all remember how repeatedly the question of the inspection and the slaughter and the sale of our beef and cattle in foreign countries agitated and irritated the relations between those countries. Our country protested vigorously against the action of the British Government in limiting the time that a steer or any one of our beef cattle might live after it had reached the foreign country before being slaughtered. The feeling was that the regulations and restrictions that were put upon cattle in that way were unfriendly. And not very long ago, in the matter of our trade relations with Russia, the Secretary of the Treasury, acting, as I thought at the time, just a little bit hastily, precipitated a controversy between the two Governments upon the question of sugar.

Now, it should be borne in mind that there is not an article of agricultural production in all of Europe that in any degree amounts to the importance that does the sugar production of France and Germany and more or less to other foreign countries. Now, in order to protect the production of sugar in this country and to make it possible with us to assist such cultivation and make it possible that we should produce in some share our own consumption of sugar, we have placed upon our statute books certain regulations and restrictions. One of them consists in the tariff upon all kinds of sugar, a very low tariff, it is said.

In addition to that, for the purpose of promoting the growth and manufacture of refined sugar and to make it possible that we should not be bound hand and foot by the avaricious demands of the German and French producers we put a special differential duty on refined sugar. And we went a little further than that. In order to meet that difficulty the German Government and other governments of Europe have placed from time to time upon sugar exported or raised for the purpose of export a bounty on the sugar equal to a very large profit in the manufacture of it; and it is that bounty which has stimulated the production of sugar and made such an enormous overproduction as has cheapened the article in this country. The German bounty on sugar is $6.03 per ton, and the differential tariff in this country was $2.80 per ton.

Now, in order, I suppose, to get rid of competition between the two countries, on yesterday, by an overwhelming majority in the House, we have made this concession on foreign sugar coming to this country. We have repealed the $2.80 per ton, and we have repealed the $6.03 per ton which the Treasury assesses against foreign sugar by way of countervailing duty. So we have this result of the performance of yesterday, and we have done it, I assume, intelligently and with our eyes wide open. The distinguished gentleman from Minnesota has made a study of this whole question, and was so beaming with figures that nobody could get anywhere near him or quite understand him.

Of course he understood when he drafted the memorable never-to-be-forgotten amendment that carried out the distinct agreement made between the two sides of this House that he had arranged to repeal all these taxes. If I felt ugly about it, I might possibly say, in the language of the distinguished gentleman from Maine, that it was a contract, a "conspiracy of infamy." I do not feel that way to-day [laughter], especially in view of the cheapening process by which sweetness is to come into our country. [Laughter.] So that we have made sugar by the process of yesterday's performance not only 20 per cent cheaper coming from Cuba, so far as the duty is concerned, but actually $8.83 per ton cheaper on that coming from the old country.

That sum, Mr. Chairman, embodied the only possible protection to the American manufacturer of refined sugar, except that coming from an enormous investment in the employment of the highest possible scheme of economy of production and the presence of a tremendous money power behind it. When this differential was placed here upon this sugar it was placed there at the earnest request of the sugar trust and at the request of the beet-sugar industry. They came together to the House of Representatives in its committee and went to the Senate and followed it to the committee of conference and pointed out that without that differential upon refined sugars there was no possibility of the production of beet sugar in the United States.

And little did they dream that this differential would be wiped out by a conspiracy of its own friends, and as the result of a conspiracy of its friends, aided by the other side of this House; and not only that, but would be wiped out in connection with the overthrow of the countervailing duty which stands between the power of the foreign government to overload the market of this country and break down the price of sugar.

Oh, but it is said, away off in the future, nearly two years from now, there will be a removal, under the terms of the Brussels conference, of this system of bounties. Very well, that may be true; but the argument has been heard here that any attack upon this industry would destroy it now, because nobody would invest a dollar of money in it. According to that argument everybody has got to wait for nearly two years, and then stand the chances that some other scheme of bounty will be invented by these free and independent countries that have absolute power over this whole question.

Now, then, somebody must die. Some business must go to the wall. Who will it be? Nobody believes if this bill becomes a law that the manufacture of sugar from the beet in this country can be carried on unless by some process undiscovered, by means of capital unheard of in amount, or some other cheapening process that we can only hope may come.

But they say the Senate will not pass the bill. Let us see what it will take in the Senate for a Senator to now vote to strike out that differential amendment in the House bill. Let us see. They must do that with the distinct notice served upon them by the Democratic side of this House, and by the controlling power on this side, the beet-sugar interest, that that was a proper thing to do in order to destroy or to weaken the sugar trust.

Now, then, every Senator who votes to strike that out votes directly with his eyes wide open and under the indictment here filed, to place this perquisite in the pockets of the sugar trust. He becomes at once a voter for the emoluments of the sugar trust, and no Senator standing upon an equal footing of interest at home dare to vote, now that it is unearthed and uncovered, to again build up the great interest of the sugar trust by reenacting the differential.

So our friends will find themselves at least shut up to two things. First, they voted for a thing which they knew was wrong, voted for it first in Committee of the Whole, then voted for it on a yea-and-nay vote, put their names down in favor of the passage of the repeal of the differential, putting themselves down in favor of the repeal of the countervailing duty, making it cheaper by $8.83 per ton for foreign refined sugar to come into this country, doing all that, and then entering a plea of guilty to the indictment by refusing to vote for the same proposition when they were met with it in the passage of the bill in the House. [Laughter and applause.]

There stands the indictment, and no man will be permitted to say he did not do it with his eyes wide open; that he did not do it in effect and in purpose to strike a deadly blow to the Sugar Refining Company, as they supposed, and, incidentally, to kill the beet-sugar interests in this country. If it was so I could, I would tell the story illustrating the situation that was told to me by a humorous gentleman of the boy who set out to afflict trouble upon the preacher and went a roundabout way to get to the accomplishment of his malice. [Laughter and applause.] It is the sugar trust they are after, but in doing it they have struck a blow they dare not defend against the industry they themselves have claimed to be a valuable and prosperous industry, and at the same time have come in and pleaded guilty to it by refusing to vote for that very measure.

Mr. CLARK. The gentleman from Ohio has forgotten to tell the story he said he was going to tell.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, Mr. Chairman, seriously, what is the necessity when we are inviting the products of the Old World; when we have assailed that sacred thing, the tariff; when we have voted to strike down one item of the Dingley bill, while we have assaulted the platform of the Republican party in 1896 and spit upon the platform of 1900 by voting to repeal one of the most important items of the Dingley law—what is the use of putting up big fortifications now to fight these countries? Do you think Germany, with the free entry of refined sugar, is going to war with us? Do you think France will have any trouble now that she has got a clean bounty voted to her of $8.83 a ton on her sugar?

I think that France will come over here and not only reconvey the statue of liberty in New York Harbor, but provide for the lighting of it, which we do not seem to have been able to do ourselves.

One word before I close. Mr. Chairman, I want consent to put into my speech the amendment adopted yesterday, to show that I am right in my construction of it—that it repeals not only the differential duty, but the countervailing duty that stands between us and the sugar of the Old World.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman from Ohio will have leave to extend his remarks as indicated.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The Morris amendment is as follows:

"And upon the making of said agreement and the issuance of said proclamation, and while said agreement shall remain in force, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the duties thereon now provided by law on all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard in color, and upon all sugars which have gone through a process of refining, imported into the United States, 1.825 cents per pound."

The result of this is as follows: The present duty is $1.95 on refined sugar and 38.3 cents additional countervailing duty when the sugar comes from Germany. All of our refined sugar comes from that country or from some other country paying an export bounty. The duties, therefore, are on refined sugar 2.33\frac{3}{10}$ per 100 pounds. The Morris amendment provides that in lieu of the duties now imposed the duty shall be 1.82\frac{1}{2}$ per 100 pounds, or a reduction of 50 cents per 100 pounds or one-half cent per pound.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I came into the Hall a moment ago under the impression that the question in regard to the Cuban tariff reduction or the beet-sugar question had been disposed of last evening, but found the discussion had been reopened by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. I consider that we are exceedingly unfortunate, inasmuch as the gentleman from Ohio, who, upon a bill pending here to provide for fortifications, seems to be engaged principally in fortifying himself, has gone over the whole question again and read the "riot act," so to speak, to those gentlemen who saw fit to disagree with him in some of the proceedings of yesterday afternoon.

If the gentleman from Ohio had proceeded in his argument a few days ago upon the sugar question somewhat after the manner of his argument this afternoon, he would have occupied a much more enviable position in the esteem of the "beet-sugar men," as he sees fit to call them, than he did upon that occasion. Instead of debating the question and talking "business" the other day, he occupied considerable time in accusing the younger members of the House of being still "moist behind the ears" in statesmanship and ridiculing them and casting upon them such discredit as he was able to do in a manner very much out of place in some of its special details. Some of the language used by the gentleman toward the younger members of the House who disagreed with him, I observe, was very carefully "edited" out of his speech as it appeared in the RECORD.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not a single sentence.

Mr. WEEKS. Oh, yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is not so.

Mr. WEEKS. You will not find the remarks about being "wet behind the ears," and some other things, in the edited speech as it appeared in the RECORD.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There may have been some trouble with the gentleman's ears at the time.

Mr. WEEKS. Perhaps. But I sat very near the gentleman, and took occasion to the best of my ability to make some impromptu remarks in reply to the gentleman, which are also in the RECORD. I leave to the House the question whether the gentleman's argument was met in a proper and dignified way.

The men who voted upon this sugar question, according to our own consciences, are very happy to-day, especially those from Michigan, as telegrams are coming from our State—from the governor and from other men very high in the Republican party—congratulating members of the House from that State upon the gallant stand they made against the gentleman from Ohio in that debate. We feel perfectly secure and perfectly well satisfied with our votes on that measure. [Applause.]

I want the gentleman—and I speak with all politeness and with all deference—to understand that we do not propose that the "riot act" shall be read to us on this floor by the gentleman from Ohio or anyone else without responding in fitting terms to the assault.

We were released by the conference—by our respected and venerable friend, the chairman of the conference—from all binding responsibility, except to our own consciences and to our constituents, and that was plainly and distinctly announced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], acting as chairman of that conference, two or three times—once in response to my own inquiry on the subject.

Now we are here—and I say it respectfully to our venerable friend from Ohio—we are here upon our own consciences. We did what we did deliberately. We knew something about the "differential." We had heard about it here day after day for two weeks. We are supposed to know what we were doing. Give us credit for having some faint idea of what we were voting about and what we intended by our votes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman will allow me. That is what I was saying—that you seemed to understand; for the moment it came to a record vote you voted the other way.

Mr. WEEKS. My dear sir, I voted "no" with you on the question whether the bill should pass; did I not?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly. I have always been a protectionist——

Mr. WEEKS. So have I.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And I would not vote to break down one of those muniments of our prosperity.

Mr. WEEKS. We applaud your vote on that question. I think you were right for once in this contest. On the other question, about which the gentleman complains——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEEKS] has expired.

Mr. WEEKS. I would like to have one or two minutes more.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield to the gentleman two minutes, if that is sufficient.

Mr. WEEKS. I want only two or three minutes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Very well; make it three minutes. I yield the gentleman three minutes additional time.

Mr. WEEKS. I avail myself, with much gratitude to the gentleman, of the time he has given me. I want now to say a word in regard to the motive of the gentlemen from Michigan in voting against sustaining the ruling of the Chair. Ordinarily there is no delegation on the floor of this House more loyal to the presiding officer, more loyal to the party organization, than are the members from my State. That is a notorious and well-known fact, but our State delegation was recognized in this Cuban tariff discussion as being in the "imminent and deadly breach of the fight." Everybody knows that, and we consider that in some respects we were not treated with that courtesy by some of the leaders upon the floor of the House which twelve good, straight, honest Republicans coming from that State were entitled to. While it is possible that it may be construed by some gentlemen that our vote was not exactly in accordance with the interests of the industry which we were endeavoring to protect, our constituents at home are telegraphing to us to-day that our vote is approved at home.

They know whether it is in their interests or not and that our motive was to kill that bill. That is the plain English of it, and I believe it did kill the bill. I believe that bill will never come back to this House, or if it does come back, it will come in such shape that its author will never recognize it, and I believe that the Senate of the United States will in good time kill that bill and that it will never be resurrected. [Applause.]

We intended also to "swipe" the sugar trust, which we held responsible for this legislation.

That we judged aright on this point I quote from a statement (interview) of James H. Post, president of the National Sugar Refining Company, published in the New York Herald of this morning:

He said:

I do not attach much importance to what has been done thus far in Washington, because I do not believe that the Senate will pass the bill. But should the differential be removed, it would cost the sugar refiners of this country between $6,000,000 and $8,000,000 a year.

If the gentleman from Ohio desires to pronounce a funeral oration over the remains of his deceased friend, the Cuban reciprocity bill, we shall raise no objection "because Bill is dead." While expressions of grief may be appropriate coming from the gentleman, we dislike to have him "shake his gory locks at us and say you did it."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON, I hardly want that much time, Mr. Chairman. I merely want to note the apology of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and more especially the apology of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEEKS]. The gentleman from Michigan will be justified by his constituency, and I want him to be—he is on both sides of this question. He organized to kill the sugar trust and then voted against killing it. That is all right. He can justify himself by the facts. Probably some of the balance of us may have to do the same thing. We may not have been entirely consistent in our votes, but, thank God, the Michigan delegation is all right. [Laughter.]

There is one thing, however, I can not overlook. It seems to me it is something to go into the next campaign, Mr. Chairman—a thing of vast importance, and nothing but a sense of duty would make me rise in my place to open my mouth now. As for the gentleman from Michigan, the earliest recollection I have of him—and I am now 47 years old [prolonged laughter]—is that the gentleman had then been at the practice of the law for nearly twenty years, as long ago as I can recollect, and yet he refers to me as the venerable gentleman from Illinois. Now, I have got to repel that assault. I would make profert of myself if I could, before the gentleman's constituency, and I warn him now that he must take that back. [Laughter.] I warn him that his constituency will rise up en masse, and, whatever they may say about beet sugar, they will vindicate my youth. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEEKS. I will substitute the word "venerated" for "venerable." [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Now he is trying to turn me into a regular joss house.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Into an antique. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Now, I think everybody can be quite content to speak seriously for a moment of the bill that was passed yesterday. A coordinate branch of Congress has passed the bill with the differential partly stricken out, and it is boasted that all of it is stricken out. It will go over to the coordinate branch of Congress at the other end of this building, and they can deal with it there. If they send it back to us, well and good; we will consider it when it comes back. If, however, it dies in that august body, according to the prophecy of the gentleman from Michigan, we can not help it; because, while my honorable friend and myself no doubt could go over there and run that body a great deal better than they can run it themselves, our respective legislatures have not commissioned us to do so. That body will not let us in for that purpose.

I sometimes go over into that body and find myself getting upon my feet and interjecting a remark—in my mind—but just before I open my mouth I happen to recollect perhaps that I would not be in order. Now, I want to say to my friend from Indiana that this is a very important bill. No doubt it will pass to-day. I hope it will, because I happen to know that my friend is going out to the great West upon an important mission to-night, and he will go with the consciousness that he has had charge of this bill, an important one for the coast defense of the country. It is a conservative bill. It is perhaps along the line of a policy that was adopted some years ago of too much fortification; but, after all, we have entered upon the work. There are certain places upon our seacoast that ought to be thoroughly fortified; but those are the places only where the enemy in time of war might blackmail great blocks of population. We are doing a great deal of fortifying where that could not happen to any considerable extent; but, after all, in the public expenditure we have to make some useless expenditures while we are making desirable ones.

And now, having said this much, having repelled with all the force and power that I have the assault that the gentleman from Michigan made upon me, I subside. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask the Clerk to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For rapid-fire guns, including their mounts, sights, implements, ammunition, etc., including any new tools or machinery necessary for their manufacture at arsenals, $1,237,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, in line 13, after the word "forth," insert: "to be procured by the Secretary of War, by contract or otherwise."

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is the practice now, but there is some question as to the construction of this section. I offer the amendment simply to leave no doubt as to the construction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

"To enable the Government to secure the use of the high explosive 'thorite,' the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to purchase the entire and exclusive right for the United States to manufacture and use the high explosive 'thorite:' Provided, That all formulæ, data, and facts related to said process and necessary to the successful manufacture of said 'thorite' shall be placed in the possession of the Secretary of War before payment for the same shall be made.

"The sum of $50,000 for the said purpose is directed to be taken from the appropriation of $100,000 made by the act of Congress 'making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense,' approved March 1, 1901, for the purpose of securing the high explosive 'thorite' and the Isham high-explosive shell."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HILL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4821) granting an increase of pension to Herbert A. Boombower.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. CLAY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if he has any recommendation from the Secretary of War?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Yes; I have a recommendation here from the Secretary of War, which I will read:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 15, 1902.

DEAR SIR: In response to your inquiry in regard to the action taken under the clause of the fortifications act of March 1, 1901, regarding the Isham high-explosive shell and the high explosive, thorite, I have to say that after the passage of the act which provided for the purchase of those inventions by the Secretary of War, "in his discretion and if in his judgment it will be for the best interests of the Government," I asked the advice of both the Ordnance Department and the Board of Ordnance and Fortification to aid me in forming a judgment as to whether the purchase would be for the best interests of the Government.

The Ordnance Department advised against the purchase as to both. The Board of Ordnance and Fortification advised against the purchase of the Isham shell by a vote of four to two, and divided equally—three to three—upon the purchase of thorite. Under these circumstances, I have not considered myself justified in making the purchase of either.

The Board of Ordnance and Fortification also adopted the following resolution:

"As thorite is the safest and most effective high explosive that has been presented to and tested under the direction of this board, it is the opinion of the board that Dr. Tuttle is entitled to a reasonable compensation for his invention, and it is recommended that he be so compensated."

This recommendation was approved by me, with the following annotation:

"This is understood to relate not to any power of the Secretary of War, but to an appeal to powers resting in Congress alone."

I did not feel at liberty to purchase the invention under the act of March 1, 1901, because I considered myself bound to act upon a strictly business basis, giving effect to no consideration except the business interests of the United States in executing that statute.

I approved the recommendation for compensation to Dr. Tuttle, because I think that his long and faithful labors, in conjunction with many officers of the United States, in seeking to develop a practical high explosive, merited reward, and were probably of material use in the development of the art to which they related; and I think that a just exercise of the powers which Congress possesses, but the Secretary of War does not possess, should lead to a grant of reasonable and even liberal compensation to Dr. Tuttle's heirs.

The Board of Ordnance and Fortification, since its action above mentioned, has recommended a further test of the Isham shell, and that recommendation has been approved.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. J. A. HEMENWAY,
House of Representatives.

That is the recommendation made by the Secretary of War in reference to this proposition. The date of that letter is April 15, 1902—three days ago. Now, it is unnecessary, at least I do not conceive it to be necessary, that I should go into any extended remarks upon this subject. In the fortifications bill a year ago there was passed by this House, on March 1, 1901, a provision for the purchase of the Isham high-explosive shell and Dr. Tuttle's "thorite" for $100,000. When that bill left this House and went over to the Senate the Senate placed therein a provision leaving the power to purchase in the discretion of the Secretary of War. In the letter which I have just read the Secretary of War gives his reasons why he did not feel that he was warranted in making the purchase under the old bill; but he further states in this letter that Dr. Tuttle is certainly entitled to compensation for his efforts in this matter and that the authority to provide said compensation properly rests in Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I should like five minutes more, and then I will conclude.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Dr. Tuttle resides in the city where I make my home, in Tacoma, Wash., and I have been intimately acquainted with him for twelve years. He was the inventor of what is known as "thoride," which the Ordnance Department said was the most favorable high explosive that was known at the time the tests were made. Certain objections were discovered to it; for instance, some trouble was experienced in making the explosive detonate readily, which it was felt it was necessary to overcome. Dr. Tuttle labored for three years under the direction and instructions largely of the War Department and the Ordnance Department of this Government to bring about the absolute perfection of this explosive.

While the tests were being made some other explosives were discovered, which were based very largely, in my judgment, upon the explosive that Dr. Tuttle had discovered, and some of these explosives have since been purchased. But the Secretary of War says that in his judgment it was the labor of Dr. Tuttle in experimenting and laying the foundation and bringing forward this explosive, thorite, that enabled the War Department to secure the other explosives. Now, then, there were about 10,000 pounds of Dr. Tuttle's thorite manufactured under the direction of the War Department and sent to the Philippine Islands, for use in the war, and the results were reasonably satisfactory. I conceive that under this recommendation from the Secretary of War, before whom this matter has been pending for some two and a half or three years, after an examination that has been exhaustive, after tests that have been made many and many times, after this House has already passed a provision, a year ago, providing $50,000 for the purchase of this same explosive, I do not believe that the House of Representatives will pause very long in reaffirming that which they did a year ago, and place my amendment in this bill.

In closing let me say that when I returned home to the State of Washington a year ago Dr. Tuttle returned from Washington city, and upon reaching his home was stricken with heart disease and died suddenly there at his own home, immediately upon his return from Washington city. My judgment is, though I do not wish to surround this case with any romantic halo, but my own candid, honest, and sincere judgment is that that man had gone through the trials and troubles incident to inventing and perfecting this great explosive and trying to procure its adoption by this Government, and these trials and troubles and delays broke him up financially and finally broke his heart.

General Miles, the head of the Army, was a friend and admirer of Dr. Tuttle in his lifetime. The general took great interest in thorite, and unhesitatingly pronounced it the greatest explosive known to modern times.

The Board of Ordnance and Fortification also state, as I have just read to you, "that thorite is the safest and most effective high explosive that has been presented to and tested under the direction of this board."

It is impossible for me, in the few minutes' time I have here, to present this question as I would wish to to this House. It is true that I have somewhat of a personal interest in this matter, but it is the personal interest that sprang from a long acquaintance with Dr. Tuttle—one of the finest men I ever met in my entire lifetime.

He saved my life in the most serious illness I ever experienced, and it was my sad duty last summer before leaving home to help carry to his final resting place the remains of my friend and benefactor.

On this floor I speak for his widow and his children, and I appeal to that sense of fairness that exists in every American heart. Let us now do tardy justice to the heirs of this great and good man. I ask for the adoption of my amendment. [Applause.]

[Mr. TAYLER of Ohio addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, and, to a great extent, I agree with him. I desire to call the attention of the members of this House to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations on the House side does not put on appropriation bills the items that the gentleman mentioned. These items uniformly go onto the bill on the Senate side. The Government has expended many thousands of dollars in making experiments in new explosives and in guns and other things, which have resulted in very little good, and, as a rule, the Ordnance Department has been right.

Now, as to this item, the Board of Ordnance and Fortification have on various occasions recommended the purchase of thorite. The Board of Ordnance has been opposed to the purchase of thorite, but after careful consideration legislation was enacted by the last Congress authorizing the Secretary of War to buy thorite and the Isham shell and pay therefor $100,000, if, in his judgment, they ought to be purchased by the Government.

The Secretary of War has come to the conclusion, as I judge from the communications we have received, that the Isham shell ought to be further tested before it is purchased, if purchased at all; that while thorite, in his judgment, is not the best explosive, Dr. Tuttle was the pioneer in inventing this class of explosives: that his knowledge and his ability and his judgment led up to the discovery of the explosives that we now have, and that it is possible in the future that thorite will prove to be what the Board of Ordnance and Fortification thought it was—the greatest known explosive in the world. For that reason the Secretary of War has recommended that Dr. Tuttle be in some way compensated for the discovery of thorite.

This amendment is not subject to a point of order. If it were I should make it, because I do not believe in putting appropriations of this kind on the bill in the House. I believe in standing by our practice in the past, but the amendment is in order, and the only question, as I see, for the House to determine is whether or not they will purchase thorite, and whether or not they will follow the recommendation of the Secretary of War and buy it at all; and if they make up their minds they ought to buy it, the question is, what they will pay for it; whether $50,000 is too much. Of course it is hard to determine how much we ought to pay.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Upon what does the Secretary of War base his judgment?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Secretary of War makes no recommendation as to amount. They originally wanted $250,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I mean as between the two articles.

Mr. HEMENWAY. As between the two articles the Secretary of War declines to recommend the purchase of the Isham shell, but recommends that Dr. Tuttle be compensated for the discovery of thorite without making any recommendation as to amount.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Upon what does he base his recommendation for that?

Mr. HEMENWAY. He bases his judgment upon the recommendation of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, this item has been up before Congress for six years, I think. It has been approved by part of the members of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification at times, and at times they have been in doubt. I do not think there is any doubt as to one proposition, and that is that Dr. Tuttle made a great discovery and that he was held here by the War Department, encouraged, and probably kept from making a deal with other governments. The Board of Ordnance suggested different points for him to overcome, and he worked for years upon this explosive, and finally went away from here to his home and stepped into his door and dropped dead. It makes it a pathetic termination. It may be that he killed himself trying to perfect this invention according to the instructions of the War Department.

We have had hearings from time to time. The Isham shell and his discovery were supposed to be good, and I believe they are. The difficulty has arisen, however, between two of the boards of this Government. We have got now a Bureau of Ordnance. We have in addition to that Bureau of Ordnance a Board of Ordnance and Fortification, made up of the General of the Army, the chief of Engineers, a member of the Bureau of Ordnance, one civilian, and two artillery officers, as I understand it. Now, we have had this anomaly throughout this controversy. The business of the organization of the Bureau of Ordnance and Fortification is to determine types. They go in and vote on a type, and while the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance and maybe one or two usually vote one way, and all these members vote the other way, and almost invariably the War Department takes the vote of one, two, or three and follows that, provided the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance is in the minority.

That is the condition, and an unfortunate condition. This fight between the two boards seems to have been the difficulty. The charge has always been made that you could not get anything adopted before the Bureau of Ordnance that was not discovered by some member of the board itself. A number of them have been interested in these patents. That is the occasion largely of the organization of the other board.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They want to unload their own patents onto the Government?

Mr. BELL. The other board was organized for the purpose of adopting these types; but when it adopts a type the War Department rarely, if it ever, follows it. The information we got in examining Dr. Lewis, the secretary of the Board of Fortifications, and the General of the Army was that thorite is to-day the best explosive known to man.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do they agree with General Crozier?

Mr. BELL. Oh, no; General Crozier on most every proposition stands on one side, and sometimes he has one, but very rarely two, with him. The balance of the Board are on the other side, but the War Department almost invariably follows the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, even when he stands alone in his recommendations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BELL. Now, it seems that subsequently we got into the appropriation bill some modification of the original act creating the Board of Ordnance and Fortification a pretense at least that the War Department can hold that this Board of Ordnance and Fortification is a mere formal affair. That board was organized for the purpose of getting "men who were behind the guns" to establish the types of guns, explosives, etc. On the recommendation of the Secretary of War, General Henderson, a civilian, was appointed on this board, and on his recommendation also two artillery officers were appointed; and by the law itself the engineer became a member of the board, the General of the Army, and a member of the Bureau of Ordnance. And, strange to say, in this entire war between these boards, whatever they may say about the General of the Army, when they have organized boards, the other members largely have gone with the General, with the exception of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to get this statement clear; I want to see whether I understand the gentleman occupying the floor. He said, as I understood him, that General Crozier generally went one way——

Mr. BELL. Generally one, and sometimes two other members went with him.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the balance of the board went the other way?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the reason they went the other way was that they were all patentees——

Mr. BELL. Oh, no.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And do you mean to say they want to unload their patents upon the Government?

Mr. BELL. That is another board.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What board is that?

Mr. BELL. The original board is the Bureau of Ordnance. That has the power of purchasing. Now, as I understand, a number of that board are patentees, including General Crozier himself. The other board was organized for the purpose of determining types such as types of explosives or types of guns, etc.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman does not catch the point of my question. I want to know which committee or board is the board which was composed of patentees and wanted to unload their patents on the Government while they were members of a board to pass upon the question whether the Government should purchase certain patents or not.

Mr. BELL. I do not know, but there may be patentees on both boards.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But which board is it that the gentleman referred to?

Mr. BELL. The one originally organized for the purpose of determining the types to be adopted is the Board of Ordnance and Fortification.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They are not patentees?

Mr. BELL. There may be some on that board.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are there some on the other?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do I correctly understand you to state that they sell their patents to the Government through the Administration, when they have to pass on the question whether the Government needs the patent or not? In other words, pass on their own case?

Mr. BELL. I do not know about that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understood you to say that.

Mr. BELL. No; I said the charge was made that civilians could not get their superior inventions tested or adopted.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who makes the charge?

Mr. BELL. The charge was made by men who are trying to have the Government test their patents.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you know the names of those men?

Mr. BELL. Oh, yes. Before the Senate committee, sitting over here, the charges are made by one of the men who is trying to get a wire gun tested.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did he prove his charge?

Mr. BELL. He shows that a member of the Bureau of Ordnance has also got a wire gun; and therefore he thinks that his will not be considered.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know of any members of this committee who are patentees and are trying to sell their patents to the Government through themselves while members of the board of purchase or selection?

Mr. BELL. No; I do not know a thing about that. The other fellows, however, claim that they can not get a trial of their inventions because of the ownership of patents by members of the Bureau of Ordnance.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Which compete with their patents that they are trying to sell to the Government through this committee or board. Is that correct?

Mr. BELL. I do not know about that.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is it not true that all the patents of General Crozier have been handed over to the Government without his realizing a single penny of profit from them?

Mr. BELL. I say I do not know a thing about that, except, as I understand, that the occasion of organizing the second board was on the charge or complaint of those who brought forward their patents for tests in civil life, and they thought discriminations were made in favor of discoveries made by those in the Army.

Mr. COCHRAN. My information is, and I believe it, that the patents of General Crozier have been given to the Government; that he never has received a single cent of emolument or reward from them; that he has not asked any and is not seeking any.

Mr. BELL. I do not know a thing about that, but I think one of the reasons for the organizing of the second board was these charges. And now by the conduct of the War Department that board has been of no avail. It is a dummy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. CUSHMAN was agreed to.

[Mr. TAYLER of Ohio addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

On motion of Mr. HEMENWAY, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HASKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13359) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will submit them to the House in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEMENWAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report and to read the statement which accompanies it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania presents a conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report, and that the statement of the House conferees be read in lieu thereof. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report of the conference committee is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10847) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20, 29, 30, 35, 36, 37, 38, 41, 42, 49, 50, 55, 56, 57, 60, 61, 67, 68, 78, 80, 83, 85, 95, 98, 105, 106, 108, 109, 124, 125, 130, 131, 139, 147, 148, 163, 174, 175, 177, 178, 180, 199, 200, 208, and 205.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 25, 26, 31, 32, 33, 34, 39, 40, 43, 47, 51, 52, 59, 62, 63, 64, 65, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 81, 82, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 93, 94, 96, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 107, 110, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 126, 127, 128, 129, 132, 133, 135, 138, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 146, 150, 151, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 176, 181, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 195, 197, 198, 201, 204, 207, 210, 211, 212, and 214, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$75,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 13 of the bill, in line 2, after the word "each," insert the words "additional laborer in the bathroom, $720;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$91,530;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$720;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$26,200;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 15 of the bill, in line 3, after the word "Judiciary," insert the word "Library;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$79,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,200;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$1,200;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,360;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"To enable the Library of Congress to be kept open for reference use from 2 until 10 o'clock p. m. on Sundays, including the extra services of employees and the services of additional employees under the Librarian, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And on page 28 of the bill, after line 3, insert as a separate paragraph the following:

"To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ during the last quarter of the fiscal year 1902 such of the additional assistants in the copyright office as are herein provided for in the Library of Congress for the fiscal year 1903, and at the rates of compensation prescribed, $2,410, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$80,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$91,300;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$159,450;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$72,580;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert before the matter inserted by said amendment the following: "title and contract clerk, $2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment, and on page 51 of the bill, in line 4, strike out the words "two clerks of class four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$40,260;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 97, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$60,350;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "twenty" inserted by said amendment, and on page 60 of the bill, after the word "of," in line 20, strike out all down to and including the word "ninety-eight" in line 23 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "twenty additional internal-revenue agents to be appointed and employed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and these 20 agents to be in lieu of the agents provided for and appointed under the provisions of sections 3 and 47 of the act of June 13, 1898, providing for war-revenue expenditures and other purposes, and these to be the only internal-revenue agents employed in addition to those provided for in section 3152 of the Revised Statutes. The existing provisions of law with regard to internal-revenue agents shall apply to the duties, compensation, and expenses of these 20 additional agents;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 134, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 84 of the bill, in line 18, strike out the words "(Lemon Building);" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 136, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment restore the amount proposed to be stricken out, and on page 88 of the bill, in line 22, after the word "dollars," insert: "one clerk of class 4, from May 1, 1902, $2,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$51,560;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 145, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and on page 98 of the bill, in line 16, after the word "Interior," insert the following: "from persons not now or heretofore employed in the Pension Office and without compliance with the conditions prescribed by the act entitled 'An act to regulate and improve the civil service,' approved January 16, 1883;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 149, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$317,650;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 152, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment strike out the semicolon and insert in lieu thereof a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 179, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,250;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 182, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "thirty one;" and on page 120 of the bill, in line 25, strike out the word "twenty-one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 183, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "forty-seven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 184, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "forty-seven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 185, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "thirty-four;" and on page 121 of the bill, in line 3, strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "two messengers; six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 186, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$297,590;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 194, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 196, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$18,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 202, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$179,080;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 206, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "two special agents, at $1,800 each;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 208, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$106,380;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 209, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$65,140;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 213, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows:

Add at the end of the matter inserted by said amendment the following:

"And the several appropriations herein made for such clerks and employees under the several departments and offices shall be available for payment of the salaries of all clerks and employees transferred to the classified service under this provision. And the appropriations made for such temporary clerks and employees for the fiscal year 1902 shall also be available for payment of the salaries of all such clerks and employees herein transferred for the balance of the current fiscal year."

And on page 79 of the bill, in line 4, strike out all after the word "dollars" down to and including the word "appropriations," in line 9.

And the Senate agree to the same.

On No. 213: Enacts section 3 as proposed by the Senate, transferring the temporary clerks and other employees rendered necessary because of increased work incident to the war with Spain to the classified service, makes the appropriations proposed for 1903, as well as those for the balance of the current fiscal year, available for the compensation of such clerks when so transferred, and also strikes from the bill the provision which prohibits the transfer of persons in the classified service of the Government to positions paid under said appropriations.

On No. 214: Modifies section 4 as proposed by the Senate, making it applicable to persons permanently incapacitated for the performance of service instead of incompetent or incapacitated.

The bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $25,398,381.50, being $32,164 less than as it passed the Senate, $223,711.60 more than as it passed the House, $803,412.65 more than the appropriations for the current fiscal year, and $225,151.66 less than the estimates submitted.

HENRY H. BINGHAM,
J. A. HEMENWAY,
L. F. LIVINGSTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BINGHAM. What does the gentleman from California desire?

Mr. LOUD. I should like to have about ten minutes to devote to some able suggestions on an item or two in this bill.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOUD. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me ten minutes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I desire again to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to an item to which I called his attention some time since in this appropriation bill, being amendment No. 186, providing for a superintendent of rural free delivery, that has very cunningly—I believe I do not know of any other word that I can appropriately use—been charged up to the city free-delivery service. As the gentleman probably remembers, I asked him to endeavor to induce the Senate to put that item where it properly belongs in the bill, on page 124, as the gentleman will see that there is a provision for the rural free-delivery service, and this superintendent of the rural free-delivery service is over in another division.

Of course it is not a matter worthy of making any contest about, although the bill when it left the House did not contain that item. Neither did it contain amendment No. 187, which provides for a supervisor at $2,750. There is no law even now, after this bill shall pass, providing for these places, and I hope that next year the gentleman and his committee will put this superintendent where he belongs, in order that the item may be legitimately chargeable to the rural free-delivery service, and not charged upon the city free-delivery service. I think the committee did well to segregate the rural free-delivery service from the city delivery service. It is a new service, and, segregated as it is with this exception, we can hereafter determine something about what this rural delivery service is costing.

I say here, as I said before, that neither the services that they perform nor the extraordinary ability that these gentlemen may have, in comparison with salaries paid other postal officials, would demand anywhere near the salary that the committee have here assented to. I remember the gentleman from Indiana had to poll the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads before he would assent to the increase of the salary recommended by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General of his chief clerk from $2,100, an officer whose duties are worth a hundred times more to the Government each year than either of the persons herein named. At one time I thought the Committee on Appropriations ought to handle all appropriation bills; yet after all the Committee on Appropriations divides itself up, and, as in other committees, four or five men frame a bill. The rural delivery, in my opinion, could be kept upon a reasonable basis.

But the principal object in rising to my feet is to answer some remarks made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE]. I was denied the pleasure of hearing the gentleman. It is always a pleasure and it is a profit to listen to him. He there sought to answer some remarks that I had made a few days previous to that. His remarks were made, I see here, on the 6th day of March, kept on ice until the 19th, and very recently brought to my attention. I made the statement on the floor, which the gentleman sought to answer, that the rural free-delivery service was the most expensive branch of the public service. The gentleman sought to controvert that. He cited the Railway Mail Service. Now, I will not charge the gentleman from Maryland with having prepared that table.

I will exonerate him wholly from that charge. There are very few people outside of the Post-Office Department who could have prepared it. But the gentleman's table proves just exactly what I said. I made the statement on the floor that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's Department here in Washington costs about $185,000 a year. I made the statement that the rural free-delivery bureau, not including the salary of the general superintendent, not including the salary of the assistant, but simply this rural free-delivery bureau, costs in round numbers $275,000. Now, do not forget that when you prepare a bill again that this one bureau costs nearly double what the whole Second Assistant Postmaster-General's Department costs, which has charge of an expenditure of over $60,000,000 and under his supervision, directly and indirectly, over 50,000 employees. The gentleman from Maryland does not know that the Railway Mail Service employees, so designated, perform other duties.

Now, the gentleman, according to his table here, makes the cost of the Railway Mail Service, of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's division, and the departmental service here in Washington cost $722,400. I say again that the gentleman did not know that the superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, and the assistant superintendents of the Railway Mail Service, and the clerks of the Railway Mail Service not alone perform services in connection with Railway Mail Service, but that they have practically under their supervision all the ocean mail service, the mail-messenger service, and the star routes, as well as all contract service and all the steamboat service. That force that you have enumerated here and compared with the rural free-delivery division, permit me to say, is the whole of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's force.

Now, then, the rural free-delivery division expends $850,000 next year, while the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's division, the Railway Mail Service, the ocean mail service, the star route service, and the steamboat service costs $722,000, according to the gentleman's table. The gentleman who prepared this table made some comparisons in the salaries. He has here a "general superintendent" of rural free delivery. I have no doubt but what some clerk in the rural free-delivery division who prepared that list wrote "general superintendent" as his title and probably thought that the gentleman in charge of that division would think the word "general" in front of his title would look very well, so he included "general superintendent." Now, there is no such title as "general superintendent" in the rural free-delivery division. The gentleman from Pennsylvania perhaps next year in his appropriation bill might give him the title of "general superintendent," but he is not entitled to it yet under the law. That is all I have to say about that subject.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SUTHERLAND, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. WATSON, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. CRUMPACKER, for one week, on account of important business.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue submitting an estimate of appropriation for rebate of tax on tobacco and snuff—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. DAVIS of Florida, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13288) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River in Marion County, Tenn., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1665); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. MONDELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 357) for the relief of Levi Maxted, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1666); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2, Rule XIII, adverse reports were delivered to the Clerk, and laid on the table, as follows:

Mr. PRINCE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11823) to correct the military record of Benjamin F. Harrington, late a private of Company H, Fourth Michigan Infantry, and a corporal of Company D, Eleventh Michigan Infantry, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 1667); which said bill and report were laid on the table.

Mr. MONDELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9868) to remove the charge of desertion against John G. Wolf, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 1668); which said bill and report were laid on the table.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS,

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SMITH of Arizona: A bill (H. R. 13846) authorizing the county of Maricopa, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of reservoirs and dams for water storage, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Territories.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRYE (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12346) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read, and that the committee amendments shall be considered as they are reached. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 1, after line 9, to insert:

For construction of breakwater from Mount Desert to Porcupine Island, Maine: Continuing improvement, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 2, to insert:

Improving Bucksport Harbor, Maine, in accordance with the project submitted in House Document No. 275, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, completing improvement, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 17, to insert:

For the removal of Hendersons Point, near the navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H., in accordance with the project recommended in House Document No. 243, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, $200,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of the Navy for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $549,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 24, after the word "act," to insert "and whether in said report the original project be approved or the same be modified, the sum herein appropriated shall be expended on the original or modified project;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Cape Ann, Massachusetts: Continuing improvement, $200,000: Provided, That no part of this amount shall be expended until the said project shall have been examined by a board of engineers and a favorable report made by them upon the feasibility and advisability of continuing said project to completion. And the said board shall also report whether with advantage any part of said original project can be completed, and if so what part, and whether any modification can be made therein with a view to diminishing the cost: Provided further, That said board shall examine and report not later than three months from the passage of this act; and whether in said report the original project be approved or the same be modified, the sum herein appropriated shall be expended on the original or modified project.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 19, to insert:

Improving harbor at Manchester, Mass.: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 22, after the word "session," to strike out "$10,000," and insert "completing improvement, $21,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Cohasset, Mass., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 284, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session: Completing improvement, $21,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 23, to insert:

Improving harbor at Scituate, Mass.: Continuing improvement, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 1, at the beginning of the paragraph, to strike out "Improving harbor at Plymouth, Mass.: Completing improvement," and insert "Improving harbors at Plymouth and Provincetown, Mass.: Continuing improvement and maintenance;" in line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty," and insert "fifteen," and in the same line, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbors at Plymouth and Provincetown, Mass.: Continuing improvement and maintenance, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 19, to insert:

A board of engineer officers shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, who shall make an examination of Vineyard and Nantucket sounds and the east shore of Cape Cod, with a view to reporting upon the relative merits of each of said localities for harbors of refuge, what construction or improvement, if any, is advisable in each, and the cost of such construction or improvement as may be deemed advisable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 5, to insert:

Improving Point Judith Harbor, Rhode Island: Continuing improvement, $100,000, of which amount so much as may be necessary may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in constructing the easterly detached breakwater and continuing it to the shore with a view of providing a shelter for a landing place for the passengers, crews, and cargoes of vessels in distress, and other vessels, and for the lifeboats of the Point Judith life-saving service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 16, to strike out:

Improving harbors of refuge at Block Island, R. I., and Great Salt Pond, Block Island, R. I.: For maintenance, $15,000, and a board of engineers shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, who shall make an examination of these harbors of refuge, and also of the harbor of refuge at Point Judith, and of Vineyard and Nantucket Sounds and the east shore of Cape Cod, with a view to reporting upon the relative merits of each of said harbors or localities for harbors of refuge, what construction or improvement, if any, is advisable in each, and the cost of such construction or improvement as may be deemed advisable. Said board shall also make an examination of Point Judith Pond with a view to ascertaining whether it is desirable to enlarge the entrance to said pond from the ocean, and if such enlargement is upon examination found to be desirable an estimate of the cost thereof shall be made. The expense of such examination as well as of the survey, if made, shall be paid from the unexpended balance remaining to the credit of the former entrance to Point Judith Pond.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Improving harbor of refuge at Block Island, R. I.: Continuing improvement, $30,000.

Improving harbor, Great Salt Pond, Block Island, R.I.: For extending south jetty and dredging, $30,000.

Completing the present entrance to Point Judith Pond, Rhode Island, $15,000, and the amount hitherto appropriated and unexpended is hereby made available for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 116, after line 14, to strike out:

Columbia River at Three-Mile Rapids, from the foot of The Dalles Rapids to the head of Celilo Falls, Oregon and Washington: The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause surveys to be made by a board of engineers, with a view to the construction of a canal and locks on the Columbia River, from the foot of The Dalles Rapids to the head of Celilo Falls, Oregon and Washington, sufficient to accommodate the commerce of said river, and to ascertain whether the same can not be constructed at a cost less than the amount specified in House Document No. 228, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session. The expenses of such survey shall be paid out of the balance unexpended and heretofore appropriated for the construction of a boat railway upon said river. The remainder of said unexpended balance shall be reserved to be applied upon the construction of locks and a canal at said point, in case a plan for such improvement shall have been made and approved by Congress. All other provisions of law, or laws, providing for the construction of said boat railway are hereby repealed.

And insert:

Improving the Columbia River between the foot of The Dalles Rapids and the head of Celilo Falls, Oregon and Washington, by means of canals and the improvement of the channel of the river, in accordance with the project submitted in House Document No. 228, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session: The unexpended balance heretofore appropriated for the purpose of procuring a right of way and commencing the construction of a boat railway at said point is hereby authorized to be used for procuring a right of way and commencing the construction of said canals and commencing the other improvements contemplated as a part of said project: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute said improvement in accordance with the plan approved by the Chief of Engineers, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $400,000, excluding the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated, said contract or contracts to be made for such work and materials as will materially forward and advance the completion of said project.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 118, after line 5, to insert:

Improving the Columbia River between the mouth of the Willamette River and the city of Vancouver, in the State of Washington: For works of improvement, $10,000; for maintenance of improvement, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 118, line 12, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement of Siuslaw River, Oregon, from $26,000 to $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 118, line 23, before the word "River," to strike out "Willipah" and insert "Willapa;" so as to make the clause read:

Willapa River and Harbor: The balance on hand to the credit of this improvement may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in snagging and otherwise improving the North and Nasal rivers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 119, line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" in the same line, before the word "thousand," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen;" in line 9, after the word "jam," to insert:

Or, in his discretion, a channel may be cut from a point at or near the head of said jam to Bellingham Bay: Provided, That proper title to the lands necessary for said cut be given to the United States to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the cost of cutting said channel or removing said log jam shall not exceed said sum of $15,000.

And in line 16, to strike out "provided that the cost thereof is not increased;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Puget Sound and its tributary waters, Washington: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $20,000, of which amount $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in removing the log jam in Nooksack River, and the Secretary of War may modify the existing plans for removing the said log jam, or, in his discretion, a channel may be cut from a point at or near the head of said jam to Bellingham Bay: Provided, That proper title to the lands necessary for said cut be given to the United States to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the cost of cutting said channel or removing said log jam shall not exceed said sum of $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 119, line 21, after the word

"Washington," to strike out: "Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $10,000," and insert:

Twenty-two thousand five hundred dollars, of which amount so much as may be necessary shall be used for completing the improvement of the Okanogan, and the remainder for continuing improvement and for maintenance of the improvement of the Pend Oreille.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving the Okanogan and Pend Oreille rivers, Washington, $22,500, of which amount so much as may be necessary shall be used for completing the improvement of the Okanogan, and the remainder for continuing improvement and for maintenance of the improvement of the Pend Oreille.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 122, line 22, to increase the appropriation for preliminary examinations and surveys (other than those mentioned in section 1), contingencies, expenses connected with inspection of bridges, the service of notice required in such cases, the examination of bridge sites and reports thereon, etc., from $250,000 to $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 13, on page 125.

Mr. LODGE. I move to amend line 13, by striking out the word "authorized" and inserting the word "requested." This is in the nature of a negotiation which the President, of course, requires no authority to initiate, and the word "requested" follows the precedents of all resolutions and bills on such subjects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 125, line 13, strike out "authorized" and insert "requested;" so as to read:

SEC. 4. That the President of the United States is hereby requested to invite the Government of Great Britain to join in the formation of an international commission, to be composed of three members from the United States and three who shall represent the interests of the Dominion of Canada, whose duty it shall be to investigate and report upon the conditions and uses of the waters adjacent to the boundary lines between the United States and Canada, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was resumed. The next amendment was, in section 7, page 128, after line 12, to strike out:

Cypress Bayou, Texas and Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, page 131, line 2, after the word "dollars," to strike out "or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) not exceeding six months, in the discretion of the court."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 13, page 132, line 4, after the words "Secretary of War," to insert:

There shall also be printed 1,000 copies of an index to the reports of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, from 1866 to 1900, inclusive."

So as to make the clause read:

That there shall be printed 3,000 copies of the laws of the United States relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors passed until and including the laws of the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, of which 600 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,400 for the use of the House, and 1,000 copies for the use of the War Department. Said compilation shall be printed under the direction of the Secretary of War. There shall also be printed 1,000 copies of an index to the reports of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, from 1866 to 1900, inclusive, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 133, after line 7, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 14. That hereafter the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may require each guaranty and bond for the due entering into and performance of contracts for works of river and harbor improvement to have as surety thereon a surety company which has qualified as required by the act of Congress approved August 13, 1894, entitled "An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I offer an amendment as a new section, to come in after section 14.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 133, after the amendment already agreed to, insert:

SEC. 15. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to extend the time of completion of any bridge the construction of which is authorized under any existing law of Congress whenever application to him shall be made before the expiration of the time limited and the reason for such extension shall be deemed by him to be sufficient.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, page 134, line 12, to strike out in the subhead the words "and Florida."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "California," on page 135, after line 5, to insert:

Belvedere Harbor, in San Francisco Bay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Delaware," on page 135, after line 11, to insert:

Smyrna River, with a view to cuts to straighten and shorten river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 135, after line 15, to insert:

Harbor at Wilmington and Christiana River, with a view to providing bulkheads for said harbor and river and widening and maintaining a channel 21 feet deep.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Florida," on page 135, after line 21, to insert:

The two entrances to St. Andrews Bay, with a view to securing a 21-foot channel through one of said entrances and across the bulkhead into said bay up to the town of St. Andrews Bay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 136, after line 9, to insert:

Volusia Bar and Lake Monroe Bar and the shoal between said two bars on the St. Johns River, with a view to securing a 6-foot depth at mean low water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 136, after line 12, to insert:

Naples Harbor, with a view of securing a depth of 18 feet at mean low water.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. After the amendment just agreed to I move to insert:

Key West Harbor, with a view of determining the desirability and feasibility of securing a channel 30 feet in depth and 400 feet in width through the ship channel entrance into the harbor of Key West, and of said depth and 2,500 feet in width and 1 mile in length in said harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment was, under the subhead "Georgia," on page 136, line 19, before the word "improving," to strike out "A survey and an estimate of the cost of" and insert "With a view to;" so as to make the clause read:

Skiddaway Narrows: With a view to improving Skiddaway Narrows, connecting Isle of Hope River with Burnside River, for a channel 75 feet wide and 6 feet at mean low water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 136, after line 21, to insert:

Club and Plantation creeks with a view to providing an inside water route from the Altamaha River into the port of Brunswick.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Illinois," on page 137, after line 6, to insert:

Harbor at Mound City, on the Illinois side of the Ohio River, with a view to ascertaining whether or not work at that point is necessary for the preservation and improvement of said harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 137, after line 10, to insert:

Ohio River from Mound City, Ill., to Cairo, Ill., with a view to ascertaining what improvement, if any, is desirable for the protection of the banks and levees on the Illinois side.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 137, after line 14, to insert:

Chicago River, with a view to determining the need and advisability of constructing one or more turning basins in the north and south branches.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 137, after line 17, to insert:

The east bank of the Mississippi River from the city of Quincy to Sny Levee, with a view to improving navigation by preventing the water from overflowing the natural and artificial banks along that part of the river, and deepening the channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Indiana and Kentucky," on page 138, after line 4, to insert:

Ohio River, below the mouth of Salt River, with a view to the construction of a movable dam, so as to make a harbor at New Albany, Ind., and Louisville, Ky., of an average depth of 6 feet below the Ohio Falls.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I move to insert, after line 11, on page 138:

Sand Island, in the Ohio River, with a view to determining the desirability of acquiring a sufficient portion thereof for the mooring of boats or barges and the making up of tows passing through the Louisville and Portland Canal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, under the subhead "Kentucky," on page 138, after line 23, to insert:

Pond River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Maine," on page 140, after line 15, to insert:

Harbor at South Milwaukee: Resurvey, with a view to the modification of the present plan of said harbor, and with a view to ascertaining the feasibility and advisability of the construction of a harbor suitable for the needs of commerce at said port.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 153, after line 10, to insert:

Miller Bay, on the west shore of Lake Winnebago, with a view to making it more available as a harbor of refuge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill has been concluded, and it is still open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FRYE. On page 69, line 3, I move to strike out the words "both of said States" and to insert "the States of Florida and Louisiana."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 59, line 7, I move to strike out the words "reports of the Board of Engineers" and insert "report submitted in House Document No. 87 of the Fifty-fifth Congress, third session."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 81, line 18, after the word "highest," I move to insert "responsible."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. That is all.

Mr. McCOMAS. I wish to ask the attention of the chairman to one matter. I know the committee has considered everything very carefully and very thoroughly, and therefore I do not want to move any amendment, but I have urged the committee to dig out Annapolis Harbor. The commandant at the Naval Academy has told us that they could not get the training ship into the harbor at Annapolis, and the officers complained that the Indiana and other warships could not get into the harbor. There ought to be some little money there for dredging. I should like to know whether it would not be well to put in an amendment for dredging, so that a training ship and a ship of war might get up to the harbor of the Naval School and visit it without swimming ashore.

Mr. FRYE. The committee considered the proposition with regard to Annapolis and came to the conclusion that it could wait. It is not a commercial item at all, has nothing to do with commerce in any way, and under all the circumstances the committee thought Annapolis might wait a couple of years.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine who has charge of the bill something about the amendment on page 111, "for building dams and constructing reservoirs at Lake Kampeska, Lake Poinsett, and on the Sioux River, in South Dakota, to control the flow of said stream and impound the flood waters to secure a permanent stage of water in the Missouri River."

I do not object to it at all, but I wish to ask if the purpose is to control and regulate the flow of the Missouri River?

Mr. FRYE. That is what the committee put it in for.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I take this occasion to say that it will be observed that no amendments have been offered in the Senate and none was offered in the Committee on Commerce, and I believe no appearance was made in the committee by any of the Senators who have heretofore asked that the river and harbor bill might contain appropriations for building dams and works for reservoirs, canals, etc., for the conservation of water to aid in irrigation and the general improvement of navigable streams.

The Senate has very wisely and generously at the present session considered the subject of irrigation, and has passed a bill providing for the building of dams and reservoirs, which is awaiting action in the House; and therefore, in good faith, the Senators most interested in irrigation have offered no irrigation amendments to this bill, and are supporting the measure as it stands.

I desire to say, however, that those who have heretofore asked for assistance in the way of reservoir appropriations before the Committee on Commerce have not changed their minds and have not lost interest in the subject, believing, as they always have believed, that there should be goodly appropriations made for that purpose, and believing, furthermore, that they ought to be made in river and harbor bills.

There is still a group of States totally unrepresented in the river and harbor bill—a group more needy of improvement through the use and control of waters than any in the Union. But it has given me a good deal of pleasure, as it has other friends of irrigation, to separate the consideration of that matter from the river and harbor bill during this session, at the suggestion of those who believe it should be so separated, and that the items should not be contained in the current river and harbor bill, in order that the House of Representatives may have an opportunity to first consider these matters separate and apart. If the House takes the view which the Senate has taken, then there can be no difference of opinion hereafter between those who have formerly opposed the river and harbor bill because the subject of irrigation was ignored and those who have believed that specific bills should cover the different branches of river and harbor appropriations. If the House passes favorably upon the pending bill on irrigation, the friends of that cause will be greatly relieved. If it does not, and we get no relief there, we shall be again compelled to appeal to the Committee on Commerce or to the Senate for appropriations in the river and harbor bill for the building of dams and reservoirs for irrigation and regulation of the flow of water in streams.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I feel it my duty to detain the Senate a few moments before the final vote is taken on this bill, for the purpose of calling attention to an amendment made by the Senate committee in reference to the proposed improvement at The Dalles of the Columbia.

I want, on the part of Oregon, to extend my congratulations and thanks to the committee. I am sure the Senators and Representatives from the States of Idaho and Washington, and also the people generally of these three States, feel the same way. I also desire to express a hope that our conferees will stand firmly by the amendment, and that the conferees on the part of the House may also see it to be their duty to accept this amendment.

In support of that view and of the amendment, I hold in my hand a petition containing the names of 4,120 of the citizens of the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho. The petition is very brief, and I will read it in order that it may appear in the RECORD:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The best development of the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho demands the adequate improvement of our inland waterways and harbors, and we urge upon Congress a liberal policy for their betterment through adequate appropriations and systematic and continuous work. The improvement of our rivers and harbors is of equal importance with any work carried on by any department of the United States Government. Deeper and wider channels must be created for our tide-water harbors to meet the requirements of the modern steamships that have revolutionized the commerce of the world.

Therefore we, the undersigned, residents of the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho—an area of 250,010 square miles, which is as large as the combined area of all the New England States and New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, and Kentucky—hereby petition the Congress of the United States to make appropriations in the river and harbor bill for overcoming the obstructions in the Columbia River between The Dalles and Celilo, and for improving the Snake River, so as to give the people of Eastern Oregon, Eastern Washington, and Idaho a larger and more profitable market for their products. We demand further that the mouth of the Columbia River shall be improved so there shall be a 40-foot channel for the accommodation of our foreign and coastwise commerce. We demand that the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho give to these projects for the improvement of navigation their united and earnest support.

As I have said, this petition is signed by over 4,000 citizens of the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho.

Now, a word as to the necessity and propriety of this proposed improvement at the Threemile Rapids and Celilo.

From the ocean to the mouth of the Willamette it is 98 miles; from the mouth of the Willamette to Threemile Rapids, 88 miles; from Threemile Rapids to Celilo (obstructions), 10 miles; from Celilo to Priest Rapids, 198 miles, and from the mouth of the Snake River at Ainsworth to Asotin, Wash., it is 146 miles; making in all a total of 540 miles.

That is the distance that would be open to free navigation, provided the improvement so wisely provided for in the bill by the Senate Committee on Commerce is accomplished.

The first investigations of the obstructions between Celilo and The Dalles by the Government with a view to permanent improvement was made in 1874, by Maj. N. Michler, Corps of Engineers, whose report will be found in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army for 1875, part 2, page 787. Major Michler in his report says:

The importance of the proposed improvement can not be overestimated. The difficult problem of engineering which must be solved will, at least at one of the localities, The Dalles, at first sight appear almost insurmountable.

Later investigations were made by the Government under the direction of Congress in 1879, and a detailed and comprehensive survey with a project for improvement was made by Capt. (now Maj.) C. F. Powell, Corps of Engineers. This report the Senate will find printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1882, part 3, page 2690.

It provided for the use of the river at low water from the town of The Dalles, Oreg., up as far as the foot of Celilo Falls, by an open river without locks. The passage of Celilo Falls was provided for by a canal and locks on the Washington bank. This project required the excavation of much rock in the open river portion in widening and straightening the channel from The Dalles up to Celilo Falls.

Major Powell, in his report on this project, said:

> The Columbia is the great river of the Pacific coast. In volume and commercial value it is second only to the Mississippi. Its banks are more stable, its waters are more clear, its ice blockades are much less in duration than on the great waterway of the East. Unlike the Mississippi, the Columbia seeks the ocean on a line parallel to trade channels and not at right angles to them.

The estimate of the cost of this project was $7,647,495.51, and a supplemental project permitting the use of the river during high-water stages was included, requiring an additional $2,842,848.20, making a total of $10,517,343.71 for the improvement for all boat stages.

It will thus be seen that the estimate was entirely too high, and subsequent developments have shown that to be true. A new project was proposed, a boat railway was provided for, as the Senate will remember, and an appropriation at one time for the full estimate of the appropriation for a boat railway, amounting to a total of over $2,800,000, was passed through the Senate, but failed in the House of Representatives.

By this proposed boat railway vessels were to be removed entirely from the water by vertical hydraulic lifts; the one at one end 77 feet high and the one at the other end 62 feet high, the boats to be transported on a car over a broad-gauge track about 9 miles long around the obstructions and then returned to the river by the lift at the other end. This report was submitted in 1890, and the estimated cost was $2,860,356.35.

The second board was reconvened to consider these plans in 1892, and submitted a report April 12, 1893, the board being divided, one part recommending the construction of a canal with locks, and the other adhering to the boat railway project.

Subsequently a bill became a law as a part of the river and harbor bill providing for a boat railway at this point. A right of way was obtained, but upon subsequent examination the Engineer Department came to the conclusion that it was better to abandon the idea of a boat railway and provide for a canal.

There is a balance unexpended, which was heretofore appropriated for the boat railway, of $214,500. The House of Representatives instead of utilizing that balance or making provision for the construction of the canal and locks at Celilo, provided for another survey and estimate.

The estimate of a later survey of Engineer Hart is a little less than $4,000,000, the precise amount is $3,969,371, only a little over one-third of the former estimate. It is believed, Mr. President, by the people of the northwest Pacific coast, familiar with the conditions there, and with the character of the proposed improvements, that the estimate is a reasonable one and that, based on that estimate, Congress should proceed without any further delay to make this improvement.

If there is any one subject upon which the people of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho are intensly interested, it is the opening up of the Columbia and Snake rivers to free navigation. It must be borne in mind that the Columbia is one of the great rivers of the world, the greatest by all odds on the Pacific coast of North America. It drains an enormous area, an area estimated to contain more than 245,000 square miles, over 180,000 square miles of which lie east of the Cascade Mountains. It is in area about equal to the combined areas of all the New England States, including also New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Maryland. The drainage basin of the Columbia River is second only in point of size and commercial importance in the United States. The area of productive country to be affected in a greater or less degree by the proposed improvement at The Dalles and Celilo includes, as stated in Mr. Hart's report, the following districts:

First. The Lewiston district embracing over 2,000,000 acres, including Wallowa County, Oreg.; Asotin County, Wash.; and all of Nes Perce, Latah, and Idaho counties, and a part of Shoshone County, Idaho;

Second. The Palouse or Colfax district, including Whitman County, Wash.;

Third. Bid Bend or Spokane district, including Spokane, Lincoln, Douglas, Adams, and Franklin counties, Wash.;

Fourth. Wallawalla district, including Wallawalla, Garfield, and Columbia counties, Wash.;

Fifth. Yakima Valley, including Yakima and Kittitas counties, Wash.;

Sixth. Pendleton district, including Umatilla, Morrow, Union, and Wallowa counties, Oreg.; and Seventh. The Dalles district, including Sherman, Wasco, Gilliam, and Wheeler counties, Oreg., and Klickitat County, Wash.

The cereals produced annually in the Columbia and Snake River valleys amount in the neighborhood of 50,000,000 bushels. This great country is rich, not only in cereals but in timber. In the Clear River Valley it is said that the white pine now standing is estimated at 2,700,000,000 feet, lumber measure, and is said to cover over 270,000 acres, while in the Grande Ronde Valley, in eastern Oregon, there is also some 250,000 acres of yellow pine standing, amounting to 2,500,000,000 feet, lumber measure, of merchantable lumber, to say nothing of the gold and copper mines in Idaho, eastern Oregon, and Washington, which are exceedingly valuable and productive. The gold belt of eastern Oregon alone produces considerably over $2,000,000 annually in gold alone, while the Coeur d'Alene, of Shoshone County, Idaho, has the largest lead-silver mines in the United States; while undeveloped copper mines in the Seven Devils district, along the Snake River between Lewiston, Idaho, and Huntington, Oreg., are lying dormant simply for lack of means of transportation.

In referring to the products of this great inland empire we must not overlook the wool product, the oats, the barley, the cattle, the sheep, the fruit, and the hogs.

The amendment proposed by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate strikes out that provision of the House bill providing for a further survey and estimate, and provides for the utilization of the $214,500, the unexpended balance heretofore appropriated for a boat railway for this purpose—that is, of procuring a right of way for and commencing the construction of a canal and locks at Celilo, and also authorizes a contract to be made to the extent of $400,000 more.

Mr. President, no more important proposition is involved in this bill from beginning to end than the one of which I am speaking. It is not a local matter, but one of national character, which affects vitally the whole Pacific Northwest. It is a matter of the utmost importance to the people of the Northwest, to the people of Oregon, of Washington, and of Idaho, and, therefore, I trust there will be no more dallying with this subject and that this amendment may be retained by our conference committee. I should like to have all the names signed to these petitions printed in the RECORD, but I shall not ask to have that done. I shall ask that this petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce, to the end that it may brought to the attention of the conferees of the two Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, it was Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 200 copies, in addition to the usual number, of the river and harbor bill with Senate amendments numbered.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of the civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose, Mr. President, the first matter in order is the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] in the nature of a substitute for section 1. Am I right? Is that the first amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that no amendment is now before the Senate for consideration. The amendments presented by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] were presented for the purpose of being printed.

Mr. LODGE. The committee amendments were all disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Chair is informed.

Mr. LODGE. But amendments were offered by the Senator from Utah and by the Senator from Tennessee. They are amendments to different parts of the bill, and I suppose, of course, will have to be considered before we proceed to the consideration of the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. LODGE. I think they are in the nature of amendments perfecting the text of the bill, and I suppose they will be taken up in their order by sections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the amendments will have to be offered from the floor. The amendments were simply submitted for the purpose of being printed, and they are not formally and properly now before the Senate. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. CARMACK] is not in the Chamber at present, but he will be here presently. I believe he offered an amendment to the bill, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] offered several amendments. Both Senators will be in the Chamber in two or three minutes, I think.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the Senator from Tennessee to say that his colleague and the Senator from Utah will be in the Senate in a moment.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will say that both those Senators have been sent for, and are expected to return in a moment.

Mr. LODGE. I only desire to go on with the bill.

Mr. DUBOIS. I myself have been away for a week and am not familiar with the situation.

Mr. LODGE. I know the Senator has been away.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me, I suggest that those who have not had the opportunity for enlightenment which the members of the committee have had would like very much to hear from the affirmative side of the proposition. We should like to have the Senator, who is the honored chairman of the committee and who is familiar with all the details of the bill, which is certainly a most important and far-reaching measure, explain its provisions to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The chairman of the committee in his report has stated all he has to state about the provisions of the bill. He is prepared to discuss them if they are discussed by others. The chairman has described the bill in the report submitted by him.

Mr. BATE. I do not doubt but that the bill will be discussed by my colleague and also by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], as I said a while ago.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Utah has a number of elaborate amendments, which have been presented, and which I suppose he will be prepared to go on with to-day. He offered them and had them printed.

Mr. PETTUS. If it is not contrary to the wishes of the Senator in charge of the bill, I ask that it may be laid over until to-morrow morning, with a view of taking up the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. I can not have this bill displaced, Mr. President. The Senator from Alabama must be aware of that.

Mr. PETTUS. I do not want the bill to lose its place.

Mr. LODGE. The motion to lay it aside would, of course, displace it.

Mr. PETTUS. I move, then, that the bill be laid over until to-morrow morning, retaining its place as the unfinished business.

Mr. LODGE. The bill has been made the unfinished business by the Senate, and the committee are ready to go on with it. The bill has been before the Senate for ten days or two weeks, and I am anxious to dispose of it at the earliest possible moment. I hope that Senators will discuss it, to vote on the amendments, or else allow us to fix some time for a vote, and then they can arrange to debate the bill at their own convenience. So long as it is placed as it is I shall be obliged to press it every day upon the attention of the Senate and to endeavor to get action upon it. I do not want to incommode Senators on either side, but I am left no choice while the matter is open in this way.

Mr. BACON. As the Senator from Massachusetts is on the floor and declines to go forward on his own motion to explain the provisions of the bill, there may be some things in it that I should like to hear about, and which, with his permission, I shall ask him about.

Mr. LODGE. I shall try to respond, with great pleasure.

Mr. BACON. I should like to have the Senator explain why it is that in this bill——

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I was called out of the Chamber and did not hear the particular statement of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I have made no statement.

Mr. CARMACK. Then what was the Senator's proposition?

Mr. LODGE. The bill came up, and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] said that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], who had offered amendments which are pending, were absent, and that they would return in a moment. I supposed the Senators would be ready to go on with the amendments which they had proposed. I have said nothing about the bill at all.

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] was called from the Chamber to attend a committee meeting a few moments ago. He said to me that he was called out for a while and would be back as soon as possible. I suppose he will return in a few minutes. Of course I should not like to see the amendment of the Senator from Utah acted on in his absence.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not. I should not, of course, want to have the amendment acted on in the absence of the Senator.

Mr. CARMACK. I supposed the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] would go on with some statement in regard to the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I have no statement to make in regard to the bill, as I stated to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], except the statement made in the report of the committee. Of course, I am ready to discuss the details of the bill, if objections are made to any part of it, and I will try to the best of my ability to explain its provisions, but I have no set speech in regard to the bill and do not propose to make any.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that we might have the report of the majority of the committee read.

Mr. LODGE. Very well, let the report be read; it is very brief.

Mr. DUBOIS. Let the report be read. I will say that this side of the Chamber is prepared, I think, to discuss the bill at some considerable length; but I do not know whether any Senator is ready to go on to-day. To-morrow, no doubt, there will be Senators on this side ready to participate in the debate and keep it up continuously until the time arrives for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report of the committee will be read.

Mr. TELLER. Before the report is read I want to ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution, which, I suppose, will go to the Committee on the Philippines. I withheld the resolution this morning because the chairman of the committee was not in the Senate at that time, and I was uncertain whether it ought to go to the Judiciary Committee or to the Committee on the Philippines. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be now read and considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas it has appeared by Associated Press dispatches from Manila, which have not since been denied, that the editors of two newspapers published in Manila, viz, Freedom and Volcano, neither of which papers are hostile to American rule in the Philippines, have been, at the instance of the United States Philippine Commission, arrested under the sedition laws adopted by the said Commission; and

Whereas the offense of the editor of Freedom consists in that he caused to be published in his newspaper an article copied from an American periodical, to which the said editor agreed in his said paper, and further that he added remarks of his own to said article censuring the United States Philippine Commission rule, saying that when it started every paper in the city upheld it, since which they had all dropped by the wayside, as they would not support arbitrary government, especially when evidence of carpetbagging and rumors of "graft" were too thick to be pleasant; and further, in that the said editor charged that in many cases the Filipino officeholders are rascals and that the Commission has exalted to the highest positions Filipinos that are notoriously corrupt; and

Whereas the offense of the editor of Volcano consists in that he demanded the removal of the judge who recently tried one Señor Valdez, editor of another Manila journal, whom the said judge fined 4,000 pesetas for an alleged libel of two of the Filipino members of the said Commission, and which judge is now trying the said editor of Freedom under said sedition laws; and

Whereas under the said sedition laws the said defendants to said prosecutions are denied the right of trial by jury, and are forced under said sedition laws to submit to trial before a judge appointed by the very Commission for the criticism of members of which they are charged with sedition; and

Whereas under the said sedition laws the truth of charges made against the said Commission, or members thereof, constitute no defense and are not receivable as a defense nor in mitigation; and

Whereas the said sedition laws have, in the main, been copied from Spain's sedition laws, which were in force under Spanish rule to crush out both freedom of speech and of the press, that the tyrannical and hated Government of Spain might continue its oppressive rule over the people of said archipelago; and

Whereas perfect peace reigns in the said city of Manila and surrounding country, and the governor of said islands declares that he is as safe in the streets of Manila as in the city of Washington; and

Whereas such laws are hateful to all liberty-loving people and instruments fit only for the hand of tyrants; and

Whereas by the enactment of such laws and the denial of trial by jury to those accused under them, and the administration of such laws by judges appointed by the officials against whom the offenses are alleged to have been committed, and who have reserved to themselves the right to remove said judges at pleasure, every vestige of civil liberty is destroyed, and life, personal liberty, and property are without the security of law, and the Filipino people are being taught to hate the United States even as much as they hated Spain: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the said sedition laws and all of them should be immediately repealed and prosecutions under them immediately cease, and that no person shall hereafter be punished by death, imprisonment, or fine in the provinces of the Philippine Islands in which armed resistance to the authority of the United States has ceased, unless the accused upon demand has been tried before a jury of his peers and lawfully pronounced guilty; and, further, that hereafter in the courts of said archipelago, when the offense charged consists of words spoken or written against any citizen or official or department of said government, the truth of said words spoken or written may be given in evidence and shall constitute a full and perfect defense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] said that he thought the minority would be ready to go on to-morrow, and, as it is obvious that they are not prepared to go on this afternoon. I do not think anything would be gained by now pressing the bill, and so I will ask that it be laid aside temporarily, so that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMillan] may proceed with the bill of which he gave notice and said he would call it up in the morning hour to-morrow; but to-morrow, after the routine business, I shall move to take up the Philippine bill and proceed to its consideration.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I withdraw my request for the reading of the report, with the understanding announced by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to make a suggestion to the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines. It seems to me that we ought to have some statement from the chairman beyond the reading of the report. If he does not think he ought to make such a statement, I have nothing further to say about it; but I want to know what is the status of the people of the Philippines. I see that the bill provides that they are to be citizens of the Philippine Islands. I desire to know whether or not they are to be citizens of the United States, or what is the theory of the pending bill in that regard?

Mr. LODGE. We have adopted the clause in the pending bill which was adopted in the Porto Rican bill in regard to the status of the people of Porto Rico.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that we have reached a point where we should determine what is the status of these people. The treaty reserves to Congress the right to determine whether these people are to be citizens or not. There is some difference between them——

Mr. LODGE. In the Porto Rican bill we determined the status of the people of Porto Rico.

Mr. TELLER. What did we determine?

Mr. LODGE. We determined that they were citizens of Porto Rico, entitled to the protection of the United States and owing allegiance to the United States. In the bill providing a government for the Philippines we followed that clause exactly.

Mr. TELLER. That is a new relation that these people bear to the Government of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. It is not a new relation.

Mr. TELLER. That is one of the very important questions to be discussed in this bill, and I shall insist, if it is possible, while this bill is pending to have a determination of the question whether the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands are citizens of the United States or whether they are not. It seems to me that it would be easy enough to determine whether it is policy to make them citizens or whether it is not policy to make them citizens. Of course the minority can not do that. We have got to depend upon the majority of this Senate to do that.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. If the people of the Philippine Islands are not to be citizens of the United States, their status respecting the United States or in relation to the United States ought to be determined in some way. We do not say they are citizens of the United States, and do not say what they are.

Mr. TELLER. That is exactly what I mean. To say that they are citizens of the Philippine Islands does not mean anything at all. They are inhabitants of the Philippine Islands; and if the Philippine Islands have such a status that they can have citizens, I suppose their inhabitants would be citizens without a declaration to that effect. I should like to know what the theory is. It seems to me that these people can not be citizens of a mere island. They may be inhabitants of an island, but they are not citizens of an island; they are not citizens of Luzon or of some other island. There must be a sovereignty before there can be a citizen. It may be a qualified sovereignty, I admit; it may not be a complete sovereignty, perhaps, but there must be some sovereignty. Those people must owe allegiance to some political body. If they are citizens of the Philippine Islands, then there must be some sort of sovereignty in those islands. I want to know whether that is what the committee mean.

Mr. LODGE. The committee means to say exactly what the Congress said in the case of Porto Rico—that these people shall be held to be citizens of the islands where they live, entitled to the protection of the United States, just as we said the inhabitants of Porto Rico should be citizens of Porto Rico, entitled to the protection of the United States. We defined their status, and we define the status of the people of the Philippine Islands in the pending bill in that way. The committee felt, as the Congress felt about Porto Rico, that they were not defining a citizen of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. The cases are not at all analogous. We organized a civil government—a Territorial government—in Porto Rico. We are not doing that in the Philippines under this bill.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will excuse me, we did not organize Porto Rico as a Territory—we specifically did not.

Mr. TELLER. Well, you may say you did not do it in so many words, but that is the legal effect of it.

Mr. LODGE. The precise object of the definition was to escape the organization of a Territory.

Mr. TELLER. I know Congress did not say the Territory of Porto Rico. They were careful enough not to say that. The truth is that the party in power did not know what they wanted to declare. That was rather early in this controversy, and nobody felt like embarrassing the conditions by then insisting upon a specific declaration. It seems to me we have now passed to a point where we should declare either that these people are citizens of the United States or that they are not citizens of the United States—one or the other. If they are not citizens of the United States, then we must declare just what is their obligation to us and what our obligation is to them.

Mr. LODGE. I think we do declare they are not citizens of the United States by the principle of exclusion. We declare them to be something else.

Mr. CARMACK. What is that something else?

Mr. LODGE. Citizens of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. TELLER. A man may be a citizen of the State of Illinois and a citizen of the United States at the same time.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; the two things are not incompatible.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] that the action of the Congress in the passage of the bill with reference to Porto Rico can not be pleaded as a justification for following the same course in the bill with reference to the Philippines, for the reason that the action of Congress with reference to Porto Rico in this regard is absolutely indefensible and without any logical justification. As suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller], a man to be a citizen of any country must be the citizen of a sovereignty, and, as stated by him, it may be a qualified sovereignty, but still it is a sovereignty within a certain scope.

To say that a man is a citizen of Porto Rico is, as properly expressed by the Senator from Colorado, to say practically nothing. You say a man in Porto Rico is a citizen of Porto Rico. What does it mean? Has Porto Rico any sovereignty? It was playing with words when Congress said that a man living in Porto Rico was a citizen of Porto Rico owing allegiance to the United States. Those who had the determination of what should be stated in that bill were reluctant, if not afraid, to express what was the truth. To say that a man is a citizen of Porto Rico and owes allegiance to the United States, thereby implying that he is not a citizen of the United States, simply means to say what they did not wish to put in words, that he is a subject of the United States. That is the effect of the Porto Rican bill. That is the meaning of it. And yet the dominant party controlling the bill did not have the courage to use those words.

Mr. President, what is the effect of that? I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts, as he has charge of this bill and as we have the same problem now before us, to the remarkable fact that there is no provision of law by which a Porto Rican can become a citizen of the United States. There is no provision of law by which an inhabitant of Porto Rico, if he comes to the United States, can be made a citizen of the United States. A white person or a person of African descent can come from Africa or South America, or any other country on the top of the whole earth, and he can be naturalized as a citizen of the United States, but the terms of our naturalization law will not permit any man who is an inhabitant of what are now so fondly termed "our possessions" to be naturalized as a citizen of the United States.

Therefore to say that a man is a citizen of Porto Rico absolutely not only means nothing, but in denying that he is a citizen of the United States we at the same time deny to him the benefit of the naturalization laws, which apply only to the subjects of a foreign potentate or power. If we intend, Mr. President, that the inhabitants of these various islands, not only of the Philippines, but of Porto Rico, shall remain in the status which is now prescribed by the act with reference to Porto Rico—if we intend that they shall be "subjects" of the United States, let us at least be frank and say so in plain language.

I wish to call attention to the fact that there can be no mistake as to the purpose of Congress in the Porto Rican act to deny to Porto Ricans citizenship of the United States. This is shown by the fact that when that bill was first introduced, and when it first came back from the committee, it did contain a provision recognizing in terms the Porto Ricans as citizens of the United States. It went to the extent of giving them a Delegate in Congress. But the necessities of the legislation which was proposed, by which a tariff wall was to be erected between Porto Rico and the United States, required that the relation of citizens should be denied, because, of course, the Porto Ricans could not be citizens of the United States unless Porto Rico was a part of the United States, and the law could not recognize Porto Rico as part of the United States if it proposed to erect a tariff wall between that island and the United States, as the Constitution of the United States prohibits the exercise of any such power. Therefore the original provision in the bill, which, in so many words, recognized the Porto Ricans as "citizens of the United States" was stricken out and the words "citizens of Porto Rico" were substituted in their stead.

When Congress said that the Porto Ricans should be citizens of Porto Rico, I repeat that, taken by itself, it meant absolutely nothing. A man may be a citizen of a limited sovereignty, but as to the ultimate paramount sovereignty he must either be a citizen or a subject. There is no other ground for him to occupy. There is no other place in the whole world—and I challenge the Senator from Massachusetts to point it out, if I am in error—where a man fails to occupy the position of either citizen or subject to the government which is in ultimate and paramount control over him. And yet we here deny that the Porto Rican is a citizen of the United States and we have not the courage to say he is a subject of the United States. And we are about to repeat the same thing as to the Filipinos. It is a waste of words to say that they are "citizens of the Philippine Islands." These words simply mean that the Filipinos are subjects of the United States, and that we are afraid to write those words into the statute book.

Mr. LODGE. I think the clause is perfectly plain and its meaning perfectly plain, and I think it can be easily defended; but as I have already said that I would ask that the bill be laid aside, inasmuch as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] is very desirous to go on and finish this afternoon the bill of which he is in charge, I will not now enter upon a discussion of the point, but will renew my request that the bill may be temporarily laid aside to enable the Senator from Michigan to call up his bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I wish to state that at the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] I should like to have the bill of which I have charge go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. LODGE. Very well. Then I withdraw my request.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 12498) extending the time for completing bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 12867) to authorize the Shreveport Bridge and Terminal Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Red River, in the State of Louisiana, at or near Shreveport;

A bill (H. R. 12938) to authorize the New Orleans and Mississippi Midland Railroad Company of Mississippi to build and maintain a railway bridge across Pearl River; and

A bill (H. R. 13575) to grant a right of way to the Warrior Southern Railway Company through the tract of land in the State of Alabama reserved for the use of the United States in connection with the improvement of the Black Warrior River, and known as Lock Four.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 5096) to place the name of Paul Crum on the muster rolls of Company B, First Regiment North Dakota Volunteer Infantry; and

A bill (H. R. 10819) for the relief of George T. Winston, president of North Carolina College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, and W. S. Primrose, chairman board trustees.

The bill (H. R. 4393) reserving from the public lands in the State of Oregon, as a public park for the benefit of the people of the United States, and for the protection and preservation of the game, fish, timber, and all other natural objects therein, a tract of land herein described, etc., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 7642) providing for the holding of terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States at Kansas City, Kans., and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 10995) to regulate the introduction of eggs of game birds for propagation was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

The bill (H. R. 13359) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHATTAHOOCHEE RIVER BRIDGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 13246) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Chattahoochee River between Columbus, Ga., and Eufaula, Ala., or in the city of Columbus, Ga.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The bill was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, and by unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. BACON. I move to amend the bill on page 3, line 2, after the word "bridge," by inserting "equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 4897) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Chattahoochee River at some point between Columbus, Ga., and Eufaula, Ala., or in the city of Columbus, Ga., was passed, and that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. As no Senator seems to be ready to proceed with the debate on the Philippine question this afternoon, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 22, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 21, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

HERBERT A. BOOMHOWER.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4821) granting an increase of pension to Herbert A. Boomhower, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

S. W. SMITH,
A. B. DARRAGH,
RUDOLPH KLEBERG,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. GALLINGER,
J. C. PRITCHARD,
PARIS GIBSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement was read, as follows:

This bill passed the House at $24 per month. It was amended in the Senate to $17 per month.

The result of the conference is that the Senate recedes from its amendment, and the conferees recommend that the bill pass at $24 per month, the same as it was originally passed in the House of Representatives.

S. W. SMITH,
A. B. DARRAGH,
RUDOLPH KLEBERG,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, the motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House, this day is assigned to business for the District of Columbia, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland.

BILLIARD AND POOL TABLES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 3439) to amend an act entitled "An act to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

That section 4 of an act entitled "An act to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 25, 1897, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto before the penalty clause thereof the following:

"And it shall be unlawful for the proprietor or proprietors of any billiard or pool room or billiard or pool table, operated in connection with a barroom or other place where intoxicating liquors are sold, to suffer or permit any minor under 18 years of age to frequent, visit, or patronize the same."

With the following amendments recommended by the committee:

Line 10, after the word "any," insert the words "billiard or." After the word "or" insert "billiard or." After the word "table" insert a comma and the following words: "operated in connection with a bar room or other place where intoxicating liquors are sold;" so that, commencing with line 9, the same will read as follows:

"And it shall be unlawful for the proprietor or proprietors of any billiard or pool room or billiard or pool table, operated in connection with a bar room or other place where intoxicating liquors are sold, to suffer or permit any minor under 18 years of age to frequent, visit, or patronize the same.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MUDD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PROMOTION OF ANATOMICAL SCIENCE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 5046) for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be, and is hereby, created, in and for the District of Columbia, a board for the control of the dead human bodies hereinafter described, and for the distribution of such bodies among and to the schools in said District conferring the degree of doctor of medicine or doctor of dental surgery, or both; the Post Graduate School of Medicine, incorporated by an act of Congress approved February 7, 1896, entitled "An act to incorporate the Post Graduate School of Medicine of the District of Columbia;" the medical schools of the United States Army and Navy; the medical examining boards of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine-Hospital Service; and the board of medical supervisors of the District of Columbia.

Said board shall be known as the Anatomical Board of the District of Columbia, and shall consist of the health officer of said District and two representatives from each school aforesaid actually engaged in teaching, to be selected by and from the faculty thereof in accordance with the by-laws of such faculty, except in the case of the medical schools of the United States Army and Navy, the representatives from which shall be selected and detailed by the Surgeon-General of the Army and the Surgeon-General of the Navy. Said health officer shall call a meeting of said anatomical board for organization at a time and place to be fixed by said health officer as soon as practicable after the passage of this act. Said anatomical board shall have full power to establish by-laws for its government and to appoint and to remove proper officers and agents, and shall keep full and complete records of its transactions and of all material facts pertaining to the receipt and distribution of bodies. Said records shall be open at all times for inspection by any member of said anatomical board and by the United States attorney for the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That every public officer, agent, and servant, and every officer, agent, and servant of any and every almshouse, prison, jail, asylum, morgue, hospital, and other public institutions and offices having charge or control of dead human bodies requiring to be buried at public expense, shall notify said anatomical board, or such person as may be designated by the said board, whenever any dead human body comes into his possession, charge, or control for burial at public expense. And every such officer, agent, and servant shall, upon application by said anatomical board or its agent, without fee or reward, and complying with the laws and regulations governing the removal of dead human bodies in the District of Columbia, deliver every such body to said board and permit said board or its agent to take and remove the same. The notice aforesaid shall be given in writing and forwarded to said anatomical board within twenty-four hours after said officer, agent, or servant comes into possession, charge, or control of such body for burial, and shall include such material information as said board may designate. But no such body shall be delivered if the deceased person, during his last illness, without suggestion or solicitation, requested to be buried or cremated; or if within the time specified above and before the actual delivery thereof any person claiming to be and satisfying the officer in charge of such body that he is of kindred or is related by marriage to the deceased shall claim the said body for burial or cremation, or request in writing that it be buried at public expense; or if within the time specified above and before actual delivery any person claiming to be and satisfying the officer in charge of such body that he is a friend of the deceased arranges to have the same properly buried or cremated without expense to the District; or if the deceased person was a traveler who died suddenly; but in any such case said body shall be buried or delivered to said applicant for burial.

SEC. 3. That the said anatomical board may receive the bodies reported to it as aforesaid, and may distribute and deliver such as are received among and to such of the schools and boards entitled thereto as request in writing to receive the same, except as otherwise expressly directed in this act. Each such school and board shall receive annually, as nearly as may be practicable, such proportion of the entire number of bodies distributed as the number of students enrolled and in regular attendance at such school, and the number of candidates appearing for examination before such board, respectively, engaged bona fide at such school, or examined by said board in dissecting, and operative surgery on the cadaver, bears to the total number of students so enrolled in attendance, and engaged, and of persons so examined, in the District of Columbia. The secretary, dean, or other proper officer of each such schools and board shall report to said anatomical board the names of all such students in attendance at such school or persons examined by said board, as the case may be, at such times and in such form as said board may direct.

All bodies shall be delivered among such schools and boards in regular order so as to maintain, as nearly as may be practicable, an equitable allotment at all times; and bodies assigned to any school or board in regular order and refused by such school or board without sufficient cause shall be charged against the quota of such school or board in such manner as not to prejudice any other school or board. But no body shall be delivered to any school or board unless within not less than twenty-four hours prior to such delivery notice of the death has been given by said anatomical board to the nearest known kinsman, relative by marriage, or friend of the deceased, or if none such be known, published by said anatomical board at least once in a daily newspaper published in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia. The notice required by this section shall be deemed to have been given if served in writing on the person to be notified, or if left at his usual place of residence with some adult person residing therein, or a member of the family of such person. Said board shall take receipts by name, or, if the name be unknown, by a description, for each body delivered; all receipts so obtained by said board shall be properly filed by it.

SEC. 4. That no school except the medical schools of the United States Army and Navy shall receive any body under the provisions of this act until said school has given bond to the District of Columbia, and the Board of Commissioners of said District has approved such bond, which said bond shall be in the penal sum of $200 and conditioned that all bodies which said school shall receive shall be used in said District and only for the promotion of the science and art of medicine and of dentistry.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of each and every officer, agent, and employee of every school and board receiving bodies under the provisions of this act to see that such bodies are used in the District of Columbia and for the promotion of the science and art of medicine and of dentistry, and for no other purpose whatsoever, and that after being so used the remains thereof are disposed of in accordance with law.

SEC. 6. That any person who shall, in the District of Columbia, sell or buy any body aforesaid, or in any way traffic therewith, or transmit or convey any such body to any place outside of said District, or cause or procure any such body to be transmitted or conveyed, or who shall, in said District, disturb or remove, without legal permit, any body from any grave or vault, shall, on conviction thereof, be fined not more than $200 or imprisoned in the workhouse of said District for not more than one year.

SEC. 7. That neither the United States nor the District of Columbia, nor any officer, agent, or servant thereof, shall be at any expense by reason of the delivery of any body or bodies aforesaid, except such as may be properly chargeable on account of bodies delivered to the medical schools of the Army and Navy, the medical examining boards of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine-Hospital Service, and the board of medical supervisors of the District of Columbia; but all expenses of such delivery and distribution, except as hereinbefore specified, and of said anatomical board, shall be paid by the schools receiving such bodies, in such manner as may be specified by said board and by such school in proportion to the number of bodies which it has received; and no school which has failed or refused to pay its just proportion of such expense as determined by said board shall be allowed to receive any body or bodies, or parts thereof, while the amount so due remains unpaid.

SEC. 8. That any person having any duty enjoined upon him by the provisions of this act who willfully neglects, refuses, or fails to perform the same, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment in the workhouse of the District of Columbia for not more than one year.

SEC. 9. That all prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia, on information brought in the name of said District on its behalf.

SEC. 10. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, this bill has already passed the House and Senate with the exception of a slight amendment incorporated herein made at the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy. The only effect of the amendment is to provide that a representative of the Medical Corps of the Navy shall be a member of the anatomical board created by the bill and to extend the benefits of the measure to the medical schools of the Navy as well as of the Army. With that exception, it is the same bill that passed both the House and Senate and was in the hands of the President, but it was recalled at the request of the Secretary of the Navy for the purpose of incorporating the amendment I have referred to.

The bill was considered, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MUDD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

POSTPONEMENT OF PAYMENT OF TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I now call up House joint resolution 178, and, as I understand, there is a similar resolution of the Senate now on the Speaker's table. I move to substitute the Senate joint resolution 80 for the House resolution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Senate joint resolution will be read instead of the House joint resolution.

The Clerk read Senate joint resolution No. 80, as follows:

Joint resolution postponing the payment of taxes on real estate in the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1903 from November, 1902, to May, 1903, and for other purposes.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the collection of taxes on real property and improvements thereon in the District of Columbia, which will become payable in the month of November, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, suspended until the month of May, 1903, at which time said taxes shall be due and payable, and the collection thereof shall be enforced in all respects, as provided under existing law for the collection of taxes on real property and improvements thereon, for the tax year ending June 30, 1903.

SEC. 2. That the time for the completion of the duties of the board of equalization and review provided for in sections 9 and 10 of the act of Congress approved August 14, 1894, entitled "An act to provide an immediate revision and equalization of real estate values in the District of Columbia; also to provide an assessment of real estate in said District in the year 1896 and every third year thereafter, and for other purposes," be, and is hereby, extended to October 31, 1902.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have some explanation of this.

Mr. MUDD. The object of the resolution, Mr. Speaker, and the only effect of it, is to extend from June to October the time within which the board of equalization and review can complete its labors under the law providing for a reassessment of the property this year in the District of Columbia. The reason for the extension of the time arises out of the fact that during this year, because of an unusual and urgent necessity for the raising of more revenue for the District of Columbia, the board of equalization and review expects to make the work not a mere triennial revision, but a total reassessment, involving a different system from that pursued heretofore. They will not get through until about October, and that is the reason for asking for this extension of time. The resolution involves no new method of taxation in the District.

The other provision of the resolution is to the effect that the tax bills now payable by law in November, 1902, shall be suspended until the month of May, 1903. The reason for that arises out of the first proposition. By reason of this new assessment the board of equalization and review can not have the books ready for the receipt of taxes by November, and the receipt of taxes, if the work is done properly, will be upon a different and larger basis than at present.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MUDD. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. Will not the effect of that be that the taxpayers will be called upon to pay the taxes for 1903 and 1902 at the same time? In other words, will they not have to pay two years?

Mr. MUDD. No; under the law passed during the present session the taxes for the year 1903, which runs from July of this year to July of next year, are payable one-half thereof, at the option of the taxpayer, in November of this year.

Mr. FINLEY. The taxes for 1903 will be due in October, 1903?

Mr. MUDD. Oh, no; under this resolution they will be due in May, 1903.

Mr. BURKETT. Under this resolution you skip one year.

Mr. MUDD. Oh, no; this has no relation to any other year.

Mr. BURKETT. If the 1902 tax is payable in May, 1903, then the taxpayer will pay taxes twice in 1903.

Mr. MUDD. The fiscal year 1902 runs from July, 1901. That is my understanding.

Mr. BURKETT. And the tax for that year is payable——

Mr. MUDD. Was payable in November, 1901, and May, 1902. This resolution does not interfere with any other year than the one named.

Mr. BURKETT. But if the taxes payable in November of this year are carried over to 1903, then in that year there will be two payments.

Mr. MUDD. The tax year 1903, as I understand, runs from the middle of 1902 to the middle of 1903.

Mr. BURKETT. But there will be a payment due in November, 1903.

Mr. MUDD. That will be for the next year's taxes.

Mr. BURKETT. But there will be two payments of taxes in one year.

Mr. MUDD. The tax payment in November, 1903, will be optional with the taxpayer.

Mr. BURKETT. But there will be one payment in May and another payment in November of the same year.

Mr. MUDD. We have those two payments now in one year, at the option of the taxpayer.

Mr. BURKETT. But there will be taxes for two years payable within six months.

Mr. MUDD. The taxes for the year 1903, if this resolution passes, can be paid in May, 1903, only; and those for the year 1904 can be paid one-half in November, 1903, and one-half in May, 1904, if the taxpayers prefer thus to pay in installments.

Mr. BURKETT. Is not that the same as the present arrangement?

Mr. MUDD. The same that exists and will exist without the passage of this resolution. Not the same as will obtain for this year if the resolution passes.

Mr. JENKINS. In the District of Columbia there are two payments of taxes in a single year—one in May and the other in November. On account of a change of the law made during the present session of Congress it is impossible for the assessors and the board of equalization to complete their work so that the November payment can be made; so that instead of that payment being made this year, at the option of the taxpayer, the whole payment goes over until next May.

Mr. MUDD. Without interest added?

Mr. JENKINS. Without interest. The entire payment will be made next May instead of part being paid in November of this year.

Mr. BURKETT. That is just what I said; there will be two payments in one year within six months of each other.

Mr. JENKINS. It is the same tax——

Mr. BURKETT. But you compel the taxpayer to pay two years' taxes in one year, which is a hardship.

Mr. JENKINS. No; the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. MUDD. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken, the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MUDD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

PRIVILEGES OF SPECIAL POLICEMEN AT STREET CROSSINGS.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 12349) granting special privileges to the special policemen stationed at street crossings in the city of Washington, D. C.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That each of the special policemen stationed at street railway crossings and intersections in the District of Columbia under the law providing for such service shall, during each calendar year, be entitled to twenty days' leave of absence, at times to be determined by the Commissioners of said District, and to not exceeding twenty days' leave of absence due to their illness, and shall receive from the source prescribed in said law full pay during such absences. A sum sufficient to provide for the payment of substitute service for such officers during such absence is hereby appropriated, to be derived, disbursed, and accounted for as are the regular annual appropriations for the support of the government of said District.

SEC. 2. That hereafter the Commissioners shall deduct $1 each month from the pay of each such policeman, which sum shall be deposited with the auditor of said District to be invested by him from time to time in United States or District bonds. The fund so created shall be held subject to disbursement, on order of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for expenditures for the relief of any of said policemen who, by injury received or disease contracted in the line of duty only, shall become so permanently disabled as to be discharged from said service therefor, and, in case of the death of any such officer, for the relief of the widow or children of said officer and for funeral expenses, as the Commissioners shall determine.

The following amendment, reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, was read:

Page 1, line 12, strike out the words "is hereby appropriated, to be," also the comma between the words "appropriated" and "to," and substitute therefor the words "shall be."

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order that this bill should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MUDD. It makes no appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. But it involves a charge on the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken and that the bill must go upon the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MUDD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of House bill 12349.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MUDD. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. MUDD. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE], who reported the bill.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, this is a Commissioners' bill, as bills emanating from the Commissioners of the District are usually denominated in the District Committee. The first suggestion with regard to this subject was a bill in a different shape. That bill provided for the merging of the 37 street-crossing policemen into the regular Metropolitan police force. The superintendent of police and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia did not consider that merger a wise one, basing their objection upon the fact that there were greater qualifications and stricter rules imposed upon the regular Metropolitan force than upon the street-crossing police force.

I introduced the first bill, and after receiving these objections from the Commissioners of the District and from the superintendent of police wrote to the Commissioners of the District, asking them to prepare a bill which would meet their views and allow the same leave of absence and sick leave to the street-crossing policemen as are allowed by law now to the officers of the regular Metropolitan police force, and also providing a pension fund for the street crossing policemen. The reply I received from the Commissioners recommended the passage of this bill.

The bill referred to in this letter is the bill which is now being considered by this committee. In its first section, as the committee will observe, it provides for twenty days' leave of absence and twenty days' sick leave, which are the same leaves now allowed to the officers of the Metropolitan police force. It also contains an authorization of an appropriation to cover the expense incidental to the granting of these leaves of forty days—twenty days for sick leave and twenty days for regular leave—as now granted to the Metropolitan force.

The second section of this bill provides for the establishment of a pension fund for the street crossing policemen. That pension fund is made up of deductions from their own salaries, and not contributed to by the regular force or in any other way; nor under this bill do the street crossing police officers get any benefits of the present pension fund which was some years ago established for the benefit and protection of the regular Metropolitan force.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes.

Mr. HULL. This puts the street crossing police on an equality with the regular Metropolitan force?

Mr. PEARRE. Only as I have endeavored to explain, with reference to sick leave and leave of absence.

Mr. HULL. That is what I mean.

Mr. PEARRE. Yes.

Mr. HULL. And pensions.

Mr. PEARRE. No. As I was explaining, it creates a pension fund made up of contributions from their own salaries.

Mr. HULL. The Metropolitan police force make up the pension fund from the salaries of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. PEARRE. Partially so.

Mr. MUDD. And from certain fines.

Mr. PEARRE. As I was stating, Mr. Chairman, the Metropolitan police officer's pension fund is made up, first, of the deduction of a dollar from the salary of each man. In addition to that certain fines are appropriated to this fund, and also certain unclaimed property, which, under previous law, is to be sold and the proceeds turned into that fund, and of certain fines covered into this fund. I can give the gentleman the acts of Congress upon the subject.

Mr. HULL. I do not care for that. The street-crossing police have no pension except the deduction from their own salaries.

Mr. PEARRE. A deduction from their own salaries. This fund is created here in section 2. They have no relief of this sort now, although they are subjected to the same dangers.

Mr. HULL. Why should not they be put on the same basis as all the others?

Mr. PEARRE. There were some members of the committee who believed that they ought to, but the Commissioners of the District and the superintendent of police seemed to entertain a different view, and we adapted the bill to the views of the superintendent of police and the Commissioners. Indeed, the Commissioners prepared the bill covering the leave of absence and for a separate pension fund.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, for information, am I correct in the impression I have that these policemen at the street-railway crossings are now paid by the railways?

Mr. PEARRE. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois that his impression is entirely correct, and the probabilities are—nay, the certainty is that the gentleman participated in the legislation which brought that about. The act of June 24, 1898, in section 3, to define the rights of purchasers of the Belt Railway, and for other purposes, reads as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to station special policemen at such railway crossings and intersections in the city of Washington as said Commissioners may deem necessary, the expense of such service to be paid pro rata by the respective companies.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if that is the law, this is a proposition to grant to such policemen, paid by the railway companies, doing the work practically for the railway companies, twenty days' leave of absence each year on pay and twenty days' sick leave. That is what the bill provides. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that the other policemen in the city have only twenty days' leave of absence with pay?

Mr. PEARRE. As I understand it, the Metropolitan police force not only have twenty days' leave of absence, but twenty days' sick leave.

Mr. CANNON. I am informed that there is no sick leave; only the twenty days' leave of absence.

Mr. PEARRE. I am quite confident that the gentleman from Illinois is misinformed about that. I think, perhaps, I have a communication here from the Commissioners to that effect.

Mr. CANNON. The law passed in the Fifty-fourth Congress, I am informed, gives twenty days' annual leave to members of the Metropolitan police force. And I am not aware of anything to change that. I want to say if that is true that these street railway crossing policemen ought only to be placed on all fours with the other policemen.

Mr. PEARRE. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, as I said before, that I am confident he is misinformed about that; but the purpose of this bill is only to put them on the same footing as the members of the Metropolitan police force as regards leave of absence, and if we ascertain that such is the fact this bill can be so amended as to cover that.

Mr. CANNON. I apprehend that such is the fact. Now, one other question. It seems to me that this bill by its provisions throws the expense of the annual leave upon the United States and the District, instead of throwing it upon the street railway companies. These people being practically employees of the street railway companies, to police their crossings, it is perfectly patent, if the legislation ought to be had at all, it seems to me, that the expense of the twenty days' leave ought to go upon the railway companies.

Mr. PEARRE. If the gentleman will read the first section, I apprehend he will see that it is covered there:

That each of the special policemen stationed at street railway crossings and intersections in the District of Columbia under the law providing for such service shall, during each calendar year, be entitled to twenty days' leave of absence, at times to be determined by the Commissioners of said District, and to not exceeding twenty days' leave of absence due to their illness, and shall receive from the source prescribed in said law full pay during such absence.

Mr. CANNON. What law?

Mr. PEARRE. The law providing for such service; that is, the law embodied in section 3 of the act of June 24, 1898, which authorizes this special crossing service.

Mr. CANNON. Then the gentleman agrees that whether his bill does it or not, the leave of absence to these men ought to be the same as the leave of absence to the Metropolitan police force.

Mr. PEARRE. Quite so.

Mr. CANNON. He agrees, second, that if this bill does not provide for it, the leave of absence ought to be paid as their salaries are paid—by the railway companies.

Mr. PEARRE. I believe that the bill does so provide with regard to the leave of absence at least, because it says, as the gentleman will see:

Shall receive from the source prescribed in said law full pay during such absences.

That source is the railroad companies.

In other words, the railroad companies would continue to pay exactly what they pay now. The man would get the leave of absence and the company would pay for it. The companies pay these men now. They have no leave of absence. If the leave be granted, the companies would pay no more than they do now. The additional leave or sick leave of twenty days would be paid for by the Government, and, therefore, there is an authorization here of an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it seems to me that my friend, probably on further thought, will agree with me that these being practically employees of the railway companies, vested for obvious reasons with police powers, that this ought to be entirely at the expense of the railway companies.

Mr. PEARRE. I will say to the gentleman that I can not agree with the proposition at all.

Mr. CANNON. Well, then, we will fight it out along that line.

Mr. PEARRE. They are employed by the railroad companies; they do service for the railway companies, but in addition to that they perform incalculable service to the public, not only along the line of the particular service which they perform for the railroad companies, but in the performance of the general duty of a police officer, as will be indicated by the order issued by Major Sylvester, superintendent of the police force of the District, dated December 20, 1901:

DECEMBER 20, 1901.

LIEUTENANTS: The following copy of an order of the honorable Commissioners, District of Columbia, dated July 28, 1898, is published for the information of those concerned:

"Ordered, That the duties of the special policemen at street railroad crossings are hereby defined, as follows:

"To see generally that all police regulations are enforced."

Nothing could be more comprehensive than this part of this order.

Mr. CANNON. That is right.

Mr. PEARRE (continuing):

To see that street cars come to a full stop before crossing the street.

Mr. CANNON. That is right.

Mr. PEARRE (continuing):

To see that vehicles, including bicycles, shall not cross the streets at a rate of speed exceeding that allowed by law.

Now, that is a matter within the line and actual scope of the duties for which they are originally designed.

To see that bicycles and vehicles keep on the right-hand side of the street and make the proper turns at the crossings.

To do everything in their power to avoid accidents, rendering whatever assistance may be necessary in case an accident should occur.

In case of a violation of the law by any of the motormen or conductors of the street-car lines, notice shall be given by the officers to such motormen or conductors to appear in court at a given time to answer for the violation of the law, but no arrests shall be made so as to impede travel on the cars.

To aid pedestrians in safely crossing at crowded thoroughfares, and answer civilly such questions as may be asked them regarding location of streets, hotels, public buildings, etc.

Also, special policemen at street-railway crossings should not confine themselves to any one corner, but move about from corner to corner, giving themselves such exercise in this respect as will prevent illness. They should give special attention to the aged and infirm and women and children getting on and off cars, so that accidents may be avoided; prevent reckless and fast riding and driving and congestion of the street by pedestrians waiting for cars; maintain peace and good order at their respective posts, and see that the same are kept free from litter of every kind.

In case of an emergency call for police service within a reasonable distance of a post—special railway-crossing officers, having police powers, should respond.

Lunch hours have been prescribed by the respective lieutenants.

RICHARD SYLVESTER,
Major and Superintendent.

So it will be observed that these officers have police power.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me. There is not a thing in that order issued—if he has the power to issue it, and I presume he had—there is not one thing done but what is for the advantage of the railways and to the advantage of the public; but it vests, practically, the employees of these railways with police powers for the protection of the railways, and, incidentally, for the protection of the people. It seems to me that if they are to have this leave of absence that the railroads should pay for it. And I would ask my friend if he has thought of the proposition of giving the conductors and motormen leave of absence, also, who are other employees of these railroads?

Mr. PEARRE. I think the gentleman's mental fairness will discriminate between the case of the motormen and the conductors, who are on the cars and do not get off the cars, who do not attempt to regulate the street traffic, who have no police powers and do not undertake to assume police powers. I think the gentleman will recognize the difference between the duties of the motormen and conductors and these officers. The gentleman has practically admitted that these men not only perform this service in their duty to the companies, but that they perform such duties as are absolutely distinct from those for which they were originally designed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the phraseology of the bill. As to the general fund charged and special fund charged with the performance of this service provided for, the plural is used with reference to the leaves of absence, including the sick leave and general leave of absence. It uses the plural in both instances; and then the bill says, commencing at the third line from the bottom, on the first page:

A sum to provide for the payment of substitute service for such officers during such absences shall be derived, disbursed, and accounted for as are the regular annual appropriations for the support of the government of said District.

Charging, then, to the general fund this special service that is rendered necessary by these leaves of absence granted.

Mr. PEARRE. The absences of the respective officers is the clear and indubitable construction of this phrase.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But the gentleman will not contend that it is not charged to the District fund that is provided for equally by the Government and the District. This special class of service that is provided for them shall be given to these men, no matter how employed, one half of the expense paid on the part of the Government.

Mr. PEARRE. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The other half is paid by the railroad companies?

Mr. COWHERD. I desire the gentleman to yield to me before a vote is had on the bill.

Mr. PEARRE. I suppose there will be no objection to that. There is another observation which prompts me to support it, and that is this—that these officers are not appointed by the railroad companies, but are appointed by the Commissioners of the District themselves, and the Commissioners are the governing power of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. PEARRE. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. How many of these officers are there?

Mr. PEARRE. There are 37.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And these substitutes that this proposes shall be employed when they are absent on leave, will they be paid by the railroad companies or by the Government?

Mr. PEARRE. As I understand, one half by the railroad companies and the other half by the Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is the substitute?

Mr. PEARRE. That is, so far as I understand it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is not the correct interpretation of that that one half will be paid by the people of the District and the other half by the General Government?

Mr. PEARRE. No; one half will be paid by the General Government.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. PEARRE. I do.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I understand that some portion of the duty of these officers is rendered to the public as distinct from that rendered to the railroad company. I propose to speak on that question in a moment. I want to ask the gentleman from Maryland why the railroad company, or the city of Washington, should have imposed upon them as a separate and distinct burden the payment of any police officer or cost of police officers for services rendered to the general public?

Mr. PEARRE. In answer to the gentleman from New Jersey, I may say that I am unable to explain the reason except in this way. My information is that this third section of the act of July 24, 1898, was the embodiment of a suggestion of a distinguished Democrat, Arthur Pugh Gorman, at that time a Senator from Maryland. I never heard of the reasons given, and, not being a member of Congress at the time, I was not familiar with the discussion, if any arose, over that section of the bill which I am informed was introduced by the gentleman from Maryland at that time.

Mr. McDERMOTT. As I understand the gentleman, the only excuse for the unjust burden, if it is an unjust burden, is that it was proposed at the suggestion of a distinguished Democrat. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEARRE. I have not admitted, and I do not know that anybody has admitted, that there is any unjust burden imposed on the railroad company. As far as my own judgment goes, I may say that I do not believe that it is an unjust burden. I believe it is a perfectly proper and just burden, and that each one of these men earn three times over in his services to the railroad company the pittance which the railroad companies, under this law, are required to pay for their services.

However, I may also add that we have acted upon the suggestion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who have recommended this bill, and prepared this bill, and are behind this bill.

I may also add, Mr. Chairman, that perhaps the gentleman from New Jersey is even more familiar with the railroad system of the District of Columbia and the reasons why this or that or the other thing has been done in connection with their management than I can possibly be. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to go into any lengthy discussion in relation to this matter. It seemed apparent to the committee that the justness and wisdom of the provisions of this bill would be so apparent that they would meet with no opposition in the House. These men do good service on the crossings during the whole day through rain and sunshine, not only as custodians of the railroad companies, but they are there as custodians of the life and safety of the people of the District of Columbia.

In addition to that, if any crime be committed within their presence or within their sight they have jurisdiction and they have the power to make an arrest. They are required to make the arrest, and they are on the lookout for all thieves, pickpockets, and known criminals. Every morning a list of lost articles is published and sent by the marshal to the superintendent of police and to the various officers of the Metropolitan police, containing a list of property and a description of escaped criminals, fugitives from justice, and where some criminal who is wanted, and these lists are placed in their hands, and they are charged with the same duty in reference thereto as is the Metropolitan police force.

They must detect, pursue, and arrest criminals if the commission of a crime occurs in their vicinity, as it is the duty of the officers of the Metropolitan police force. They are brave, courageous, and faithful. Their fidelity is commended in communications to the committee by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, which Board of Commissioners, after having gone carefully over the whole matter, have submitted this bill to the judgment of the House.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PEARRE. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the question if he would consent for the bill to be so amended that the extra policemen shall be paid in the same manner as the regular policemen employed in this work are now paid?

Mr. PEARRE. The effect of that amendment would be to relieve the railroad companies of any burden and give the benefit of their services to the railroad company. I would not consent to that.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman has misconstrued my question entirely. I understand the policemen are now paid by the railroad companies.

Mr. PEARRE. That is correct.

Mr. FINLEY. I propose by the amendment to require the men employed as provided in this bill to be also paid by the railroad company. Will the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. PEARRE. I think the bill in its present form, as recommended by the Commissioners, presents the fairest proposition.

Mr. FINLEY. What objection can the gentleman have to the railroad company paying these extra policemen to be employed?

Mr. PEARRE. Simply this, that these police officers perform one half of the duties to the public and the other half to the company, and the company should share the expense. That seems to us the most just and equitable distribution of the burdens arising from the passage of the bill—a trifling one, it is true.

Mr. FINLEY. But I ask the gentleman what greater inequality or greater injury will be done the railroad company if it is right for them to pay this charge now by requiring them to continue to pay as they have done?

Mr. PEARRE. We are imposing an additional burden upon them by this bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to ask a question. Why should the public pay for policemen to look after the business of the railroad company?

Mr. PEARRE. I have endeavored to answer that question several times. These policemen not only look after the interest of the railroad company, but they also perform a public duty.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is the exact point of my inquiry. What business of the Government is it to have an officer there to attend to the business of the railroad company?

Mr. PEARRE. He attends not only to the railroad company's business, but to all matters which may come under the purview of any police officer. He is authorized to arrest any man guilty of a breach of the peace or any other violation of the law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why does not the railroad company have an officer there, employed and paid by the railroad company, and why does it not have gates there to protect the public instead of having the public pay an officer to stay there?

Mr. PEARRE. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the wisdom of the original proposition was passed upon by a former Congress in 1898. Neither the Commissioners nor the committee took up the question of changing the system in any degree. The railroads now pay these officers, and under this bill will pay one-half the additional expense for leaves. But in view of the fact that by this bill an additional burden and an additional expense would be imposed by reason of these leaves of absence, the committee thought it wise to follow the recommendation of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and provide for the District sharing this expense.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. As the railroad company is granted the privilege of crossing the streets in this way and thereby increases the danger to citizens, should not the company be made to pay for the officers necessary to be stationed there in order to make the arrangement reasonably safe for the public?

Mr. PEARRE. They do pay. They pay $2.50 a day to every watchman stationed at a railroad crossing. The only new thing provided for in this bill, as the gentleman will see if he examines it, is the granting of leave of absence for forty days annually to these policemen—twenty days as sick leave and twenty days regardless of sickness. To furnish substitutes during the leave of absence of the regular policemen will cost some money; and it is the proper distribution of that expense we are discussing here.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who pays the officer while he is on leave of absence?

Mr. PEARRE. That is a matter we have been discussing here for half or three quarters of an hour. I recommend the gentleman to read the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have sent for it. This measure is not going to get through here unless I know something about it.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman from Tennessee, as I understand his remarks, seems to be laboring under an impression that the railroad companies of the city are insisting that these policemen be stationed at these several crossings. I desire to correct the gentleman on that point. Congress has imposed upon the railroad companies the necessity of keeping those policemen at these crossings at the expense of the railroad company but in the interest of the public.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is all right; but let the railroad company pay for it.

Mr. JENKINS. The railway companies insist that they do not need these officers, that their employment is an unnecessary expense; but they are now paying upward of $36,000 a year for the purpose of maintaining the policemen at these several crossings.

Now, inasmuch as these officers are rendering this service, they want to be put on the same level as other employees of the Government with regard to leave of absence, including sick leave and other leave.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who is to pay for this?

Mr. JENKINS. The bill provides that one-half be paid out of the general fund and one-half out of the funds collected through the District of Columbia. The railway companies feel that they are already more heavily burdened than they ought to be.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I never heard of a railway company in the District of Columbia being burdened with anything.

Mr. JENKINS. That is because my friend from Tennessee is devoting so much of his time to public matters that he does not familiarize himself with the details of the city government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But I am not a member of the District Committee, and I am trying to get information from the members of the District Committee, whose duty it is to explain this bill and give the reason for its passage, and I know of no man who is more capable of doing so than the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. PEARRE. We are endeavoring to give the gentleman all the information he asks. We have, in several instances, repeated for his benefit information that we had already given to somebody else. We would be perfectly willing to repeat it as often as the gentleman desires and the patience of the House will permit.

Mr. WACHTER. I would like to ask my colleague a question, Mr. Chairman. At one part of the report it refers to a pension fund. Have the balance of the railroad employees a pension fund?

Mr. PEARRE. I would say to my colleague from Maryland that the officers of the Metropolitan police force proper have a pension fund which was established some years ago, and that fund is created in this way: First, by the deduction of a dollar per year from the salary of each regular officer of the Metropolitan police force, and then it was discovered as time went by that that fund was not sufficient to provide for them and their widows and children. The Congress of the United States thought it wise to aid in increasing that fund, so that in case of death or injury the family of the police officer or the police officer himself might have proper relief, and on May 29, 1896, a bill was approved which provides that the property of deceased parties not claimed in the District of Columbia may be sold and the proceeds covered into that fund. There was a subsequent act passed June 11, 1896, which allowed the receipts from fines in certain cases to go to the swelling of that fund.

Now, the crossing police officers have never been able to share in that at all, and the original proposition embodied in the bill which I first introduced was to the effect that these men should be placed in all respects upon the same footing as the Metropolitan police force. The superintendent of police and the Commissioners of the District did not agree with that proposition, for perhaps good reasons, which they gave in communications to the committee, and then this other suggestion was made that the relief for these crossing policemen should be limited only and solely to leave of absence, twenty days, and a sick leave of twenty days, as is now enjoyed by the Metropolitan police force, and the creation of an independent pension fund made up by deduction of $1 per year from the salary of each crossing police officer, that fund being devoted entirely to the uses and purposes and relief of crossing policemen, and being an entirely separate fund.

Mr. WACHTER. I would like to ask my colleague another question. Under whose orders are these crossing policemen? Are they more amenable to the railroad company than to the Commissioners of the District?

Mr. PEARRE. The only thing that the railroad has to do with them is to pay them. That is the poor privilege that the railroad companies of the District have. These men are appointed by the Commissioners, and are entirely under the control of the superintendent of police, just as the regular Metropolitan force is; and, further than that, they perform all the duties of a regular police officer.

Mr. WACHTER. I would like to ask whether they are appointed under the civil service, as the others are?

Mr. PEARRE. Well, no; and will not be with my vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman say that the Metropolitan police force or its officers have twenty days' sick and vacation leave?

Mr. PEARRE. I think the gentleman heard my discussion with the gentleman from Illinois on this point.

Mr. CANNON. On examination, I find only twenty days' leave in the year.

Mr. PEARRE. If that be so, I will accept the amendment. I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] heard the short discussion between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and myself in regard to that matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. With reference to the equalization of sick and vacation leaves, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that he is giving these police officers more privilege in that regard than is accorded to the employees of the Navy Department, or the Printing Department, or the Arsenal. Now, what is the reason for that? The employees of the Printing Department have a vacation of thirty days, but no sick leave. The employees of the Navy have fifteen vacation and no sick leave.

Mr. PEARRE. The purpose is to equalize the sick leave between these special officers and the regular officers. The gentleman evidently sees the purpose of that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman let us know what salaries these officers get?

Mr. PEARRE, I think I have stated it on several occasions. They now get $2.50 a day. The report will show all this if the gentleman will be good enough to read it. Now, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MUDD. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] that some arrangement be made about limiting general debate to, say, twenty minutes.

Mr. COWHERD. That would be hardly enough. I understand there are several gentlemen here who desire to be heard. I will occupy only about ten minutes and then yield to the others.

Mr. MUDD. Very well.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been pending before the District Committee for at least four years. I think, without betraying any secret, I am entitled to say I have always opposed this measure. For that reason I feel that I am entitled to oppose it on the floor, although I was not present when the bill was taken up in committee.

I think the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE] has stated, and it is a fact, that these men are put on by order of Congress, Congress having passed the law giving the Commissioners authority to appoint. First, I believe there was a bill compelling the railroad companies to put on watchmen at crossings, and afterwards giving the Commissioners the authority to select the men, on the ground that it was the duty of the railroad company to protect the lives of the public, and that the Commissioners in order to protect the public might have the right of selecting the men.

Now, these are employees of the railroad company. They are paid by the railroad company. Their business is to protect life, and every time they protect it they protect it for the advantage and benefit of the railroad company. If a man is killed at a street crossing of course the railroad company has to stand a lawsuit and, if guilty of any negligence, has to stand the damages. So that it is for their interest to have these men there, and it is proper and right that they should pay them.

These crossing policemen do not have any more special police duty to perform than does the watchman down on the wharf who is given a special commission. Any big property owner or any great institution having a large amount of property to protect can go to the Commissioners and get a special permission for its watchman. It is done in order that the man may be useful to the company that he is serving and at the same time may be of benefit to the public, and there is no more reason why the public should compel the street railroad company to give vacation leave to its special policemen than there is why the public should tell the wharf owner to give a vacation leave to its special policeman or other watchmen in the city of Washington.

I go further and say that there is no more reason why we should compel the railroad company to give the leave of absence to special policemen than why we should compel them to give leave of absence to the motorman or the conductor on the car. They are all employees of the company, and the fact that in order that these watchmen at the crossing may perform the service for which he is placed there, in order that he may have authority to make a driver move on or to make a driver stop before he gets to the crossing, we give him a special authority in order that he may perform that duty, gives us no right to compel the company to give him a leave of absence and pay him for it. But I go further.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE], I think, is entirely mistaken, if I understood his statement, as to where the money is coming from to meet this extra charge upon the Treasury. For, mind you, when we give a twenty days' leave of absence to a special policeman somebody has to take his place. We only provide in the bill that his salary shall come out of the pocket of the company; but who is going to meet the charge of the man who takes his place? Here is the language of the bill:

> A sum sufficient to provide for the payment of substitute service for such officers during such absences shall be derived, disbursed, and accounted for as are the regular annual appropriations for the support of the government of said District.

Now, how are our regular annual appropriations derived? They are derived one-half by taxes on the people of the District and one-half out of the revenues of the Government. So every dollar of additional expense provided for in this bill, by the giving to these men of twenty or forty days' leave of absence, is to be paid out of the general revenues of the District of Columbia, one-half, and one-half out of the general revenues of the United States.

In other words, you gave forty days' leave—twenty days' regular and twenty days' sick leave—to certain employees of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company and the Capital Traction Company, and you pay every dollar of expense incurred by that gift out of the revenues of the United States and of the District of Columbia. I protest against any such action. I do not believe the bill ought to pass at all.

I do not believe we have any right to say to this street-railroad company, "You have got to station a man there, and we will select the man and we will compel you to give to that man certain leave of absence." We have the right to compel the company to station the man there, and we have the right to select the man, but that is as far as we have a right to go; and I unquestionably protest against it when we go still further and say that for this leave of absence that you give to these men the expense shall come out of the pockets of the people of the District and the pockets of the people of the United States.

Mr. SCOTT. Why does this bill impose a hardship upon the railroad company if the District is to meet the expense?

Mr. COWHERD. This bill does not impose any hardship upon the railroad company.

Mr. SCOTT. I understood the gentleman to say that we were endeavoring by passing this bill to order the street railway company to give its employees, or certain of them, twenty days' leave of absence.

Mr. COWHERD. We are.

Mr. SCOTT. Later on the gentleman, in his argument, said that we are compelling the company to give leave to its employees. It seems to me that the statements of the gentleman are hardly consistent.

Mr. COWHERD. If the gentleman will permit me, I said we had no right to say to the street railroad companies, "You shall give certain of your employees leave and not others." We might as well say to the companies, "You shall give your motormen and your conductors twenty days' leave of absence," which would be a hardship upon the railroad company for the Government of the United States to go and say to them, "You must give leave of absence to this class of your employees." I say it is a hardship upon the Government, upon the people, of the District, when we go and say to this railroad company, "You must give these men leave of absence." And, in the next place, when given, it must be paid for by the Government.

Mr. SCOTT. It would only be a hardship if we ask them to give leave to experienced men and require them to pay for the services of substitutes who were inexperienced.

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman from Missouri tell me his definition of an employee?

Mr. COWHERD. There is no need of going into that technical proposition.

Mr. PEARRE. What is an employee?

Mr. COWHERD. I say there is no need of going into a technical proposition of that kind.

Mr. PEARRE. You base your whole argument on the proposition that these are employees of the railroad companies. As that is made the point of the controversy, it is well to technically ascertain what is the definition?

Mr. COWHERD. Whether the gentleman is right technically, and whether this man is or is not an employee, the result I maintain is the same in this matter. A substitute is paid half by the railroad company for guarding the property of the railroad and half for keeping the people from being injured by the railroad companies; and if they were injured it would be cause of expense to the company.

Mr. PEARRE. It is not for guarding the property of the company.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri if it is not a fact that every city of the United States provides that there shall be watchmen at the crossings, to be placed there at the expense of the company, and not at the public expense, in every city in the United States?

Mr. COWHERD. I have not examined the provision as to every city, but I know that in my city, and I know that in every city that I have been able to see any of the provisions concerning, they do provide for the placing of a watchman at every crossing and compel them to pay for a watchman. The only distinction between the watchmen at the street railroad crossings in other cities under their ordinances and the city of Washington is that in this case the Commissioners have the right to select the persons.

Mr. PEARRE. Is it not a fact that in the city of Washington the companies are required to pay the policemen and the city appoints them?

Mr. COWHERD. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. PEARRE. Is it not a fact that the law with reference to watchmen and policemen at street crossings in this city does not differ from that of any other city, except that in the case of Washington the law authorizes the Commissioners to make the appointment?

Mr. COWHERD. Oh, well, the gentleman has gone over that and so have I. They are watching the property of the railroad company at last.

Now, as to section 2, I have just a word to say on that section. Section 2 attempts to provide a relief fund out of which these men are to receive certain relief, and in the end pension, because that is always the end of that with the police force. This fund will not be sufficient, as every man knows. We attempted to provide a relief fund, as gentlemen will remember, by certain laws for the pension of the Metropolitan police.

They have a much larger force, and yet it was found not to be sufficient, and we had to add additional items, including all fines and forfeitures in certain cases to provide for the relief and pension fund. The result of this thing will be, if this law is passed, that this will be a tax upon the Government to pay for these special men, and in the end we will have to appropriate for the relief and pension fund. Now, several have asked me for time, and I would be glad to yield to them. I yield now ten minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, you can take this bill which ever way you see fit, and it is bad, in my opinion. Now, to begin with, the act to which the gentleman referred, in my opinion, was wholly wrong. That, however, is passed. I do not believe that any watchman or special police force should have been provided for in that manner. There is not a city in the United States that does not have its special police force. Private citizens can have a special officer appointed if they take the matter before the chief of police, or they can have a special patrol by arrangement made with the chief of police or police commissioners.

Now, here you are going to establish a precedent that Congress shall have the power, and I believe if Congress has the power to compel a street-railroad company in the city of Washington to pay special policemen appointed by the commissioners, then we have that power anywhere. I hold if this matter was ever taken into the courts, that it would not be sustained that the railroad company could be compelled under the law to pay what the gentleman from Maryland says is a Government employee. I do not believe the courts would ever sustain a position of that character.

Some gentlemen run mad on pensions. I believe it is the duty of all men, conservative men, to endeavor as far as possible to stem this rush upon the public Treasury for pensions. As I have said on this floor before, if there is equity in paying pensions to persons employed either wholly, partly, or semiofficially by the Government, then there is a greater equity in paying pensions or giving leave of absence to every man, woman, and child that lives. Because the money to pay the pension or the leave of absence, either one of which is payment for no services rendered, must ultimately come from the sweat of the face of the whole people.

Now, one citizen is entitled to just as much consideration as another. I believe the unfortunate man who has not been on the Government pay roll is entitled to just as much consideration as he who has been fortunate enough to be on the Government pay roll. Again, if they are pensioned, or if they have leave of absence, being paid without rendering service, that money coming from you and from me and from 70,000,000 of other people, then everyone is entitled to the same consideration.

Here is a case where there are private watchmen in some bill passed as ordinary District bills are, with not more than 10 or 15 members of the House knowing anything about what the legislation contains—because we can not devote attention to such legislation—enacted into law a provision that compels the railroad companies—and I believe justly so—to put a watchman or a special policeman at the crossings. There the law should have ended.

The railroad companies themselves should have been permitted to select those men. But now, because we have unfortunate legislation and the District Commissioners have been given power to select these men, I say the Government should not give them forty days' leave of absence, and neither should the railroad companies be compelled to pay them for forty days' leave of absence. I hope this measure will be defeated, even if the bill is ultimately amended, and I shall vote for the amendment the gentleman from Illinois proposes to offer; but, even if it be amended, I say the legislation is wrong, vicious, and should be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. COWHERD. I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, the proposition that the street railroads of Washington should pay policemen was put upon the statute book, so far as we have had it explained by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE], for no discoverable reason. No State in this Union has ever imposed such legislation upon its books. There is not a State that provides that a railroad company shall pay part of the salaries of the police department, and in proper legislation there is no more place for such a provision than would be found for a law enacting that a railroad company should take care of the roof on the city hall.

What was the object of this bill? To provide political places. There was no other object. If it is said that it was for the protection of the public, then the protection of the public has these two safeguards: First, the responsibility of the railroad company in the case of accident, and, second, the duty which was imposed upon the railroad companies of properly guarding their crossings, and they should guard them. Men, women, and children in these days of swift electrical transit require at crossings some one to warn them of the approach of cars. Are these men selected because of their peculiar fitness for the position? The fact that the District Commissioners believe that they should have the power to appoint railroad employees makes no impression on my mind.

My understanding of the District of Columbia and its government is this: That to-day it is the most extravagant on the face of God's footstool, and to-day it is eating the heart out of every property owner within the District. It is absolutely plain to every man who desires to invest capital that if he sends it to the District of Columbia he finds the worst spot in the country for investment.

Now, what is the result of this act, passed, it is said, at the suggestion of the Democratic Senator from Maryland? Take the City and Suburban road, a road running from east to west and north and south in the city of Washington. That road is capitalized and bonded at its exact cost of construction. Congress ordered that road to change its construction, and doubled its cost by enforcing an underground system.

Every man who invested a dollar in stock of that railroad company lost his money, and there is not a chance that within twenty years it will earn a penny on its stock. Within a year I was appointed receiver of that road. Why? Because it was found that it was impossible to earn 60 per cent of the interest upon its bonds. Now, what do we find the application of this law to that railroad to be? First, a 4½-cent fare for a ride that may extend over 13 miles. That is cheap enough so far as the public is concerned. Then a 4 per cent tax on its gross receipts and full taxation of its real estate. That is pretty heavy.

This tax is placed upon its receipts, and then they put special policemen along the line of the road where not one-half of them are required; and I ask the gentleman from Maryland whether he knows what these special policemen cost on that road alone? If he does not, I will tell him. When you gave the franchise to that railroad company you said to them: You shall pay for that franchise outside of the tax upon your real estate 4 per cent upon every dollar you take in, and then you impose special policemen, and last year the Commissioners of the District of Columbia employed special policemen whose salaries were over 2 per cent on the gross receipts of the railroad. Do you find anything to equal that in this country? Find any such proposition in any municipality in this country, upon a railroad that has never earned enough to pay 40 per cent of the interest on its bonds, representing about half the cost of construction.

I have no objection to a law providing that the railway companies should put warning employees at the railway crossings. But these policemen are in no sense employees of the railway company. Some of them are efficient officers; all of them brave men. All of them are duly and annually complimented by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who duly and annually compliment every department whose officers they appoint, and duly and annually compliment everything that they have charge of; and I might remark at this point that it would require the reincarnation of Charles Dickens to properly describe some of the maneuvers of municipal government in this District.

Now, the proper thing for a dignified Congress to do is that suggested by the gentleman from California—to provide that these corporations, holding public franchises and bound to protect the public, shall at these street crossings place employees of the railroad companies. These policemen now employed will obey no order, will take no instruction, from the railroad companies. The railroad companies can not remove them, can not give them orders. They do not act in concert with the employees of the railroad company. They have no special knowledge of railroading, and railroading is a science. The protection of the public is the one great object of the efficient manager of a railroad company, because his company has to pay, and pay dearly, as ordinary juries give their verdicts, if there is a failure to observe proper precautions in the management of the company.

There would be no objections on the part of these corporations of this District if a law were enacted providing that wherever the District Commissioners say it shall be done, the railroad companies shall place men, proper and efficient men, at these railroad crossings. But what the companies do object to is the fact that these men are upon the pay rolls of the companies and yet render absolutely no service to the companies.

I do not desire to object to any legislation that may bring these men into conformity with others except for the reason that the basic proposition of putting men under the direction of the police department, but at the cost of the corporations, at the crossings is wrong. This system was adopted without reason; it has continued without reason. It does not give the public proper protection, and it is an imposition of unjust taxation.

Taking the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland, that these men are engaged in public service, irrespective of their relation to the management of the cars, then you have no right to charge the railroad companies with their salaries, for that is taking private property for public use. The minute you admit the proposition that these men are engaged in a service not created by reason of the fact of a railroad crossing, that minute you subtract from the power of Congress to continue this burden. It is only upon the theory that the exercise of a public franchise creates a necessity for these officers that you can impose any such burden.

And while the burden is wrong in the way it is imposed, it does not do the public any good. These men render little or no services. They would be efficient if they had anything to do, and are not efficient because they have not anything to do.

The proper thing for Congress to do is to legislate that the railroad companies shall protect the public, not that these political officers shall be kept on the pay roll of the railroad companies of this District.

Mr. MUDD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] whether we can not agree upon a time for closing the general debate?

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] have each asked for five minutes.

Mr. MUDD. As there will be opportunity for debate under the five-minute rule after the general debate is closed, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed in ten minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. COWHERD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, when the company built its road on the street, it made, we must presume, the street dangerous for use by pedestrians and equestrians. The fact that the street car operates on the street makes the street dangerous. The street car creates the danger upon the highway, and under the law it is the duty of the street-car company to protect the public from the danger thus created. Yet, after the Government has given the company the right of way, gentlemen come here and ask the Government to help pay for providing against the danger which the street-car company itself creates. These gentlemen interested in these corporations are never satisfied. I take it that if they took Congress to be composed of a lot of knaves they would want all of their employees paid by the Government while they took as their income all of the revenue derived from the railroad.

Now, should Congress either directly or indirectly pay to protect the public from a danger which the street-car company itself creates? Clearly not. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT] says that none of the States have statutes requiring that men be stationed in this way at railroad crossings. I think there is a statute of that kind in my own State. I know there is a requirement in the charters of some of these roads. Notably one in Chattanooga.

Mr. CLARK. Why should the city authorities of the city of Washington be permitted to appoint employees for this street railway company?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The city ought not to do that sort of thing. On the contrary, the city ought not to pay the employees of the railroad. The railroad, as I have stated, plainly creates a danger; it creates a death trap; it endangers the use of the street. The street was originally laid out for the God-made man and not for the man-made man. A human being has a superior right. That is the law of this country and the highest court of the country has said so. Now, then, when the street car comes along under the shadow of the opinion of that court and creates a danger and a death trap, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has well said, in order to protect themselves from lawsuits, to protect themselves from criminal prosecution, we put a watchman there, and now they come along and say the public must pay for that watchman. The public did not put the railroad there; the public does not create the danger; the public does not use the street as a railway track. It is the street-car company that creates the danger, and the street-car company should be made to protect the public from the danger which the corporation creates.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. They have no objection to protecting the public.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They are coming here and asking that the Government share in the expense of the police they put there.

Mr. PEARRE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether his argument would not apply as well to the livery-stable keeper or to one who operates automobiles.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When the livery-stable keeper comes here and gets rights, we will look after him. I am trying to look after the public, and I hope the gentleman from Maryland is trying to do it. I have no interest in the railroad or in the livery stable or in anything else that lives by virtue of law. I stand here stripped of any influence of the sort, one way or the other.

Mr. PEARRE. I am convinced of the gentleman's virtue without any argument in that behalf, but will the gentleman answer the question as to whether his argument would not apply equally well to the man who operates automobiles in the street or to a livery-stable keeper?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, if the automobiles were so dangerous and the Government gave them the right to go up Pennsylvania avenue, do you think it would be the duty of the city to pay for policemen to go along and keep them from running over anybody? Not at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the automobile company were to operate in the streets of this city, running at intervals of ever minute or two, why they would be required and ought to be required to have people stationed along to protect citizens.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; but they would not permit them to go along in the street at that rate and yet here are the street cars——

Mr. PEARRE. How in regard to the bicycles?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I do not yield to this cross firing here in my time. These electric cars are dangerous. Everybody knows that. They are very large, larger almost than some of the Pullman cars, and they are dangerous, and the street-car company knows they are dangerous, and hence it is that we require that these guards, that they are, be placed at the intersection of the cross streets, and if the statute does not require them they ought to be made to do it anyhow.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, the present law provides that special policemen shall be stationed at certain street railway crossings in the District of Columbia, and it further provides that the railway companies shall pay the wages of those special policemen. Now, I am sure that a great deal of the discussion here is irrelevant, because the proposition as to whether or not this shall continue to be the law is not involved in this bill, but if it was there can be no question as to the power of Congress to do so.

It has been ruled in the courts of this country time and again that it is entirely within the province of the legislative body to require that watchmen or special policemen, or whatever they may be called, shall be stationed at certain crossings which are dangerous to the public, in order that the interests of the public may be guarded; but this bill, Mr. Chairman, goes beyond that, and it is obnoxious and objectionable because it gives to these 37 policemen who are paid by the street railway companies forty days' leave of absence each year at the expense of the government of the District of Columbia and to provide a pension fund for their benefit. Now, for my part I can not see and do not see why this departure should be made.

In my judgment, if it is right and proper, and I think it is, for the street railway company to pay these special policemen as now provided by law, it is entirely right that the street railway company should pay the increased cost provided for in this bill. If one is right, the other is. The proposition here would give them forty days' leave of absence with pay, that pay to come out of the government of the District of Columbia. So, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the people of the United States and the people of the District of Columbia should be called upon to provide a fund of this kind to be given to the employees of a street railway company or anyone else.

Now, as to whether or not these people should be named by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia is not involved in this bill, and if a bill was brought here of the kind and character suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey, I for one should be glad to vote for it and would do so; but that proposition is not here. By the bill under consideration it is proposed to take money out of the treasury of the District of Columbia—that money provided by taxation on the property of the District and by appropriation from the United States Treasury—and to pay these special employees of street railway companies, which is objectionable in principle, as I see it, and I think that this bill should be killed, and the only motion that I can think of that would render it entirely unobjectionable would be one to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, is it in order at this time to move to strike out the enacting clause?

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is not closed yet.

Mr. FINLEY. I surrender back the time remaining to me.

Mr. COWHERD. I only desired to know whether it would be in order at this time, or whether the motion must come after the reading of the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order after the general debate is closed. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. COWHERD. I will yield that one minute to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I do not regard this bill as one we should pass. If anything should be done, we should repeal that part of the law which permits the Commissioners to appoint these policemen. I merely rise to reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Maryland, as to why we should not regulate the speed of automobiles. The persons operating railroads of this character operate under a franchise and take toll from the public. Persons traveling along the street individually and not taking toll from the public occupy a very different position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. MUDD. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard on that?

Mr. COWHERD. No; I do not care to say anything further.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word or two in opposition to that motion. It seems to me the simple question to be determined here is whether or not Congress wants to give to these special employees of the District government the same leave of absence that other employees have; because while the fact is, as we all know, that the railroad companies pay the salaries of these employees, the other fact is that the companies have no control over these men, that the services performed are not particularly for the companies any more than, nor as much as, for the public, and the companies have nothing to do with the appointment of these people.

I want to remind gentlemen that they seem to lose sight of that fact when they undertake to find an analogy in the case of other cities. I do not believe it will be found in any other city of the United States that appointments of these people are provided for as they are in this bill. Railroad companies in other cities are required to employ watchmen at their crossings, but they employ them themselves at such salaries as they may fix, and they have complete control over them. Now, I submit that, while the House has this bill in its posession and can do with it as it pleases, yet it is hardly a proper thing to do to strike out the enacting clause and kill the bill.

I want to say for myself, as the acting chairman of the committee for the time being, that if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] is confident of the truth of his assertion that other policemen only have twenty days' leave of absence all told, I am willing to accept an amendment to that effect. There was no opposition to this bill whatever in the committee. The bill comes from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia with their unqualified approval.

Mr. COWHERD. If the gentleman will pardon me, he knows that whenever this bill has been taken up I have opposed it.

Mr. MUDD. I have no doubt the gentleman is opposed to the bill. He has convinced the committee of that.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman said there was no opposition in the committee.

Mr. MUDD. I say when this bill was considered in the committee no one manifested any opposition. The gentleman from Missouri was away looking after other matters, but of course his statement is accepted when he says that he has been opposed to the bill. It seems to me these men ought to have this leave of absence. They are employees of the District government, and they are entitled to the same leave of absence that other men are who are engaged, in part at least, in the same class of work. Of course if the House desires a different provision with reference to the payment for this leave of absence, then it is for the House to say so. If it is desired that the railroad companies shall pay the salaries of the substitutes made necessary by these leaves of absence, then let us so provide; but the pregnant fact is that these people are appointed by the District government, are under the control of the District government, and I can see no reason why they should not have the leave of absence that the Government of the United States accords to all of its employees in every branch of the service. However, I will submit to the judgment of the committee.

Mr. MORRELL. I move to strike out the last word. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I may say that I have communicated with the Commissioners of the District, and the reply that I have received from them states that the appropriation act providing for the expenses of the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1897, reads as follows:

> Hereafter each of the members of the Metropolitan police force shall be entitled to leave of absence each year, with pay for such time, not exceeding twenty days, as the Commissioners shall determine.
> Section 32 of chapter 46 of the compiled statutes of the District of Columbia: "Whenever any member of the police force in the actual discharge of his duty shall become actually disabled, his necessary expenses during the time of such disability, on the certificate of a competent surgeon, stating the manner, cause, and condition of the injury, and approved by the Commissioners, may become a charge upon the policemen's fund. But the Commissioners may discontinue such allowance for any satisfactory reason."
> Under the manual provided for the government of the Metropolitan police force the Commissioners allow thirty days' leave for sickness. These regulations are authorized by law to be made by the Commissioners, and where the time exceeds thirty days the Commissioners, in their discretion, may allow such excess on the certificate of the police surgeon.

This communication was received directly from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CANNON. That does not give arbitrarily thirty days' sick leave. There is a provision that the injury shall be in line of duty, and a medical certificate, and everything of that kind; and then there may be a charge upon the special police pension fund; and then they may renew it, until it gets up to thirty days; but this is a proposition giving twenty days' sick leave, independent of anything.

Mr. MORRELL. I think the gentleman from Maryland has agreed that the same law shall prevail with these crossing policemen as does for the regular Metropolitan force.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report its action to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12347, and had instructed him to report the same back to the House with the enacting clause stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

GEORGE W. KING.

Mr. MUDD. I now call up the bill S. 2966 and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report the bill, and the Chair will submit the request.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2966) for the relief of George W. King.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following real estate, to wit, parts of lots 228 and 229, in square 1290, in the city of Washington, D. C., described as follows: Beginning for the same at a point on the east side of Thirty-fourth street 8 feet north of the dividing line between said lots and running thence south on Thirty-fourth street 24 feet; thence east parallel with T street 96 feet to the rear line of said lot; thence north with said rear line 24 feet, and thence west to the place of beginning, heretofore purchased and conveyed to George W. King, of the city of Washington, D. C., be relieved and exempted from the operation of an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens," approved March 3, 1887, and all forfeitures incurred by force of said act, by reason of the alienage of one Patrick Mahon, a former owner of said real estate, are hereby remitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the bill just reported to the House be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MUDD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, that is all the business from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING THE SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution that I send to the Clerk's desk may have consideration at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be hereby authorized to hold its sessions without regard to the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would ask the gentleman from Iowa if this resolution meets the approval of the minority members of the committee?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know. I have no doubt but that it will meet with their approval.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13676, being the Military Academy appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13676, being the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman if, before going into the Committee of the Whole, we could not agree upon time for general debate?

Mr. HULL. I thought we could let it run on for a while and there would be no trouble about closing general debate.

Mr. HAY. I think we could possibly get through sooner by agreeing upon a time for general debate before we go into committee.

Mr. HULL. I do not care about it.

Mr. HAY. I say we will get through in less time if we could agree upon an hour, before we go into committee, than by letting it run.

Mr. HULL. What is the objection to agreeing to let it run on for some little time?

Mr. HAY. I have none especially, but I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. HULL. I say, Mr. Speaker, that one gentleman on this side has asked for some time, but not on the bill, and after he has spoken we might have no other desire for additional time; but if the gentleman wants to agree on a time I will ask that we have an hour on each side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to an hour on each side. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. JENKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13676) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the bill presents but very few items that can be open to any discussion whatever so far as the ordinary appropriations are concerned. The committee, by unanimous vote on both sides, have made a change in paying cadets at West Point, in order to conform with the pay of cadets at Annapolis. For years we have had submitted to us the proposition to pay the cadets at West Point $500 a year and one ration, to be paid out of the appropriation for subsistence of the Army. That is exactly what the cadets at Annapolis receive.

Heretofore we have paid the cadets at West Point $540 a year without a ration. The ration is commuted at the same price as given to Annapolis, 30 cents a day; and it increases the pay of the cadets at West Point in the neighborhood of $60 a year. It was originally fixed at 35 cents, but the Superintendent of the Military Academy was mistaken as to the amount received at Annapolis. It is 30 cents a day instead of 35.

There is no reason why the two schools should not be paid the same rate. They have the same amount of expense, the same number of charges upon their pay, and it makes constant friction to have one set of boys paid at one rate and another at another rate.

Another proposition that is new is the proposition to have a librarian for the library at West Point. The library is now becoming an important factor in the military education, not only for the cadets at West Point, but for the officers in the Army at large. With the appropriations made for the increase of the library, this year amounting to $10,000, which seems to be the amount recommended not only by the academic board, but by the Secretary of War, and also by the Board of Visitors at West Point last year and the year previous, it will make the library grow in importance, and in order to get the full benefit of it there ought to be a librarian competent to take charge and classify and control the library.

Another proposition of much greater importance is the adoption of a plan for the enlargement of the Military Academy. Heretofore we have made appropriations from year to year for the buildings that were absolutely necessary for the improvement of the post for that year, and that year only, without any regular plan by which the school buildings and quarters could be built up harmoniously.

You remember that during last Congress we increased the number of cadets by the addition of 90, apportioned to the Senators, one for each Senator, and by giving the President 10 more cadets at large, making an increase of 100 cadets at West Point. By the increased representation in this House after this Congress there will be a further increase to correspond with the increased number of members of the House. The cadets are now crowded, without facilities for study, and it is absolutely necessary to at once commence the construction of new cadet quarters.

In addition to that you must at once commence the construction of an academic building. The increased faculty makes the increased number of officers' quarters absolutely imperative. The old heating and lighting plant at West Point is out of date. The light is so bad that cadets go out of there with bad eyesight. The expense of hauling coal to the different places and heating the buildings in the way now done is exceedingly expensive and unsatisfactory, and the proposition is to establish one heating and lighting plant that will supply not only the post as it is to-day, but large enough and with facilities enough to supply the post as it will be when completed. That involves a large expenditure of money.

The committee has provided a large appropriation for this year. Whether it is necessary or not there will be a difference of opinion, but, in my judgment, on the evidence before the committee, it is necessary to commence at once the erection of this plant, providing for its total expenditure not to exceed $6,500,000, and appropriating practically $3,000,000 for the plant for the current fiscal year. For lighting and heating, in my judgment, $1,400,000 is absolutely necessary to begin now, and I think it can be finished during the coming year without any question.

The academic building must be rebuilt now. There is no room now for the students to recite. The cadet quarters must be built now, and the cadet barracks that are to be built must be on the angle with the cadet barracks already existing, for the reason that the cadets all come out and form on the parade ground in front of the quarters and march to the drill ground, and they must be near each other, so they can march as a body in place of being broken up in detachments and coming on the ground at different times.

In my judgment there is no busier body of men in the world than the cadets at West Point. There is absolutely no waste time from early morning until they go to bed at night. Every minute of time is taken up with recitations or drills or exercise except what is used at their meals, so that the loss of five minutes even is regarded as a serious inconvenience to the control of the Academy and to the welfare of the students.

Another one of the buildings which must be largely increased at once is the gymnasium, which, built for a smaller school, is utterly inadequate; and it should be so built that the future Congresses will not be called upon to reconstruct it, so that it will meet the demands of the cadets now provided by law, and will be equal to the demands of the increased number of cadets without further expense on the part of the Government for buildings.

These, Mr. Chairman, are the only points to which I wish to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole at this time.

Mr. CANNON. How many cadets are there?

Mr. HULL. Five hundred and eleven now. That is my recollection.

Mr. CANNON. That is the increased number?

Mr. HULL. That does not cover the increased number that will come in with new members of Congress.

Mr. CANNON. That will be a small number.

A MEMBER. Twenty-nine.

Mr. CANNON. Well, there are 511 there now. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] know the value of the plant there now?

Mr. HULL. It would be difficult to arrive at the value of the plant. Some of those buildings have been there for nearly a century. Some of the buildings that these new barracks will take the place of have been built three-quarters of a century. We have spent altogether there, I should say, some $21,000,000 or $22,000,000 on building and maintenance.

Mr. CANNON. And during the last ten years we have added buildings to the value of some five or six millions, have we not?

Mr. HULL. Yes; more than that, I should think, in the last ten years. But the gentleman will permit me to say that very few of the buildings that have been erected in the last eight or ten years are to be disturbed. The buildings there that are utterly inadequate are the gymnasium and the academic hall; and as to the latter, it is probably desirable to have two buildings for that purpose, rather than one consolidated structure, because of the large number of classes that are to be heard. The buildings which have been put up within the last ten years are not to be wasted; we propose to utilize them all.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says that the cost of the buildings has been from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000?

Mr. HULL. No; the whole expense of the Academy.

Mr. CANNON. I was speaking of the cost of the buildings.

Mr. HULL. I can not state that exactly; probably four to five million dollars for buildings during the last ten years.

Mr. CANNON. Four or five million dollars during the last ten years. Now, we have increased the number of cadets 100; and the gentleman says that this increase entails an expense of $6,500,000 for more buildings.

Mr. PARKER. Oh, no.

Mr. CANNON. A gentleman near me, who is quick in arithmetic, says that the figures I have just stated would mean an expense of $60,000 to house a cadet.

Mr. HULL. That is not a fair statement. If the gentleman will look over the plans he will find that without regard to this increase it would have been necessary to expend a good part of this money to make a modern institution. It means more than buildings. It is the entire plant. I was mistaken as to amount expended in buildings. In the last ten years the amount is not two million.

Mr. CANNON. Well, if the buildings were all torn down—leveled with the earth—and if we should provide for the expenditure of six million and a half for buildings to accommodate 500 cadets, it would mean $13,000 per cadet for buildings alone.

Mr. HAY. Not only for cadets, but for officers and professors.

Mr. HULL. The amount I named covers not only expense of buildings but expense of roads, of lighting, heating, etc. If the gentleman would say that the sum named covered the whole plant he would be about right.

Mr. CANNON. That is what I said.

Mr. HULL. No; you said for buildings.

Mr. CANNON. Well, that is all included; in other words, in the last ten years from four to six million dollars have been expended on new buildings.

Mr. HULL. New buildings and improvements and waterworks and roads and maintenance.

Mr. CANNON. The roads are still there?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. And the waterworks are still there?

Mr. HULL. The waterworks need to be improved. The expense of that is estimated to be $100,000 or more this year.

Mr. CANNON. And you throw away the old waterworks?

Mr. HULL. No; we are not going to throw anything away; but we are going to add to the existing system, because it is inadequate.

Mr. CANNON. Well, there is only one possible defense for this proceeding that I can think of. I have never seen West Point; but it occurs to me the trouble is the spirit of demolition and rivalry that exists between the Army and the Navy. Down here at Annapolis we have entered upon an expenditure of about six and a half millions——

Mr. HULL. Eight and a half.

Mr. CAPRON. And it will cost us twelve millions before the work is done.

Mr. CANNON. "Twelve millions before the work is done!" Now, then, is it possible that less than twelve millions are to be expended on West Point?

Mr. HULL. I think the amount I have named will cover it all.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says "he thinks;" he is not sure about it.

Mr. HULL. No man on earth is "sure" about anything which is in the future.

Mr. CANNON. My judgment about the matter is that for about half a million dollars, or probably less, these extra 100 people could be accommodated, and accommodated from every standpoint of efficiency, had it not been that in an evil hour we embarked upon a $20,000,000 expenditure, as I recollect the amount, though I believe it was finally pared down to eight millions and a half at Annapolis.

Mr. PARKER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have control of the time.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I have no time to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. How much time does the gentleman from New Jersey desire?

Mr. PARKER. I do not want any time, I just want to ask a question.

Mr. HULL. Then I yield.

Mr. PARKER. I would like to ask whether or not the gentleman founded that judgment upon any study of the conditions at West Point?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, I know that it takes about so much space on which to build a building. I have a general idea of what stone and brick and mortar and slate cost. I have a general idea what a heating plant would cost, and I want to say that I have a very friendly disposition to the Army and to the Navy, and I believe in educating the young men who are to become the future officers of the Army and Navy, but I have no doubt whatever that in the construction of the new building at Annapolis already authorized and entered upon and upon this construction that it is absolutely not from the standpoint of utility alone, but with the rankest kind of rank extravagance in addition to utility.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to repeat the question as to whether this judgment is founded upon any study of the conditions at West Point?

Mr. CANNON. Why, I suppose West Point wants to be equal to Annapolis.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; we did not consider that at all. We did not even look at Annapolis. We looked at what they needed at West Point, taking the Secretary of War, the academic board, and the board of visitors as the basis of our information, and all the information that we could get from any source.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and still where there has been an expenditure of five, ten, or fifteen millions—God knows how much; the gentleman does not and I do not—and it has been made for a hundred years.

Mr. HULL. I have that on my table, and I will send and get it.

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe that it is necessary for the instruction of these five hundred and odd cadets that you should add a plant costing six millions and a half. The gentleman asks if I have made a study of the situation. No; I have not made a study, yet I have a general idea of what buildings cost.

Mr. HULL. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. CROOK, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 18, 1902:

H. R. 7675. An act to construct a light-house keeper's dwelling at Calumet Harbor.

On April 21, 1902:

H. R. 11354. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903; and

H. J. Res. 155. Joint resolution granting permission for the erection of a monument in Charlotte, N. C., for the ornamentation of the public grounds in that city.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that I concur in what has been said by the chairman about the improvements that should be had at the Military Academy. I had the honor last summer of being on the Board of Visitors and was on the ground and therefore had an opportunity to see what was necessary there. I do not think this can be called rank extravagance, because these buildings are of such a character and the needs of the institution are such that it is absolutely important that this reorganization of the plant at the Military Academy shall begin at once.

An increase of 139 cadets requires that there shall be an increase in the plant, and if we are going to have any improvement of this school, if it is going to be placed upon a modern basis, if the young men who are to be educated for our Army are to receive such an education as it is necessary they should receive, then it is absolutely necessary that this expenditure should be made. I do not think it necessary for me to go into these questions any more fully than has been done by the chairman, and I yield, therefore, thirty minutes of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, some days ago the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] took occasion to criticise the remarks that had been made a few days previously by my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER], and in course of these remarks that gentleman [Mr. GILLETT] used this language:

> But there are two classes which still look to birth and ancestry. One class is the self-styled aristocratic circle in our great cities who have shown a strong tendency to pay huge prices for empty titles even when they had to be taken with the incumbrance of a useless and disreputable husband.
> The other class exists almost exclusively in the part of the country dominated hopelessly by the Democratic party, where they consider that no culture, no refinement, or ability, or noble service can atone for a taint of color in the blood.

On the following day the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] found an opportunity to read some poetry at the expense of Kentucky, and then proceeded to comment thus:

> So much for Colonel Mulligan, and it is particularly the last line of this poem which reminded me that the gentleman from Kentucky had made a speech which illustrated it most beautifully—"Politics are the damnedest in Kentucky." * * * Mr. Chairman, we have no Indians nor savages in Ohio. The general impression is that while there may not be many Indians in Kentucky, there are still some specimens of savages there.

Then last and least a certain General Funston is reported in the Washington Post of March 4 as having this to say:

There is no more war in the Philippines than there is in Kentucky. Assassins lurk in the cane and shoot down men who are at their mercy, but there are no soldiers in the field to battle with the United States troops. Even respectable guerrilla warfare has ceased.

Now, I desire to comment a little upon these criticisms of my State, and to remind the members of this House and the country of Kentucky's people, her politics, her history, and her achievements.

Now, first let us read over again the objectionable feature of the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts. "The other class (of aristocrats) exists almost exculsively in the part of the country dominated hopelessly by the Democratic party, where they consider that no culture, no refinement, or ability, or noble service can atone for a taint of color in the blood." It is perfectly true that in Kentucky and in the South generally no culture or ability can atone for a taint of color in the blood. We do not believe in social equality with the negroes in the South, and we have very little respect for the white man in the North or South who does believe in social equality between the two races. We believe that the greatest calamity that could befall the white population of this country would be for them to become degenerates by a general admixture of negro blood. Who can think of miscegenation without a shudder of horror. The Jews have preserved the purity of their blood through the ages more successfully than any other race, and they are as a result of this the only race who have survived from the ancient world. For centuries it was a felony for a Jew to land upon the soil of England.

Pride and humiliation, hand in hand,
Walked with them through the world where'er they went;
Trampled and beaten were they as the sand,
And yet unshaken as the continent.

But in a few years after they ceased to be persecuted they came rapidly to the front, and the destinies of the British Empire are in the hands of three Jews. Judah P. Benjamin was her lawyer, Rothschild was her banker, and Disraeli was her prime minister. Upon the other hand, think how other nations have degenerated and disappeared.

Think of the Roman senator, and then look out upon the street and see the modern Italian organ grinder, with his monkey, the descendant of the ancient Roman. Reflect for a moment what Portugal was in the days of Vasco da Gama and of Camoëns, when her victorious banner floated in the breeze in every clime and the sails of her merchantmen whitened every sea. But that race soon began an almost indiscriminate marriage with negroes and Indians, and Portugal has not only ceased to be a nation of importance, but her half-breed and mongrel people have been the curse of all the South American and other countries she has attempted to colonize. Let us further reflect that the richer and more luxurious the white population becomes the more the ladies take to raising poodle dogs instead of children.

For example, we have an ominous fact shown in the last census that in Massachusetts, after a lapse of more than three hundred years of civilization, more than half of the population of that State is foreign born. Everybody knows that as a rule the poor and hard-working people raise proportionately the most children in every country. So, in Kentucky, we can not shut our eyes to the importance of watching and curbing every tendency to social equality between the white and colored races. "We believe that no culture, no education, no refinement, no public service can atone for a taint of color in the blood." Our opinion is that any white man who encourages an intermingling of the races is a public enemy and that every step in that direction is a crime. It is not a mere sentiment. This universal race prejudice is the voice of nature and the voice of God crying out for the preservation and purity of the race, and he is a blasphemer against the laws of the Almighty who with hypocritical cant would undertake to tear down and destroy these sentiments. When any white man invites any negro to sit down at his table and to sop with him out of the same dish, that white man then and there establishes social equality between those two at least.

Now, if the most exalted white man in this nation can properly do this with the most cultivated and worthy of the colored race, then by parity of reasoning the poorest and humblest of our white men can surely do the same thing with the poorest and humblest of the negroes.

And if this conduct is proper with the two extremes of society, no good reason can be shown why the intermediate classes should not also freely intermingle on terms of entire social equality, and so we would have social equality all along the line.

Let me tell you that when this sort of social equality is established we shall have torn away the barriers against an entire and indiscriminate intermingling of the two races.

The next step, and quite a short step too, would be intermarriage and a mongrel, degenerate population.

It was but a step from the Capitol to the Tarpeian Rock, and for the sake of our children and our country let us not take that step and no step in that direction. There is not a white girl in Kentucky so poor, so humble, or so ignorant but who would rather marry the meanest, lowest, and most ignorant white man in America than to marry the smartest and best-educated negro in all the world; and there is no decent white man in this country with a marriageable daughter who would not indorse this sentiment.

You in Massachusetts do not believe in negro equality, and so you ought to stop this rot about an aristocracy in Kentucky "where they consider that no culture, no refinement, or ability, or noble service can atone for a taint of color in the blood."

During my first two years in Congress there sat over there among you a negro member from North Carolina, and not one of you ever invited him to visit your family.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They did once by mistake.

Mr. GILBERT. Yes; the chairman of a committee inadvertently invited all the members of the committee to his house, and when he discovered there was a taint of color in the blood of a member of the committee he canceled the engagement. Not only that, but during those two years not a single Republican across the aisle ever invited that colored man down stairs to lunch with him. If any of you did, please stand up. I want to see you, and I want to send your photograph home to my constituents. You gave the negroes the right to vote for you white Republicans, but you have not in the North ever given him the right, or the chance, to vote for another negro.

The negro vote constitutes the balance of power in many Northern States. The Republican majority on this floor now is due to the negro vote. You elected McKinley over Bryan in 1896, by reason of the negro vote. The Republican party has been kept in power ever since the war by reason of the negro vote. And yet no negro was ever elected to Congress from any Northern State.

No negro was ever elected to any State office or ever nominated to any State office since the war in any State north of the Ohio River. Besides that, a Republican Congress set the first example of disfranchising the negro vote in the South by taking from him the right to vote in the District of Columbia. Be honest with yourselves, honest with the negroes, and honest with the white people of the South, and stop this hypocritical cant about "atoning for a taint of color in the blood."

I want to remind the gentleman from Massachusetts that while Governor Shelby, of Kentucky, with sword in one hand and hat in the other, was charging and routing the British at Kings Mountain, Massachusetts, farmers were driving cattle across the border to feed the British soldiers in Canada, and Massachusetts statesmen were holding the Hartford convention and were planning and scheming to dissolve the Union.

The gentleman from the Pigtown district of Ohio indorsed the sentiment that "politics are the damnedest in Kentucky," and said that we still had some specimens of savages there.

Let me remind the gentleman that politics became the damnedest in Kentucky only when a lot of Republicans came from the mountains to Frankfort, armed with pistols and Winchester rifles, loaded up with mean whisky, and in utter defiance of the law forcibly drove the legislature from the capitol, chased the members from place to place at the point of the bayonet, and wound up their drunken orgy by a cowardly assassination of the governor of the State.

Let me remind the gentleman that two of these assassins escaped and are now upheld and protected by certain Republican officials in the State of Indiana. If Kentucky's besetting sin is homicide, then Republican governors north of the Ohio River should surrender some of these criminals when they have been indicted and when the governor of our State has duly and repeatedly made requisitions for them. We could better enforce our criminal laws and fewer homicides would be hereafter committed if Northern States would cease to become cities of refuge for the murderers who escape over the border.

I desire to remind the gentleman from Ohio that these refugee criminals have not only been supported and protected, but they have been feasted and toasted and lionized by the Republican party generally. At the last national convention of that party Governor Taylor was sent as a sort of honorary delegate. He was on the floor of that convention and when he arose in his seat to say something the chairman of that convention bawled out: "Come up on the platform, Governor; we all want to see you." Then amidst the waving of handkerchiefs and the clapping of hands this assassin and idol of the Republican convention came forward and bowed his compliments to that smiling and appreciative audience.

There are no savages in Ohio. But they used to swarm over that State and over all the Northwest Territory, and but for the heroism of Kentucky pioneers the gentleman's State of Ohio would still perhaps be a part of Canada and therefore a part of the British possessions in North America.

Has he forgotten those brave Kentuckians who, with old rifles and powder horns, with buckskin breeches and coonskin caps, followed the leadership of George Rogers Clark, who waded the swamps of that Northwest Territory up to their armpits for ten days in a bleak winter and drove the Indians from Kaskaskia and Vincennes and moved the northern line of our possessions from the Ohio River up to the Lakes? By the way, now that you Republicans are about to send some special envoys to the Court of St. James to assist in the coronation of Edward VII, it is a good time to remind the people, and especially the younger generation, that when our country was young and feeble it was this same old England which was not satisfied with trying to crush us with ordinary war but she armed the savage Indians, filled them with whisky, and while the young and able-bodied of the men were on the Atlantic seaboard fighting her redcoats it was the same England that turned these savages loose to murder and scalp the women and children that were left unprotected upon our Western frontier.

And General Funston tells us that "there is no more war in the Philippines than there is in Kentucky."

What a commentary that is upon the Administration, to keep 60,000 soldiers at an expense of more than a hundred millions of dollars a year in the Philippine Islands when there is no war there! Certainly there is no war in the State of Kentucky, and no assassinations have occurred there since the one I have mentioned, and certainly Kentucky needs no defense from such a wanton slander as this to those who know her history. Did you know that Kentucky was the first State in the Union to establish a general system of common schools under which all of the property of all the people was taxed for the education of all the children? Kentucky was the first State in the Union to clamor for the free navigation of the Mississippi River and for the purchase of the Louisiana Territory.

Kentucky was the first State in the Union to demand reparation and apology for impressing American sailors, and when these were denied she was the first State to agitate the necessity for the second war with England, and when the war came her soldiers were the first to take their flatboats and float down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers to New Orleans, and but for the soldiers of Kentucky and Tennessee General Jackson's great victory at New Orleans would never have been achieved. Kentucky was the first State in the Union to agitate the gradual emancipation of the slaves and to urge compensation to the owners instead of war. For more than a generation the great Commoner, Henry Clay, stood upon the floor of this Capitol, and with one hand upon the shoulder of the Northern abolitionist and with the other hand upon the shoulder of the Southern slaveholder, he, with unequaled eloquence, begged for peace.

Kentucky furnished more soldiers in the Texas revolution than any State in the Union, and was the only State that had as many as a regiment of soldiers at the great battle of San Jacinto.

Kentucky furnished more soldiers in the war with Mexico than any other State in the Union, and it was a gallant young Kentuckian who scaled the walls of Chapultepec and planted the Stars and Stripes above the palace of the Montezumas. The first steamboat ever seen in the world was invented and constructed by John Fitch, who was a Kentuckian, and who now lies buried at Bardstown.

The greatest American ornithologist was James Audubon, a Kentuckian, whose studies and illustrations of birds are the admiration of every civilized country.

The finest piece of statuary ever seen in America is the "Triumph of Chastity," carved by Joel T. Hart, a Kentucky sculptor.

The finest portrait in the Corcoran Art Gallery is a painting of Henry Clay, by Jewett, a Kentucky painter. It was of this picture that Charles Sumner, himself an art critic, said, "This must be the work of Rembrandt, for no American artist has attained such excellence."

The greatest lawyer who has sat upon the bench of the Supreme Court since the death of John Marshall was Samuel F. Miller, who was first a Kentucky doctor and then a Kentucky lawyer before he moved to Iowa.

The learned and classical opinions of Chief Justice Robertson, of Kentucky, have been read with admiration and followed as precedents in all the great courts, from Washington to Westminster Hall.

The first successful operation of ovariotomy was performed by Dr. Ephraim McDowell, a Kentucky doctor, and the first successful hip-joint amputation in surgery was performed by Dr. Brashear, of Kentucky. An account of these achievements in surgery were read with admiration and followed as precedents in the great medical schools of Paris, Edinburgh, and Berlin.

The greatest and most respectable religious denomination that ever originated on the Western Hemisphere was founded and promulgated by a Kentucky preacher, Alexander Campbell. The most learned and eloquent preacher the Presbyterian Church has produced in a hundred years was Robert J. Breckinridge, of Kentucky. The most gifted pulpit orator the Methodist Church has seen since the days of John Wesley, and the man who Henry said was the greatest orator he had ever heard, was Bishop Bascom, of Kentucky. The most learned Hebrew scholar and greatest theologian the Baptist Church can boast of in America was the Rev. John A. Broaddus, of Kentucky. The great historian of the Roman Catholic Church, the man who wrote the splendid reply to Daubigne's history of the Protestant reformation, was Archbishop Martin J. Spaulding, of Kentucky.

There is no State in the Union with a better and cleaner record than Kentucky. We have scarcely any criminal classes at all, outside of the negro population and a few lawless counties in the mountains, "hopelessly dominated by the Republican party." [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

No State of equal population has fewer suits for seduction, for slander, for divorce, for criminal conversation, for libel, or other offenses against the person.

No State has fewer prosecutions for robbery, for theft, for arson, for burglary, or other crimes against the rights of property.

In many counties the jail door stands ajar without an occupant; grand juries meet and adjourn without returning an indictment.

I venture to assert there are more crimes committed in the single city of Boston or Cincinnati than there are in the whole State of Kentucky. A single mob in Cincinnati burned the court-house, destroyed the records, and burned and destroyed more property than all the mobs ever seen in Kentucky.

And one bright Sunday morning in Massachusetts nine people—men, women, and children—were tied to the stake and burned to death as witches. No such horrid crimes as these ever disgraced the annals of Kentucky.

In Kentucky the negro is protected in all of his political rights better than in any other State.

We have fewer millionaires and fewer tramps and paupers than any State in the Union; property is more equally distributed; everyone who tries lives in peace and comfort, and there is no newly rich class with ignorant impudence undertaking to lord it over the rest. We are all poor and proud, and the poorer the prouder. All of us white folks are in this sense aristocratic alike.

No, gentlemen, there are no wars or rumors of wars in Kentucky. Our politics are cleaner and better than they are in most of the States, since we have put some of the leading Republicans in the penitentiary and have driven others to find refuge beyond the Ohio.

But there is still in Kentucky a wide gulf, which no man and no woman can cross or wants to cross. This gulf separates the white people from the negroes; and no culture, no ability, or refinement, or public service can atone for a taint of color in the blood.

Kentucky was settled by men and women of dauntless spirit and heroic mold.

When Abram was called from Urr of the Chaldees to found a new nation in the Land of Promise, he took with him his servants and his cattle, and he found the land flowing with milk and honey.

When Romulus and Remus laid the foundation of the imperial city, the flight of birds marked out the division lines, trust in the Golden Fleece assured them of wealth, and the wild wolf had been domesticated to furnish them with milk. But our ancestors left home and civilization far behind them and over the mountains. They lighted their fires in a trackless wilderness, while there lurked concealed upon every side the deadliest and most relentless of savage foes. Only at long intervals had they any bread at all, and this was of corn cakes baked in ashes. Their meat consisted of wild game brought down by the unerring aim of the rifle. Their houses consisted of the rudest log huts, without glass in the windows, without carpets upon the floor, and without parlor or piano. Like the rebuilders of the temple, they toiled through the day with the implements of their labor in one hand and their weapons of defense in the other. At nightfall these pioneers locked themselves within their cabins against prowling wolves and roving savages, that then really existed in Kentucky. They had no books or newspapers to while away the long hours of the evening, and when sleep came at last to their tired and careworn bodies they flung themselves down on the skins of wild animals, while their children were hushed to sleep by the weird lullabies furnished by the hooting of the owl and the scream of the panther.

And yet they were a brave, chivalrous, splendid people. They were the knight-errants of the wilderness. The lady love of the Kentucky pioneer was the wife of his bosom. His children were the hostages that pledged him to the love of home and country.

If he was a terror to the wild animals and the wild Indians, he was a still greater terror to the despoiler of home or honor; and—

What, though on humble fare they dined,
Wore hodden-gray, and a' that;
Give fools their silk and knaves their wine—
A man's a man for a' that.

[Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HULL. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] who has just taken his seat quoted a sentence used by me in this House some weeks ago which he said was objectionable; then he deliberately proceeded to say that I accurately expressed his feeling and the feeling of his part of the country; and then he went on to criticise the attitude of Massachusetts on this unfortunate question.

I admit, Mr. Chairman, that there is a prejudice in Massachusetts against the negro. I believe there is probably a more inherent, instinctive, physical repugnance toward him than there is in the South—a repugnance which often makes us wonder at the swarm of mulattoes in the South. But that instinctive repugnance, instead of being systematically cultivated and developed into an artificial creed, is generally recognized as unreasonable and uncharitable and unfair and by the better sentiment of the community is discouraged and repressed; and however a man may feel about his own social relations with a negro, he recognizes the right of each person to determine that for himself, and would consider it not only presumptuous but outrageous to endeavor to prevent others extending a hospitality from which his own prejudice restrained him.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. GILBERT. I wish to ask what the gentleman means when he says that he can not understand why the people in the South discriminate against the negro on account of the taint of color in the blood. What does the gentleman mean by that remark?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I think that my meaning was pretty plain.

Mr. GILBERT. Do you mean to say that there ought not to be any discrimination?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No, Mr. Chairman; I recognize the existence of this prejudice; but what I blame in the South is not the instinctive repugnance against the colored race, but the attempt to make everybody else, by social ostracism, however they may feel, take the same attitude. Now, with us, although we have that repugnance——

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it not true that in Boston, when the distinguished, educated, and refined Booker Washington, from Alabama, went there a few weeks ago, it was impossible for him to find entertainment or lodging at a single respectable hotel in that city?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has made two mistakes in his statement. In the first place, the incident to which he refers did not occur in Boston, but in my own city of Springfield——

Mr. BARTLETT. Pretty close to Boston.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I happen to know all about that case; and the fact——

Mr. BARTLETT. It occurred in Massachusetts, did it not?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes, sir. But it is not a fact that Mr. Washington could not get lodging in any respectable hotel. The fact is simply this: He came late in the evening to the Springfield hotel, where he had stopped for many years, where he was always a welcome guest, and they told him that the hotel was full. It generally was full at that season of the year. It happened that that very evening (I am acquainted with the facts, for I inquired about this matter a short time ago when I was home)—it happened that that very evening they had turned away a number of people. They said that the other principal hotel of the place was also full, for they had telephoned there already for others.

The clerk told Mr. Washington, whom he knew well, these facts, and said: "There is a hotel right across the street to which we have sent this evening a number of guests whom we could not accommodate. We are sure that by telephoning we can get you a room there; and we shall be glad to have you come in here to breakfast, if you will, in the morning." They knew him, and instead of there being a prejudice against him, the only trouble was that the hotel where he generally stayed was full. He went across the street and obtained lodging in this other hotel, just as respectable, and that is all there is to the incident.

Now, I presume that when some gentleman like my friend from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] reads the report in a newspaper that a negro does not get into a hotel because it is full, he at once jumps to the conclusion that the hotel was not full and that the statement was merely a pretext. But let me tell my friend that he is certainly mistaken in this instance. That hotel had frequently entertained Mr. Washington before, would have been glad to then, and will be glad to in the future.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why was it that Governor Wolcott did not bring the negro he had on his staff down to the Nashville Centennial, and why was it that the legislature passed an act making everybody pay his own way down there, so as to get rid of that negro on that trip?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not know whether that was true or not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That was told to me by a member of the party.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I have the floor.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Allow me to say that Governor Wolcott was not the governor of that State at the time of the Nashville Centennial.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. At all events, the statement is true in regard to whoever was governor at that time. I state it as a fact.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I have not yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee, and I hope the Chair will protect me in my right to the floor.

If, however, the matter was as the gentleman states, I think it reflects credit on Governor Wolcott. It shows that he did not wish to offend the sensibilities of gentlemen like the gentleman from Tennessee by taking a colored man with him down there. The fact as stated is no discredit to him. It simply illustrates the attitude which I think is recognized and practiced in Massachusetts as correct; that no matter what prejudice one man may feel, he should not insist on forcing his prejudice on others who do not sympathize with him.

Now, we in Massachusetts recognize the terrible sufferings that you gentlemen in the South have undergone, the hard problem you are now struggling with. We do not blame you for not submitting to negro domination. We recognize, too, that the negro recently emerged from slavery, still bound by the habits of centuries of savagery, can not, as a race, be your social companions. We know, too, that the first steps of any race into civilization exaggerate their worst qualities, imitate vices rather than virtues, and that the first stage of improvement is a coarse self-assertion and a brutal claim of equality, which is most disagreeable and exasperating.

But we do not think you ought to keep a whole race in everlasting ignorance and degradation because the intermediate stages are disagreeable and inconvenient. And when one does emerge from his surroundings and prove himself the peer of any of you in intelligence and refinement and high purpose, we think he should be encouraged and rewarded.

I have no sympathy with that artificial code of society which will entertain as an equal and honored guest the man of openly immoral life and vicious habits and coarse nature, who boasts, perhaps, of fraud and perjury at elections, whose hands are known to be stained with the blood of barbarous lynchings, and then will shut the door on a man of clean person and pure life, of high purpose and fine character and cultivated intelligence, only because he is black. There is no other spot in the world where such an antiquated, benighted, unreasonable, unkind code prevails, and the distressing conditions in the South do not excuse it.

Punish, if you will, by social ostracism and contempt all uncleanness, all immorality, all coarseness, all depravity, but do not pardon all these and establish only one unpardonable crime—color. That is what we object to in the South.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. I want to say that in Kentucky most of the school taxes are paid by the white people, and per capita is distributed equally between the white and colored people, and we have a normal school at Frankfort, presided over by well-educated negroes, and the political rights of the colored people are recognized in Kentucky as well as in any State of the Union, but I do not want the gentleman to dodge the issue. I ask him if he has ever invited a colored man to his table or to his parlor?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I never did, and I never in my life was so mean as to criticise a man who did. To-day, when we see in foreign countries some vapid lordling, just because he has inherited a title, looking down with conscious and admitted social superiority on men whose culture and abilities he can not even comprehend, we think it is an unreasonable, antiquated, and ridiculous social condition. When we see here at home the airs and importance assumed by some weakling whose inherited wealth "gilds the straightened forehead of the fool," we laugh at and despise it.

Such conditions are un-American. Worth here makes the man; and a social code is far more un-American, and unrepublican, and undemocratic, and uncivilized, and unchristian which says that no capacity, no refinement, no character, can atone for the slightest taint of negro blood.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I can not yield any more at this time. I will yield before I am through. And I must say it makes my blood boil when I hear that young girls from the North, as pure, as delicate, as refined, and as attractive as any in this land, go South to teach in negro schools, either from philanthropy or for self-support, and the ladies of the town lift up their skirts and walk by as if they were contaminated by their presence.

You say we do not recognize the colored race in Massachusetts. I was very glad to notice that this last year the senior class in Harvard College, which is certainly as aristocratic an institution as there is in the North—we often think too much so—I was glad to see that the senior class of Harvard College elected as their class orator a negro, a man who in your section of the country would not be considered fit to sit down at the table with. I was glad that my college of Amherst some years ago did the same thing.

Now, let me make it clear. Our feeling is not that a man ought to put away all prejudice. That is impossible. We do not blame you for having prejudices. We appreciate your condition, but we do not believe that any man has a right to ostracise other men for exercising their own tastes; and if a man can rise superior to prejudice and say that some black man is entitled by his qualities to be the social equal of himself, I honor such a man for his magnanimity. The most popular governor Massachusetts ever had touched the heart of our people when he said:

I know not what record of sin awaits me in the other world, but this I do know: I never was so mean as to despise a man because he was poor or because he was ignorant or because he was black.

You would cultivate a worse meanness than that by not only despising the black yourselves, but by punishing everyone who would not agree with you in despising the black. Such a state of society can not be permanent, whether it springs from prejudice, from the bitter sting of suffering, from a political aim at a solid South. It is irreconcilable with democracy; it flies in the teeth of the great sweep of civilization and progress; it belongs with the outgrown orders of nobility and the divine right of kings, and can not stand the test of an age of reason.

Mr. GILBERT. Now, one question.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly; I will yield now for a question.

Mr. GILBERT. By this homily you have given us about our prejudices, do you mean that that applies only to the colored people, or have you forgotten that you voted for the Chinese-exclusion bill? Is your inability to discriminate between the colors of people confined to differences between white and black, or does it extend to the yellow and brown?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Oh, I do not think I ought to take my time to answer that.

Mr. GILBERT. Did you vote for the Chinese-exclusion bill?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Why, it is an entirely different question. It is not because we are prejudiced against the color of the Chinese, but it is because we do not want them here to cheapen our labor. That is an entirely different issue. There is no social question about it.

Mr. Chairman, a communication has come to the House from the Secretary of State, in response to a resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs requesting information about the shipment of horses, mules, etc., from the State of Louisiana. The document is just printed to-day. It contains a report from the governor of Louisiana which tells us what has been done there, so we can see what was the real basis of the inflamed and intemperate assaults here upon the Administration for violating neutrality.

The Secretary does not give us any legal argument, but I wish to discuss the legal proposition involved, because I think, in spite of the attacks from the other side, that the present Administration has acted in strict conformity to law, in absolute sympathy with all the precedents of every Administration which has ever considered the question, beginning with Jefferson, and, moreover, it is acting in line with the best permanent interests of the United States, which no Administration could depart from without both breaking our past precedents and threatening our future development and commercial expansion.

What is the law of neutrals which gentlemen on the other side invoke?

I notice there was a very long article from a worthy gentleman of Chicago in the papers, arguing with great minuteness and elaboration that horses intended for the supply of the British army were contraband of war. When I was in the law school I remember a professor told us that the best definition of a demurrer that he knew of was, "What of it?" So I enter a demurrer to this argument.

I would say, What of it? What if horses are contraband of war? For myself I am willing to admit that they are, and that that is the law; but what of it? Can not citizens of the United States sell contraband of war to belligerents?

In the public press and I believe upon the other side of this Chamber it has been argued that we can not. But one must be strangely ignorant of American diplomatic history to maintain such a contention, for there is an unbroken chain of precedents from Washington down against it. In 1793 Mr. Jefferson, then Secretary of State, wrote to the ministers of Great Britain and France, which nations were then at war, as follows:

Our citizens have always been free to make, vend, and export arms. It is the constant occupation and livelihood of some of them. To suppress their callings—the only means, perhaps, of their subsistence—because a war exists in foreign and distant countries, in which we have no concern, would scarcely be expected. It would be hard in principle and impossible in practice. The law of nations, therefore, respecting the rights of those at peace does not require from them such an internal derangement in their occupations. It is satisfied with the external penalty pronounced in the President's proclamation—that of confiscation of such portion of these arms as shall fall into the hands of the belligerent powers on the way to the ports of their enemies. (3 Jefferson's Works, 558.)

Now, if we have the right to sell arms, we certainly have the right to sell horses. Why did Jefferson make that rule? He did it because, with that philosophic, far-seeing statesmanship of his, he divined what was the destiny and the permanent interest of the American nation. At that time Europe had been so repeatedly swept by devastating wars that it seemed as if war was her normal condition.

Our early statesmen recognized the wonderful advantage we should enjoy by our distance from the arena of war and wisely planned that we should avoid entangling alliances; should be friends to all but allies to none and so should be free to trade with all, and from our peaceful accumulations supply their warlike needs. That we should sell them the food they could not raise, the arms they had no time to manufacture, the neutral ships to carry their freights, and to carry even their soldiers. So obviously wise and politic was this plan for the growth and wealth of the United States that all statesmen and parties have followed it and it has become our American doctrine of neutrality, as the following quotations from our state papers will prove:

Alexander Hamilton said:

The purchasing within and exporting from the United States, by way of merchandise, articles commonly called contraband, being generally warlike instruments and military stores, is free to all the parties at war, and is not to be interfered with. (1 Am. St. Pap., For. Rel., 140.)

Timothy Pickering, Secretary of State, wrote to the minister of France, 1796:

In both the sections cited (from Vattel) the right of neutrals to trade in articles contraband of war is clearly established; in the first, by selling to the warring powers who come to the neutral country to buy them; in the second, by the neutral subjects or citizens carrying them to the countries of the powers at war, and there selling them. (1 Am. St. Pap., 649.)

President Pierce, in his second annual message, 1854, said:

In pursuance of this policy the laws of the United States do not forbid their citizens to sell either of the belligerent powers articles contraband of war or take munitions of war or soldiers on board their private ships for transportation, and although in so doing the individual citizen exposes his property or person to some of the hazards of war, his acts do not involve any breach of national neutrality, nor of themselves implicate the Government.

Thus, during the progress of the present war in Europe, our citizens have, without national responsibility therefor, sold gunpowder and arms to all buyers, regardless of the destination of those articles. Our merchantmen have been and still continue to be largely employed by Great Britain and by France in transporting troops, provisions, and munitions of war to the principal seat of military operations, and in bringing home their sick and wounded soldiers; but such use of our mercantile marine is not interdicted either by the international or by our municipal law, and therefore does not compromit our neutral relations with Russia.

Mr. Marcy, Secretary of State, wrote in 1854:

The mere exportation of arms and munitions of war from the United States to the belligerent country has never, however, been considered as an offense against the act of Congress of the 20th of April, 1818. All the belligerents enjoy this right equally, and a privilege which is open to all can not be justly complained of by any one party to a war. (MSS. Notes, Cent. Am.)

And in 1855 Mr. Marcy again wrote to Mr. Buchanan:

It is certainly a novel doctrine of international law that traffic by citizens or subjects of a neutral power with belligerents, though it should be in arms, ammunition, and warlike stores, compromits the neutrality of that power. That the enterprise of individuals, citizens of the United States, may have led them in some instances and to a limited extent to trade with Russia in some of the specified articles is not denied, nor is it necessary that it should be for the purpose of vindicating this Government from the charge of having disregarded the duties of neutrality in the present war.

Private manufacturing establishments have been resorted to for powder, arms, and warlike stores, and immense quantities of provisions have been furnished to supply their armies in the Crimea. In the face of these facts, open and known to all the world, it certainly was not expected that the British Government would have alluded to the very limited traffic which some of our citizens may have had with Russia, as sustaining a solemn charge against this Government for violating neutral obligation toward the allies.

Russia may have shared scantily, but the allies have undoubtedly partaken largely in the benefits derived from the capital, the industry, and the inventive genius of American citizens in the progress of the war; but as this Government has had no connection with those proceedings neither belligerent has any just ground of complaint against it. (MSS. inst., Gr. Brit.)

Mr. Fish, Secretary of State in 1874, wrote to Mr. Cramer:

Transportation of arms or money from the United States to either of the belligerents in Mexico is not a breach of neutrality, either under international law or the municipal law of the United States. (Mr. Seward, Secretary of State, to Mr. Romero, August 7, 1865. MSS. notes, Mex.)

The exportation of arms and munitions of war of their own manufacture to foreign countries is an important part of the commerce of the United States. In time of war their Government will expect those engaged in the business to beware of all the risks legally incident to it. (MSS. inst., Denmark.)

Mr. Evarts, Secretary of State in 1879, wrote to Mr. Sherman:

"A torpedo launch, in five sections, ready to be set up," though contraband of war, may be exported from the United States without breach of neutrality. Such articles are "a legitimate element of commerce to the citizens of the United States, a neutral power, with either of the belligerents in time of war in the same manner and to the same extent as they would be in time of peace, and afford no ground for the interference of the executive officers of the United States."

Do not these citations abundantly prove that the United States has recognized and upheld and acted upon the doctrine of international law which allows citizens of a neutral State to sell contraband of war to belligerents? But there has once, at least, been a Congressional investigation of this subject where an administration was criticised for an act which certainly tended vastly more to partiality and unfriendliness than anything charged against the present Administration.

In 1868 the United States had on hand an enormous number of Springfield muskets, relics of the civil war, which were becoming obsolete, and it passed a law authorizing their sale. The war between France and Germany broke out before they had all been sold, and several hundred thousands of these muskets were sold to France. Germany objected, naturally, because that was not in the ordinary course of commerce, not the business act of an individual, but the nation, the United States itself, went into the market and furnished one of the belligerents with munitions of war. I think myself that was an unfriendly act. I do not wonder that Germany protested.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is it the contention of the gentleman that the right to sell contraband of war also carries with it the right to establish a naval post in our country?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No; it does not. I quite agree with my colleague on the committee in the distinction which he makes, and I shall discuss the point he has in mind later. Senator Carpenter was at the head of the Senate committee which investigated that sale to France, and, so far as I can find from the RECORD, the committee was unanimous in its report, which held that our Government committed no breach of neutrality by that sale, and enunciated this striking statement of the law:

Congress having by the act of 1868 directed the Secretary of War to dispose of these arms and stores, and the Government, being engaged in such sales prior to the war between France and Germany, had a right to continue the same during the war, and might, in the city of Washington, have sold and delivered any amount of such stores to Frederick William or Louis Napoleon in person without violating the obligations of neutrality, provided such sales were made in good faith, not for the purpose of influencing the strife, but in execution of the lawful purpose of the Government to sell its surplus arms and stores.

That certainly was an extreme case, far different from that before us to-day; yet this committee of distinguished lawyers, one of whom sits to-day upon the Supreme Court of the United States, gave that as their understanding of the rights of neutrals under international law. If the acts they sustain were valid, it would seem preposterous to question the validity of our sales of horses to Great Britain.

But some of our critics, recognizing apparently that the overwhelming weight of authority and precedent sustains the right of citizens of a neutral state to sell contraband of war to belligerents, claim that under the second rule of the treaty of Washington the present sale of horses is forbidden. That rule is as follows:

A neutral government is bound not to permit or suffer either belligerent to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the other, or for the purpose of the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms or the recruitment of men.

Now, I will admit that when I first read that rule in this connection it seemed to me it did forbid shipping horses from our ports, because it would be an "augmentation of military supplies." When I asked about it, however, of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. HITT], who knows by heart the international law and historical precedents which most of us have to dig out for each case, he directed me at once to the true meaning of that rule, as incontrovertibly established by its connection and its subsequent interpretation by the parties who made it.

To correctly interpret a treaty it is necessary to consider its history and attendant circumstances. And I challenge any man to study the history of that rule and the correspondence between the two Governments who framed it without being convinced that the rule applies only to supplying vessels carrying on war and not to any other sale of military supplies.

The treaty containing that rule was adopted in the settlement of the Alabama claims. It was about naval vessels we were treating and it was to naval vessels that section was meant to apply, and not at all to ordinary sales of contraband of war. This fact might be doubtful were it not for the subsequent statements of the two Governments, which make it clear and unquestionable.

When either nations or individuals make an agreement, the way to find the true meaning, the proper interpretation, of that agreement is to ascertain what the parties to it intended, and if they both afterwards agree upon what they intended, that prevents all dispute and is final. Both England and the United States, the parties to this agreement, have since agreed upon what they intended, and in such a formal way and at such a time as to be most impressive and binding and conclusive. When the ratification of the treaty was pending in 1871, our minister to London sent to our Secretary of State the following telegram:

LONDON, June 9, 1871.

FISH, Secretary of State, Washington:

It seems probable that to remove serious objection to ratification of treaty here some declaration should be made limiting interpretation of second rule, sixth article, so as not to restrict sales of arms or other military supplies in ordinary course of commerce. Will the President authorize such expression of views and purpose in bringing rules to knowledge of other maritime powers and asking assent to them? De Grey in difficulty, because no understanding on this point expressed.

SCHENCK.

To this our Secretary of State cabled the following answer:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 10, 1871.

SCHENCK, Minister, London:

The President understands and insists that the second rule of Article VI does not prevent the open sale of arms or other military supplies, in the ordinary course of commerce, as they were sold in this country during the late French-German war, and as they were sold to this Government in England during the rebellion, and as we understand them to have been sold also in England during the late French-German war.

In bringing the rules to the knowledge of other powers, and in asking their assent, this Government will express this view, and will insist that such i the proper interpretation and meaning. It will be well that the two Governments agree upon the same terms of expression in presenting the rules to other powers.

You are authorized to read this dispatch to Lords Granville and De Grey.

FISH, Secretary.

On June 12, after this exchange of telegrams, Mr. Schenck wrote to Mr. Fish a letter from which I quote the following extract showing still more clearly the purpose of these negotiations and the interpretation of the rule:

I found that Lord De Grey was very anxious about the opposition to the treaty which had been developed in certain quarters, arising mainly out of the construction or interpretation to be given to the second rule in the sixth article. It was held, he said, by many members in both houses of Parliament, including Sir Roundell Palmer, whose opinion was likely to carry great influence and weight with others, that the language of that rule would restrict or forbid the sale by a neutral, or in the country of a neutral power, of arms and other military supplies in the ordinary course of commerce.

The ministry had notice, he said, that they would be interrogated on this point, particularly in the House of Commons, and that the same objection to ratification on the part of Her Majesty's Government be strongly urged in the House of Lords in the debate on Earl Russell's resolution, which was to come on on the following Monday. He and Sir Stafford Northcote, and perhaps also Mr. Bernard, of the British commissioners, had assured the government that the rule was never intended or understood by the negotiators to have any such meaning, and he was desirous to know if I, as one of the commissioners on the part of the United States, did not fully concur with him in this view. I frankly assured him that I did, and that I was satisfied that no other interpretation would either be claimed or admitted by my government.

On the same day this letter was written the question of ratifying the treaty came up for discussion in the British House of Commons, and Sir Roundell Palmer put to Mr. Gladstone the following question:

I beg to ask the first lord of the treasury whether the second rule in article 6 of the treaty of Washington is understood by Her Majesty's Government as prohibiting the use of neutral ports or waters for the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms to a belligerent only when those acts are done for the service of a vessel cruising or carrying on war, or intended to cruise or carry on war against another belligerent, and not when military supplies or arms are exported for use of a belligerent power from neutral ports or waters in the ordinary course of commerce; whether any steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to ascertain that the rule in question is understood by the Government of the United States in the same limited sense, and, if so, with what result; and whether it is intended, in any communications which may be addressed to foreign governments with a view to the general adoption of this rule, to guard against its being accepted or understood in any larger sense?

To this inquiry Mr. Gladstone at once responded as follows:

With reference to the first part of the honorable and learned gentleman's question, I perceive that it has been framed with great care, and having considered our reply with equal care, while avoiding entering into any of the details of the question, I am in a position to answer this part of the honorable and learned member's question in the affirmative. In answer to the second part of the honorable and learned gentleman's question, I may state that we have had an opportunity of communicating with Lord De Grey, with the right honorable gentleman opposite, and with Mr. Barnard on the subject, who have all of them given us the fullest assurance that the understanding referred to in the first part of the honorable and learned gentleman's question is that of the United States in reference to this matter, and, further, that it has been in our power to communicate with the distinguished gentleman who has arrived in this country as a representative of the United States, who was a member of the joint high commission, General Schenck, who has informed Her Majesty's Government that such was his understanding of the meaning of the rule in question, and, indeed, we have been told by that gentleman that the President of the United States himself understands the rule in that sense, and that the latter would himself be the first not only to admit and allow, but to contend for that construction of the rule in question.

With regard to the third part of the honorable and learned gentleman's question, I am able to state that Mr. Fish, the United States Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, who was also one of the commissioners, has expressed an opinion that it would be advantageous if the two Governments were to make a joint declaration which would place the meaning of this rule beyond all chance of misconstruction. I believe that communications have been entered into between some of the British commissioners and some of the United States commissioners and other distinguished authorities in America on the subject, and that they also have come to the conclusion that it is impossible to entertain the slightest doubt but that the meaning to be attached to the terms of the treaty is that which the contracting parties themselves attach to them.

Thus there was a definite and distinct agreement between representatives of the two Governments which made the treaty what this rule meant before the treaty was ratified.

There is still further evidence in the subsequent history of this rule what was meant by it, for in the treaty it was stipulated that the United States and Great Britain should join in bringing before other powers the three rules they had agreed upon as their understanding of the duties of neutrals in case of war, and asking the other powers to agree to the same rules.

When it came to framing the joint note to the other powers, both nations wished to give an explanation of rule 2 so that it should be plain that it did not mean to prohibit commerce in contraband of war, but only for naval vessels; and England drew up and submitted to the United States the following statement of the purpose and meaning of rule 2 as a form to be presented to other governments in asking that they would also bind themselves in the future to obey the rule.

As some question has been raised as to the true import of the second rule, that rule is understood by Her Majesty's Government (and, as the Government of —— will learn from a similar communication that will be addressed to it by the representative of the United States, by the Government of the United States also) as prohibiting the use of neutral ports or waters for the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms to a belligerent only when those acts are done for the service of a vessel cruising or carrying on war or intended to cruise or carry on war against another belligerent and not when military supplies or arms are exported for the use of a belligerent power from a neutral port or waters in the ordinary course of commerce. And it is in order to prevent any future misunderstanding on this point that the undersigned, in communicating the three rules above recited to the Government of —— and in inviting the accession of that Government to them, is ordered distinctly to state the construction which the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and the Government of the United States put upon the second rule, and under which they invite and desire to accept the accession of the Government of ——, as they will that of all other maritime powers.

The United States suggested instead of this form the following:

As some question has been raised as to the true import of the prohibition of the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms contained in the second rule, that that part of the said rule is understood by Her Majesty's Government (and as the Government of —— will learn from a similar communication that will be addressed to it by the representative of the United States, by the Government of the United States also) as prohibiting the use of the ports or waters of the neutral for the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms only when such supplies or arms are for the service of a vessel cruising or carrying on war, or intended to cruise or carry on war against either belligerent and as not prohibiting the open sale of arms or other military supplies in the ordinary course of commerce. And it is in order to prevent any misunderstanding on this point that the undersigned, in communicating the three rules above recited to the Government of ——, and in inviting the accession of that Government to them, is ordered distinctly to state the construction which the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and the Government of the United States put upon that part of the second rule, and under which they invite and desire to accept the accession of the Government of ——, as they will that of all other maritime powers.

The differences in these two forms are trivial and do not at all affect the issue I am discussing, so they prove conclusively upon that issue what the two governments meant by rule 2. These differences, however, although so trivial, occasioned a long correspondence and some friction, and meanwhile it appeared probable that the rules would not be accepted by the other great powers, so that after long and spasmodic correspondence the submission of the agreement to other powers was dropped.

To summarize, then, the facts in the history of this rule which show its true meaning, it was part of the Alabama treaty, which dealt mainly with the law of vessels and not other contraband of war. Before it was ratified the representatives of both Governments which framed it agreed that it was not intended to apply to ordinary commerce in contraband of war, but only to supplies for vessels of war. This statement was formally made in the House of Commons and disarmed opposition, which the treaty would otherwise have met.

Afterwards, when the two nations prepared, in accordance with the terms of the treaty, a request to other nations to also adopt these three rules as the law of neutrals, they prepared, in order to prevent all misunderstanding, a statement of their interpretation of rule 2, and although they never finally agreed upon the details of that statement or presented it to other powers, the correspondence shows (Senate Docs., vol. 1, third session Forty-fifth Congress) that they agreed that rule 2 did not apply to ordinary commerce in contraband of war, but only to vessels of war.

It seems to me that this is absolutely conclusive to an impartial mind, and that the contention that selling horses to the British Government is a violation of rule 2 is unsound and unfair. Until gentlemen can claim that horses are a part of the equipment of a vessel of war they can not justly claim that trade in them is forbidden by rule 2 of the treaty of Washington.

There have, however, been some charges made that English military camps are being established in this country, where the horses bought were being collected. I have believed myself that these charges were largely the exaggerated products of an excited imagination, sometimes influenced by political animosity and hopes. One of them was presented formally to this House, and the Secretary of State has sent to us the report of the governor of Louisiana upon the so-called camp in that State.

It discloses, what I think could have been anticipated; that the term "military camp" was a misnomer. If, under the law, the English have a right to buy horses and export them to South Africa, still more have they the right to buy them and keep them here. The sheriff of St. Bernard, to whom the governor of Louisiana intrusted the investigation, reported as follows:

ST. BERNARD, LA., February 28, 1902.

His Excellency W. W. HEARD,
Governor of the State of Louisiana, Baton Rouge, La.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 21st received and contents noted I beg to state that the extract from the letter of Mr. Samuel Pearson, reproduced in your letter, does not contain a correct statement of the facts existing in the parish of St. Bernard, except as to the following points:

Mules and horses have been and are now being loaded at Port Chalmette, in the parish of St. Bernard, and, as I am informed, for the British Government, either directly or indirectly, but the loading of said animals as well as the preparing of the ships for the reception of same is done by local men, all of whom, I believe, are citizens of the United States. In fact, I have been informed that at present the loading of said animals is being done by the longshoremen of the city of New Orleans. The work, I understand, is supervised by Englishmen, who may or may not be officers in the British army. Certainly there is no one there in uniform.

There is no such thing as a British post, with men and soldiers, established at Port Chalmette. So far as the recruiting of men is concerned, I am sure and can certify that it is not being done in the parish of St. Bernard. * * *

E. E. NUNEZ,
Sheriff of the Parish of St. Berrand.

That report disposes pretty effectually of the Louisiana case. I think investigation will probably show that other complaints have as little foundation, because I do not believe the English Government will be so foolish as to commit a violation of our neutrality laws when, without any breach of them, they can secure what they need.

Undoubtedly to a large portion of the American people the state of the law which allows the British to supply themselves with horses is most unpopular. Undoubtedly very many, observing that in this instance the law works entirely to the advantage of one side and can not be availed of at all by the other, think the law itself unreasonable and unjust, and do not wish it observed. And undoubtedly some take advantage of the popular feeling and try to direct it into political channels for political advantage.

But if this administration has acted in strict conformity with international law, has held the scales of justice even, without yielding to partiality or to feeling or to political pressure, but has carried out faithfully and impartially the well-settled law of the duty of neutral states, it will ultimately receive the commendation and approval of the American people. That, I believe, it has done. And it could not have followed any different course without not only violating its duty of neutrality but also abandoning and overthrowing that great principle which Jefferson enunciated and which so many of our greatest statesmen have elaborated since as one of the cardinal doctrines of American policy, that we will always sell freely and impartially to every belligerent all that she needs, even contraband of war.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to take any part in this discussion and should not do so now except for what I conceive to be the rather remarkable argument made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] who has just taken his seat.

From my standpoint, Mr. Chairman, as a Democrat and as a Southerner, I think it is extremely unfortunate that debates of this character should ever be precipitated upon this House, because I think that under no circumstances can they do any section, or any part of our country, or any people of our country any good. And when I hear the arguments made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, coming from that great State of scholars and of literature, that has done so much to enrich the history of our common country, saying that he can see no difference between a man who has colored blood in his veins and a man with white, I blush for the honor and for the past of that great State.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the distinction is not as the gentleman says. It is not one of prejudice against the colored man as a colored man; it is an instinct of civilization; it is the voice of nature; it is the voice of God calling out for the perpetuity of the white race and for the preservation of Anglo-Saxon institutions. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I believe it was the great Cardinal of France who said, "Thou canst never know what thou hast never tried," and so I say to these gentlemen of the North that they can never know the conditions in the South until they come there and see for themselves.

I remember that in the great city in which I live, where there are a great many negroes, who are protected under the law in all the rights of citizenship—I remember that a very excellent gentleman from Iowa came there to make his home. He came there as a Republican; and yet he has written one of the best papers that ever appeared in any magazine in this country, saying, in effect, that party commits a crime against civilization and against the country that puts the elective franchise in the hands of the ignorant negro of the South. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the question is not one of personal prejudice, but one of race and race instincts.

Now, so far as I am concerned, in the great Commonwealth which I in part represent, when I was prosecuting attorney, for thirty-eight days I stood in court and prosecuted white men for lynching negroes; and three out of the number were men of Northern birth: and the leader of the gang in that outrageous murder and assassination was born in the great State of New York.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is it not a fact that every negro State in the South is a Democratic State, and every negro county a Democratic county?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Yes, my friend, thank God what you say is true. And you can pass your "force bills" and threaten us with Crumpacker resolutions, but until the end of time the South will be dominated by white men. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And if you lived in the South you would join hands with us. [Renewed applause on the Democratic side.]

A MEMBER. He is a North Carolinian.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Oh, well, he is a North Carolina Republican. Then I give him up completely—for him there is no salvation.

Sir, take the South as she is. I want to see negro children educated. We have schools all over the State of Tennessee for their education. Such schools exist all over the South. White men tax themselves to educate the colored people. And I will tell you to-day that the best friend and the truest friend that the negro has is not you of the North, who do not understand him, but the white man of the South, and the negro himself is beginning to realize that fact.

Now, as a Southern man, I regard it as a mistake that President Roosevelt ate dinner with Booker Washington. But if it was a matter of taste with the President, it was all right so far as I am concerned. I was not disposed to indulge in any harsh criticism of him on that account and suppose he now realizes that he made a mistake. I was disposed, and am now, to attribute it to impulse and not a design to wound the feelings of the Southern people. So far as I am concerned, I do not intend to do it. So far as the gentleman [Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts] is concerned, he informs us that he has not and does not intend to do it. And so far as the vast number of the Republicans are concerned, they do not intend to do it; and whenever they get up here in this House and prate and parade about the negro, and especially the negro in the South, the negro in the South himself understands that it is not for his protection or for his benefit.

What is the use, my friends, of stirring up race antagonism? The Southern white man and the negro are getting on well. I know many negroes whom I believe to be honest, whom I believe to be intelligent, whom I believe to be moral men, and many of them are my friends, and I am glad to number them among my friends; but when you say that that negro shall control white men or hold office, then I say to you that you are simply turning back the wheels of time and that you are reversing the policy by which this Government has been brought up to its present standard of civilization. Now, there is one thing, my friends, I want to correct you about, and I was surprised that a gentleman of the scholarship and attainments and historical research of the gentleman from Massachusetts should have been guilty of making such a mistake.

I supposed that the gentleman understood history better than to make a remark of that kind. He says that he has a physical repugnance to the negro and that he can not understand how it is that so many mulattoes are born in the South when white men talk as I do. I want to call his attention to the fact that most of the mulattoes in the South are from 37 to 40 years old and at the time they were conceived there were about a million Northern soldiers in the South and all the Confederates were away from their homes. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Is that the best light the gentleman has on that subject?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I will state that I am answering the speech of the gentleman in kind.

Mr. HULL. I think if you will go back to the history of your country you will find they were there long before the soldiers invaded the South.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Oh, I do not think so. They were very rarely seen before the war. Now, there is no use of getting angry about this thing at all, gentlemen. What I have stated to you is an historical fact, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, coming from that great State, ought to have known it, and what I simply say is to express my surprise that he was ignorant of that fact. I think I have said all that I care to say. I want it distinctly understood that I have no war to make with any white man who wants to take dinner with a negro. If it suits the white man, it does not hurt the negro.

A MEMBER. But you feel sorry for the negro.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. No; I can not say that. I think that is a matter of taste, but what I do say is that what you call this prejudice is not a prejudice against the negro personally, but it is a racial instinct, which you ought to recognize, and which I am satisfied that many gentlemen on that side of the Chamber do recognize.

Mr. COCHRAN. And which they feel much more acutely than you do.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Yes; and to-day, in spite of it all, in spite of the enfranchising of the colored race, in spite of the Republican party putting the ballot into their hands and their exercise of the ballot, not one State in that whole South has a negro official, and I am proud of that fact, and you ought to be proud of it, as you belong to the same race and have the same common country.

Mr. CLAYTON. And the same is true of the Northern States. They have none.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. KAHN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 2062. An act to authorize the Western Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Ohio River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. JAMES HENDERSON KYLE, late a Senator from the State of South Dakota.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tribute may be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit to the family of the deceased a copy of these resolutions with the action of the Senate thereon.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect at the conclusion of these exercises the Senate do adjourn.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HULL. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything on this subject. I had no inclination to do so. I wish to state, however, to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] that if he will take the pains to look in the Congressional Directory he will find that I am a native of the South, that I hail from the State of North Carolina, one of the States which seceded in the late unpleasantness.

I have been in public life since 1890, and I have heard every phase of the negro question from that time until now. I have heard it discussed pro and con. There is none of it which is not as familiar to me as A B C. And as a Southern man, as a man whose interests are in the South, an individual whose ancestors on both sides belonged to the Confederacy, as a member of a family who, upon my mother's side, gave seven lives to the Confederacy and whose father gave four years of his service to the Confederacy, I want to say there ought to be some time in the range of human conception where this question could stop. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I am talking not as a politician. I say this as a citizen. The great South, spread out before us with its vast area and its vast possibilities, has been held in the background for thirty years, simply to gratify the whim and the feeling of a few Democratic politicians. [Applause on the Republican side.] We are told that Rip Van Winkle slept for twenty years. The South has slept for a longer period, and if the advice of these distinguished gentlemen who are now presenting this question and precipitating it upon this floor is to be followed, we will be in absolute darkness fifty years from now unless they are overthrown.

I want to say that I hail from a section of the South where the negro question can not enter. I come from a section of the South where there are no colored votes. I come from the section of the South where you can not stuff ballot boxes and come here with 5,000 majority back of you with no opposition. I come from that section of the South were every man walks up and puts in a ballot and stays there as a free man under our constitution under his oath, and sees that that ballot is counted, just as he cast it. And if you will look at the record you will see that my district in the last election gave approximately as many votes as the whole State of South Carolina where you have negro domination to the queen's taste. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You come up here now and you say that the South must be protected from the negro. I want to submit this, Mr. Chairman: In my own State, where we took charge in 1894, there was not a solitary county that has ever been dominated by the negro; not one. Nobody fears negro domination in North Carolina, yet the last campaign in my State was a travesty upon justice. There was no semblance of an election in more than half of North Carolina. An organized band of red shirts rode my State from one section to the other, regardless of law and order, and fired their guns into the houses of private individuals who at no time had disturbed anybody for the mere purpose of carrying the State against the will of the people, against the rights of the citizens, in order to put a few men into Congress, to make a governor of North Carolina, and to send a man here to the United States Senate who might act in that capacity regardless of the will of the people.

I know whereof I speak, and I say, as a Southern man, this question ought to have a limit. In the last campaign in my State we were promised that if we disfranchised the negro we should never hear any more of the negro question. It was said, "We are going to let the white men divide up upon economic lines." There is not a Democrat who sits on that side—and I have as many friends in my State where I am known as any Republican—there is not a Democrat who sits there to-day who does not know that the policy of the Republican party has been the salvation of the South, and there is not a man there who does not know that while the Republican party has reached out and given us all the aid we have we have had a solid Democratic delegation coming here year after year protesting against it and doing all they could to obstruct legislation. [Applause on the Republican side.] The Republican party has tendered us bread when we have asked for a stone. The Republican party has given us fish when we pleaded for a serpent, and everybody on that side knows it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I made the statement, and I now repeat it, that Governor Wolcott, during the Nashville centennial, came there with his staff. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] said that Governor Wolcott was not the governor of Massachusetts at that time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. My friend is mistaken. I did not say that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I asked the question whether it was not Governor Greenhalge who was the governor at the time of that celebration. Governor Greenhalge went to Chattanooga with his staff at the time of the dedication of Chattanooga Park, and I had confounded the two occasions.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I state, Mr. Chairman, that it was Governor Wolcott. Now, I have the Tribune Almanac, and I guess the Tribune Almanac is Republican enough to quote from. At least Republicans can believe it. It states that Governor Wolcott was elected governor of Massachusetts in 1896. He came to Nashville, and I, with a lot of other gentleman, had the honor of entertaining him. He brought his staff along with him, and a number of members of his staff stated to me that there was a negro who was one of their number, under the law and by election, from the State of Massachusetts, and that they left him behind; that they had passed a law making every man on the governor's staff, including the governor himself, I believe, pay his own way to get rid of the negro, and they did it in that way.

And they were condemning him most liberally, as usual with the Republicans when they express their honest convictions. They did not want to have anything to do with him or to associate with him, really. They do not meet with them in the restaurants——

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Was not he left behind because they did not want to offend the sensibilities of your region?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was just giving you the conversation of the distinguished gentleman or gentlemen who were on the staff of the governor—all of whom we liked and enjoyed immensely—stated to me. The negro did come, I was informed, but preceded the governor and his staff. The negro stayed at some place. I do not know where. [Laughter.] Now, that is the way Massachusetts loves them. But the gentlemen who alluded to the negro condemned him as an individual, and were sore at having to meet him at home even officially.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to speak of a distinguished gentleman who lives in Iowa. I was astonished when I read this. It is from the Omaha Herald of December 1, 1901. Coming direct from that great section, I was struck by a very significant statement that is now pertinent, one which I never would have suspected. But it occurred with a citizen coming from the State of Iowa. Here is what I found. I find this: That before this occurrence the gentleman states that he had met Mr. Lincoln and had a talk with him and that when he was sent for to come to Washington he feared the worst had overtaken him. I will read from the Herald:

In 1862, while in command of the district of Corinth, Miss., I received a dispatch from General Grant to proceed to Washington and report to the President. No explanation coming with the dispatch, I was a little alarmed, for there had come to me at Corinth a great many negroes, and I had placed them in what was known as a contraband camp and had placed over them certain soldiers as guards. This caused me a good deal of annoyance and trouble. The white soldiers did not like the duty and took every opportunity to annoy the negroes, even in some cases going as far as to shoot them.

The superintendent of the camp was Chaplain Alexander, of an Ohio regiment, a very able and excellent man, and he suggested one day to me that he believed that negroes would be better to guard the contraband camp than white soldiers. I authorized him to raise one or two companies, and I armed them, solely for the purpose of guarding these negroes. I had no authority to do this, and I did not at the time appreciate the importance that was to be given to it. There were many protests against this, and in the command there was considerable opposition to it; and I thought that my call to Washington was possibly to be called to account for this act.

Those are the words of Gen. Granville M. Dodge in December, 1901, over his own signature. His soldiers, he says, shot the negroes. Here is an old incident of 1862, showing the racial hatred of the white man of the negro. After this cruel act the negro was enfranchised, when the South was tied hand and foot by infamous laws enacted by carpetbag rulers, presenting conditions which the whites in the South could not and would not then or now tolerate and to which the people of Massachusetts would not then or now submit. My observations since I have been in Congress are that the white people East and West can not and will not tolerate, but severely criticise the negro, and yet the so-called negro lovers East and West, and especially East, in the press and Congress, now and then make the warmest professions of love for the negro. The negro knows the Southern people are his real friends and they remain South.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to have a few minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise informally.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker resumed the chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair dislikes to disturb the committee, but the gentleman from Missouri has a bill of great importance, and the Chair lays before the House a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Before the committee resumes its session, I request unanimous consent that the time be extended for the discussion of the pending bill one hour.

Mr. HULL. I object.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. One half to be in charge of the gentleman from Iowa and the other half the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

BANKRUPTCY BILL.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a request of the House. I ask unanimous consent to submit the minority views on House bill 13697. The majority have filed their report.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that the committee has only risen informally, and that it is not in order.

Mr. CLAYTON. I make that request. I have the consent of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. CANNON. What is the bill?

Mr. CLAYTON. It is the views of the minority on the general bankruptcy bill; and I ask that we have until Friday for the purpose of filing them.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the gentleman from Alabama will have permission to file the views of the minority.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HAY. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts devoted considerable time to discussing the treaty of Washington and its applicability to the maintenance of a British military supply depot in the State of Missouri and a British supply depot and port on American soil on the Gulf of Mexico.

I sought the privilege of interrogating him, but it was not allowed. I desired to ask him whether, in his opinion, had the treaty of Washington never been entered into, it would not have been in contravention of the laws of nations if during a war a neutral power should permit the maintenance within its borders of a military supply depot in charge of the military officers of one of the belligerents, and the maintenance on its seacoast of a port, also in charge of officers of the army of one of the belligerents, and the purchase and shipment directly to the theater of war of cargo after cargo of things contraband under international law, bought by these military officials and concentrated by these officials at these military camps? I contend that the treaty of Washington is an added reason for challenging the attitude of the Administration upon this question.

It is true the citizens of a neutral State may sell in its markets to all comers things contraband of war. The contraband articles may be seized in transit on the high seas, and there is no redress for those who may sustain loss on that account, and this has been cited over and over again, as if it were the only remedy.

This does not touch the question under consideration. Were the United States at war with Great Britain, would we permit the maintenance of a depot of supplies just over the line in Mexico and the collection there of war supplies, and their constant shipment to the theater of war?

Would we regard the Government of Mexico as neutral if this were permitted? Certainly not—especially if the supply camp should be in charge of the officers of Great Britain. Great Britain maintains in this country two such supply camps. Her army officers are in charge of them. They publicly advertise for war materials and for men to enter the employment of the British war office and convey the supplies from their camps to the theater of war. Are we to understand that the Republican Administration regards this as no violation of the law of nations?

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. COCHRAN. With the greatest pleasure.

Mr. LACEY. We are seeking light on this question, and perhaps the gentleman can give us the actual facts in relation to the situation of affairs in his own State.

Mr. COCHRAN. I believe that within 50 miles of my own town there is a British supply camp, where British soldiers are buying war material and sending it to South Africa; and I here solemnly declare that it is the bounden duty of the American Government to put a stop to the disgraceful proceedings. Whether it be in my own State or outside of it, whether my people or others are profiting by it, it is a crime against the cause of liberty. [Applause.] And the gentleman from Iowa deep down in his heart believes the same thing.

We all know that one way of giving effect to its sympathies for one or the other of the belligerents is for a country professing neutrality to stretch the law of nations a long way to help the side with which it sympathizes. Generally this is done by winking at the illicit traffic. The government thus offending necessarily takes refuge in pretended ignorance, and when called to account takes a long period in which to ascertain the facts. This is the course that is being pursued by our Government right now.

American Cabinet officials and the American President are simulating ignorance of things known to every schoolboy and every schoolgirl in the land. Meanwhile this Government is permitting the maintenance of the chief commissary depot of the British army on American soil. This, Mr. Chairman, is the plain, unvarnished history of this infamous proceeding. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Iowa would score a point by mentioning the fact that one of these British posts is in Missouri. Let me assure him that, in the opinion of Missourians, the United States have a higher mission in the world than is to be accomplished by taking advantage of the tragedy in South Africa for the purpose of unloading our surplus mules and horses on the British Government.

Mr. LESSLER. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. COCHRAN. Certainly.

Mr. LESSLER. Did not the gentleman from Missouri know it before it was brought to the attention of the Administration that your people were selling a million dollars' worth of horses and mules to the British Government; and if so, why did not you point it out?

Mr. COCHRAN. Is that all of your question?

Mr. LESSLER. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will be delighted to answer it. I took occasion weeks ago to call attention to the New Orleans depot. I did not know there was a British military camp in my own State until about thirty days ago. As an evidence that the people of Missouri are not disposed to violate international law and help destroy the Boers, even though it may be profitable, I direct attention to the fact that within 50 miles of Lathrop, at public meetings, the people have protested against it.

Mr. LESSLER. Does not the gentleman know that last summer in Kansas City everybody was selling mules and horses to these agents, and that there was no protest against it, that they all took their money and were glad to get it?

Mr. COCHRAN. Let me enlighten my young friend just a little. Our Government is not asked to prevent the sale of mules and horses in the open market. I do not contend that it is unlawful for our people to sell horses to agents of the British Government. But when the British Government establishes camps and advertises in the ordinary way in the newspapers for horses and mules to be sent to the theater of war, and concentrates enormous quantities of war supplies on our soil in charge of army officers of Great Britain, who come into our territory uniformed to inspect and prepare these supplies for the field, and employ men publicly to carry these supplies to the army in the field, the law of neutrality is grossly violated.

Mr. LESSLER. Is there any evidence of that?

Mr. COCHRAN. Any evidence of it? If you take one weekly newspaper from your own district and read it you must know that I have not overstated the case.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman contend that as a matter of law it is a breach of international law for American citizens to sell contraband of war to the British Government?

Mr. COCHRAN. Let me say to the gentleman that I do not propose to be diverted from the main question. I contend that to allow the British Government to set up depots of supplies, to send uniformed British officers 20 or 30 in number to one place and uniformed British officers 40 or 50 in number to another place, and thus maintain military-supply posts in this country—posts as plainly military as any that can be found on the blood-stained fields of South Africa—is a violation of international law. Now, I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he does not agree with me?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will give any evidence of such a state of facts, it will put a new phase upon this case.

Mr. COCHRAN. Oh, what a wonderful thing is that ignorance, under the disguise of which an Anglo-American Secretary of State, is making us accessory to the murder of the South Africans. [Applause.] Read the first newspaper that comes into your hands and it will tell you——

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I have not seen any such.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have one right here in my hands, and I will ask leave to print from its columns what I contend is a faithful rescript of the law of this question, quoted from text-books and treaties in force between this country and others. In every line of this column of newspaper print the attitude of the gentleman from Massachusetts is denounced as untenable. In the brief time at my disposal it is impossible for me to read any portion of it. I ask unanimous consent to incorporate it as a part of my reply to the contention of the gentleman from Massachusetts in regard to the law of this case.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JENKINS). The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COCHRAN. During the Spanish-American war we had an exhibition of what can be done by the strict, unyielding, and persistent enforcement of the neutrality laws. That suited the policy of the Administration at that time. Now we are having an exhibition of what can be done in the direction of making us an ally of one of the parties to a great war, by refraining, utterly, from the enforcement of those laws—shielding ourselves, of course, behind pretended ignorance of the fact.

The gentleman from Massachusetts inquires whether I have any evidence that the facts I have stated exist. I now ask him if he has any evidence to offer in refutation of column after column that has been printed in Associated Press dispatches? Has he anything to offer in refutation of the statement made by the Governor of the State of Louisiana in an elaborate report filed with the State Department?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The only refutation I have is what is stated by the sheriff of Louisiana. I will read it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Do you read that as a legal authority?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. This is on the question of fact.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thought it might be more "law."

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Will you allow me to read?

Mules and horses have been, and are now being, loaded at Port Chalmette, in the parish of St. Bernard——

Mr. COCHRAN. I can not yield to have all that read. The gentleman can print it.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I should not think you would want it read.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman refused to yield to me for a question which would not have consumed a minute.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Oh, I yielded often.

Mr. COCHRAN. What a speech that was, to be sure. The gentleman from Massachusetts began by lamenting the fate of the unfortunate African in the South, who, alas and alack, is debarred from taking charge of politics and government. Then he defended the policy which makes us allies in a war of conquest that is being waged against two Republics in South Africa.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. COCHRAN. I can not yield any more. The gentleman would destroy republican government in five or six States of this Union by giving their governments into the hands of men but little removed from barbarism, and he would continue to allow the British military camps in Missouri and Louisiana to go on shipping mules and horses to South Africa.

The unalterable determination of the Southern white men to prevent the domination of an inferior race in their country is right. It has the approval of the voters of every election district of the United States. Present to any county in Massachusetts, to any village in New England, the question forever present in the domestic economy of the South and the people would decide it precisely as have the people of the South. They would retain control of public affairs, and, no matter what might be the opinions of political managers, more interested in votes than in the negro or his fate, their countrymen everywhere would indorse their action.

The Republican politicians of the North would give the negro the vote and nothing else. Why do not his Northern friends give him employment? They have an innate prejudice that prevents it. Go through this city and ascertain in whose families negro servants are employed. Make inquiries, and you will hear the Yankee from the Northeastern States expressing astonishment that Southern men employ negro servants. Their friends from New England invariably would not give them house room. How many negro carpenters and blacksmiths have you in the North? Why do you refuse to open up the avenues of industry to the negro?

How many colored miners have you? What avenues of employment have the Northern Republicans opened up for the negro? The truth is that Sambo is hedged about in the North by a race prejudice so domineering and universal that he is remanded to servile employments or to the work of day laborer.

Meantime his party brethren, having given him the ballot, sing psalms about human equality and consider his destiny assured. [Applause and laughter.] I say to you, let the negro have a chance to work out his own salvation. Having committed the crime of his enfranchisement long before he was prepared for it, the least you can do is to allow the South to deal with the problem, and they will solve it, vexatious and difficult though it is. It can not be dealt with properly through the medium of Crumpacker resolutions. By the way, this Crumpacker resolution has had a wonderful career. [Laughter.]

A little while ago we were told that it would soon be brought forward; then it was said that in order to fix up the quarrel over the sugar tariff the Committee on Rules had agreed to give it a day; but it was not given a day. In the final shuffle in the controversy over the sugar tariff it was kicked around this Chamber like a football, and at last it is viewed with contempt by the men who pretended to sustain it. Gentlemen, you dare not go to the country upon this issue. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. By permission of the House I append the document referred to in my remarks:

Peter Van Vlissingen, who has been one of the most active friends of the Boers in Chicago, to-day [April 18] sent to President Roosevelt the following open letter:

To His Excellency THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States.

SIR: In view of the investigation now being made to determine whether the British Government is maintaining a military camp in the vicinity of New Orleans, I desire to submit to you an argument to show that even though Governor Heard's charges should not be deemed sufficient, the Federal Government is still bound to interfere in the matter of the traffic in horses and mules from the ports of the United States for the use of the British army in the war against the South African Republics.

The premises upon which I base this argument are totally different from those assumed by Governor Heard in that I maintain that, regardless of whether the British Government is maintaining a military camp at Port Chalmette, the shipment of horses and mules from our ports is still an open violation of the treaty of Washington, by the provisions of which this Government is pledged to maintain strict neutrality as to the use of its ports, and should for that reason, if for no other, be stopped.

THREE RULES IN TREATY.

The treaty of Washington was concluded between Great Britain and the United States May 8, 1871. Article 6 of that treaty lays down three rules by which arbitrators are to be governed. The first rule relates to the equipment of war vessels intended for use against belligerents. The second rule declares:

"A neutral government is bound not to permit or suffer either belligerent to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the other, or for the purpose of renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms or the recruitment of men."

The third rule reads:

"A neutral government is bound to exercise diligence in its ports or waters and as to all persons within its jurisdiction to prevent any violation of the foregoing obligations and duties."

The opinion has been advanced that the parties to this treaty intended to lay down no new doctrine, but that these important rules, framed and adopted with so much circumstance, were in fact regarded by the contracting parties as a mere restatement of principles of international law already existing; and it is argued that as neutral ports had been used in the past for trafficking in military supplies, so might they be freely used in future. Such certainly were not the views entertained by Great Britain.

CONCLUSION OF ARTICLE 6.

Article 6 of the treaty, after laying down the above rules, concludes as follows:

"Her Britannic Majesty has commanded her high commissionersand plenipotentiaries to declare that Her Majesty's Government can not assent to the foregoing rules as a statement of principles of international law which were in force at the time when the claims mentioned in article 1 arose, but that Her Majesty's Government, in order to evince its desire of strengthening the friendly relations between the two countries and of making satisfactory provision for the future, agrees that in deciding the questions between the two countries arising out of these claims, the arbitrators should assume that Her Majesty's Government had undertaken to act upon the principles set forth in these rules. And the high contracting parties agree to observe these rules as between themselves in future and to bring them to the knowledge of other maritime powers and to invite them to accede to them."

Here is an express declaration, by Great Britain herself, that the obligations set forth in these rules are new and were no part of the body of inter national law existing when the grievances were committed, but those rules are declared to be binding in the future upon the two contracting parties, who expressly pledge themselves "to bring them to the knowledge of other maritime powers and to invite them to accede to them." In the light of this article who will venture to argue that the rules of arbitration adopted in the treaty of Washington were a mere declaration of existing principles? Great Britain expressly stipulates that she can not admit any such contention; that the rules are to be considered binding only in the future, and that other powers are to be invited to accede to these rules. Other powers would not be asked to adopt rules by which they were already governed. Is there any doubt, therefore, that the treaty of Washington was intended to and did introduce as between the contracting parties duties and obligations not already recognized as a part of the law of nations?

ENFORCED IN SPANISH WAR.

Great Britain made no scruple of asserting the terms of the treaty of Washington against this country upon the first and only occasion when our Government was at war with a foreign State. April 26, 1898, the day after war was declared between the United States and Spain, Queen Victoria issued a proclamation of neutrality, insisting in the following language upon the observance of the treaty:

"Whereas, we are resolved to insure by every lawful means in our power the due observance by our subjects, toward both the aforesaid powers, of the rules embodied in article 6, of the treaty of May 8, 1871, between us and the United States of America, which said rules are as follows:

"A neu ral government is bound * * * secondly, not to permit or suffer either belligerent to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the other or for the purpose of the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms or the recruitment of men.

"Thirdly, to exercise due diligence in its own ports and waters and as to all persons within its jurisdiction to prevent any violation of the foregoing obligations and duties."

In this proclamation Great Britain insists that her ports and waters shall not be used to abet the military activity of belligerent powers, and we now request the enforcement of this rule.

The object of the second rule of article 6 is to prohibit the use of neutral ports as a base of naval or military war against belligerents and to make it plain that the collection of military supplies is one of the uses of the port thus forbidden by the treaty. It can not be denied that horses and mules destined to be used in military operations are within the meaning of the term "military supplies" as employed in the treaty of Washington. All writers on international law agree that they are contraband of war and subject to confiscation as such. If they are contraband it can only be because they are military supplies, and both Great Britain and the United States have unequivocally put themselves on record as accepting that definition. In the treaty of December 1, 1774, between Great Britain and Holland it is expressly declared that "horses and other warlike instruments are contraband of war," and again in article 24 of the treaty of 1778 between the United States and France it is laid down that "horses, with their furniture, are contraband of war."

HORSES CONTRABAND OF WAR.

By the classification prepared by the State Department during the incumbency of Secretary John Hay and published by Secretary Long June 20, 1898, in his "Instructions to blockading vessels and cruisers" (General Orders, No. 492, paragraph 19), horses are designated as "absolutely contraband" of war. (See also House Docs., vol. 36, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, p. 60.)

If additional argument were needed to prove that horses have been considered contraband of war by the United States Government, the following instances in which they have been so classed might be made:

"In the treaty between the United States and Bolivia (Treaties and Conventions, 1889, p. 90, article 17), horses with their furniture are comprehended as contraband of war."

In the following other treaties a similar specification is made:

"Treaty between United States and Brazil (Treaties and Conventions, 1889, p. 105, article 16).

"Treaty between United States and Colombia (Treaties and Conventions, 1889, p. 186, article 17).

"Treaty between United States and Haiti (Treaties and Conventions, 1889, p. 551, article 20).

"Treaty between United States and Peru (Treaties and Conventions, 1889, p. 1191, article 18).

"Treaty between United States and Sweden and Norway (Treaties and Conventions, 1889, p. 1042, article 9)."

A belligerent may purchase iron or steel in open market, but if it presumes to assemble those materials in a neutral port for the construction or equipment of a man-of-war the terms of the treaty are violated. An emissary of the British Government may in like manner buy a horse from a ranchman on the Western prairies, but when horses and mules purchased in different parts of the country are gathered at a seaport for shipment to the field of war the belligerent power is preparing to use a port of this country "for the purpose of renewal or augmentation of military supplies." If the Executive intends to compel Great Britain to abide by the treaty which she has insisted upon our observing, it can only be done by detaining those military supplies upon our own coasts.

SAD PLIGHT FOR GOVERNMENT.

The plight of the United States Government would indeed be inglorious if, while pledged by the treaty of Washington to keep its ports neutral and guiltless of warlike activity, it were yet incapable of preventing British officers from collecting military supplies in those ports and shipping them thence to the scene of war. Such could never have been the intent of the contracting parties.

Great Britain has declared that the treaty of Washington established new rules and standards of international obligations. She has insisted upon the observance of those rules as against this country in the Spanish war. She is openly using our ports in direct contravention of those rules for the purpose of augmenting her military supplies and exterminating a brave people whose heroic struggles have awakened the deepest sympathy in the heart of every true American.

If any question be made respecting the rights of the Transvaal Republic as a sovereign belligerent power, certainly no doubt can be cast upon the complete autonomy of the Orange Free State. Can Great Britain justly regard this Government as guilty of an unfriendly act if it shall insist upon her abiding by the terms of a treaty which she has been so earnest in upholding?

I bespeak for these views your earnest consideration and early attention.

I am, sir, very respectfully, yours,

PETER VAN VLISSINGEN.

CHICAGO, April 18, 1902.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has taken up much time talking about there being garrisons in Missouri. A week or two ago it was a garrison in Louisiana they were complaining of and that was investigated at the request of the gentleman on the other side of the Chamber, and here is what the sheriff of the parish of St. Bernard, who made an investigation, writes to the governor:

ST. BERNARD, LA., February 28, 1902.

To His Excellency W. W. HEARD,
Governor of the State of Louisiana, Baton Rouge, La.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 21st received and contents noted. I beg to state that the extract from the letter of Mr. Samuel Pearson, reproduced in your letter, does not contain a correct statement of the facts existing in the parish of St. Bernard, except as to the following points:

Mules and horses have been and are now being loaded at Port Chalmette, in the parish of St. Bernard, and, as I am informed, for the British Government, either directly or indirectly, but the loading of said animals, as well as the preparing of the ships for the reception of same, is done by local men, all of whom, I believe, are citizens of the United States. In fact, I have been informed that at present the loading of said animals is being done by longshoremen of the city of New Orleans. The work, I understand, is supervised by Englishmen who may or may not be officers of the British army. Certainly there is no one there in uniform.

There is no such thing as a British post with men and soldiers established at Port Chalmette.

Those are the kind of facts we get when we hold an investigation, and it is very easy for gentlemen to get up on the floor of the House and make vague assertions.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does not the gentleman from Massachusetts consider the opinions of the sheriff as to where these men go and what for very edifying, but not very instructive?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The governor of Louisiana intrusted it to him to investigate.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am speaking now of the sheriff.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The governor of the State intrusted the sheriff with the duty of making this investigation. This is the official investigation.

Mr. COCHRAN. You would rather take what the sheriff said than what the governor said?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The governor does not say anything about the facts except in these reports. I can not read the whole of it. The governor does not contradict this in the slightest degree. He takes this as the official report, and it is inserted as a part of his report.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is the gentleman aware that pretty nearly 300,000 horses have been shipped from that port to the theater of war in South Africa?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I presume there have been a large number of them, and the more the United States can sell the belligerents in any war, the more I am pleased. That is part of the opportunity of the United States. That is a part of our long-established policy, to sell to all belligerents munitions of war.

Mr. COCHRAN. The fact that the backbone of the English army, the cavalry service, has been kept up by the United States is very pleasing to the gentleman, is it?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not say that.

Mr. COCHRAN. You did say it.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I say what we have to do is to observe the laws of the nations. If United States citizens in observing the laws of neutrality can make a profit, I am pleased, and I do not believe we ought to depart from the long-established doctrines of neutrality just because our sympathies are with one side or the other. The Administration ought to observe the laws and follow out the policy established by Jefferson and followed by every Secretary of State.

Mr. COCHRAN. You think that the policy of the country in the matter should be bargains, worship God, and catch fish.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For pay of one instructor of practical military engineering (major), in addition to pay as captain, mounted, $500.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I would not intrude myself upon this debate except for some of the statements that my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. BLACKBURN] has seen fit to make in his remarks this afternoon. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he stated to this House that no counties in North Carolina had been under negro rule. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to discuss the political effect of the Crumpacker resolution, or any political measure pending in this House. When they come up I hope to be heard upon them. But as to the statement that no county in North Carolina was under negro rule; as I stated in this House two years ago, there have been many counties in North Carolina under negro rule. There were many counties where the negro vote predominated. There were counties that had 30 negro justices of the peace. There were counties that had a great majority of the officers who were negroes.

I will give a few facts in regard to it, because I make no statement that is not strictly correct upon this question. When you gentlemen from other sections of the country appear astonished that the great white race stood shoulder to shoulder in the campaign that shook our State from center to circumference four years ago, your astonishment is because you do not and did not understand the facts there. White men believe and feel the same the world over about some things. I care not whether it is in Indiana or in Illinois or Pennsylvania or Massachusetts, a white man feels his superiority over every other creature of God's handiwork.

Mr. BLACKBURN. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to ask the gentleman if in the campaign of 1900 the Republican party from the white counties did not go down to Raleigh, in the central part of North Carolina, with 3,500 majority against the amendment, and if the Democracy did not come up from the negro belt with 60,000 in favor of it?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I will come to that. Eliminate every county that had a negro majority and our amendment was adopted in 1900 by nearly 40,000 majority. The gentleman's statement was that we had no county in North Carolina under negro rule. I deny that statement, and the gentleman knows that in New Hanover County in 1898 they had 40 justices of the peace. Was that white rule? That county had 86 negro officials. Were they elected by white people? In the counties where the negroes constitute an overwhelming majority of the population the entire control was under the negro vote. In Bertie County they had 16 negro justices of the peace. In Edgecombe County they had 31, in Craven County they had 27, in Vance County 15, in Granville 17, in Caswell 7—about 300 negro justices of the peace in North Carolina. Was that white domination? No man can say it. Craven County, in which Newbern is situated, in 1898 had 65 negro officials, among them the negro register of deeds, 3 negro deputy sheriffs, a negro coroner, a negro county commissioner, and many magistrates and school officials. And in that very campaign the Republican party in its regular convention nominated there:

A negro, I. H. Smith, for the legislature; a negro, C. C. Roach, for county treasurer; a negro, John Willis, for register of deeds; a negro, Dr. Lassiter, for coroner; a negro, Robert Moseley, for county commissioner; a negro, Judge Stanley, for constable of Newbern Township.

Gentlemen, that is the kind of domination that we had in certain parts of North Carolina. The county of New Hanover, in which is Wilmington, where my distinguished colleague [Mr. BELLAMY] resides, was cursed even with a worse situation of affairs than that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. If I had the time, I would read some of Mr. BELLAMY'S testimony in his contested-election case. But I will state that New Hanover County had a majority of the justices of the peace who were negroes; a member of the board of county commissioners, the register of deeds, a majority of the policemen, and several city aldermen in the great city of Wilmington were negroes; and in that town robbery after robbery was committed almost in nightly succession, and the good women of that town were afraid to walk the streets in the daytime unescorted by gentlemen. Were these the results of white rule? Such were the facts which made the white men of North Carolina act precisely as any other men would have acted under similar circumstances in the 1898 campaign. But I deny that armed men with red shirts traveled from one section to another of that State, as the gentleman from North Carolina charges they did in the last campaign, for the purpose of influencing the election of a Senator or Congressman. I admit that in the 1898 campaign in 8 counties out of 96 there were organized Red Shirts, but I deny that there were any such organizations anywhere in the last campaign.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is it not a fact that within the last three weeks or a month, after the negro question had been settled by the constitutional amendment according to the principles of your party, that in the county of Pasquotank a white man by the name of Willcox had been tried on the charge of murdering Nellie Cropsey, and that there were negro witnesses and two negroes on the grand jury in his trial?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, what in the world has that to do with the statements that the gentleman made, and which I tell you are not correct? I did not say that there were not negro witnesses in North Carolina, and I did not say that negroes did not serve on juries. I say that they are accorded their rights under the law the same as white men are accorded their rights. We are trying to do justice to them and to the white men. Only yesterday Dr. Sheppard, a negro from North Carolina, made a speech in the city of Washington here in which he advised the negroes to remain in the South, because the Southern white people understand them. I deny the statement that armed bands of white men with red shirts went in the last campaign from one place to another to terrify the people. It is not true.

Mr. LESSLER. Do you know that the lately revered and sainted Richard Croker, of Tammany, organized colored Democratic clubs——

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I know that colored Democratic clubs have been organized.

Mr. LESSLER (continuing). And as a reward for services——

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I do not deny that the colored men have the right to vote the Democratic ticket, and I think that were they more intelligent and patriotic they would oftener vote the Democratic ticket. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LESSLER. Do you know that as a reward for services rendered he got an assistant——

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I do not know.

Mr. LESSLER. I am trying to tell you.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. You can make a speech in your own time and charge upon Mr. Croker what you see fit. My charge is that these bloody-bones stories related to the people of the country by the gentleman from North Carolina are baseless and exist only in the imagination of Republican politicians. I live in a section of North Carolina where white men predominate and where many white men are Republicans. We have many negroes, not a majority by any means, but a large number of negro voters. Wherever you find that the negroes predominate at the ballot or where they have a large proportion of voters there you find white men standing shoulder to shoulder. Men of intelligence, responsibility, and conscience in that great State unite in one solid effort to preserve their homes and their civilization against the evils and wrongs of negro domination.

If you go to the mountain counties, from one of which my colleague [Mr. BLACKBURN] comes, where there are few negroes, you will find, as in the North, the white men divide and line up on the great national questions and sometimes, as in my colleague's district, as it was in the last campaign, a district goes Republican. But down in the eastern part of the State, where the great cotton plantations are, in some counties the negroes outnumber the whites. There you find the negroes voting solidly together, and right there you find the white men almost solidly voting together, regardless of the issues of imperialism, trusts, money, protection, or anything else. No, Mr. Chairman, I can state that North Carolina has been misrepresented throughout the length and breadth of this country. All we ask, Mr. Chairman, is, if you have any friend down there in the manufacturing business write to him for the facts and he will tell you that he votes with the whites on local and State questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one instructor of practical military engineering (major), in addition to pay as captain, mounted, $500.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I move to strike out the last word. I will not detain the House, except to reply somewhat to the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. HULL. I am going to raise the point of order if you are going to discuss anything but the bill. I waited for the gentleman for ten minutes, so he could answer a question; and it seems to me to enter upon a field of this character that the gentlemen from North Carolina could fight it out on some other bill. I must preserve the time to try to get through with this bill.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I will ask the gentleman to withhold the point of order on this particular motion. I just want to reply to some remarks made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I will leave the purely local qestion out.

Mr. HULL. I understand that, but there will be other bills that you can have opportunities on, and I have yielded the same amount of time to the other gentleman and yourself, and I hope the gentleman will not continue.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I am not going to refer to the other gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. HULL. But the gentleman is going to speak about matters which are foreign to the bill.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I do not want to make any point of order upon the gentleman's bill.

Mr. HULL. I understand; but the gentleman desires to make a speech on another subject.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I ask you to yield me five minutes, and then I will have nothing more to say.

Mr. HULL. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, in all kindness I desire to say to my friend that I did not bring up this race question and regret that it was brought up. I thought that the race question was going to be settled. The States of the South have adopted their various amendments, and I thought our section was to be left to settle those matters for itself. But so long as you gentlemen undertake to keep that question in national politics and hold it over us, and undertake to say that you will drive us and force the issue upon us, or anything like that, just so long the white men are going to unite; and just so long you will have that question in our politics. So I beg you to keep out this question.

Now, let me say a word about the social equality. When you gentlemen, like the gentleman from Massachusetts, state that we should not criticise the position of one who declares for social equality, though I may respect you, I can not indorse your position—I can not forbear to criticise you. I can not say stealing is wrong, and yet think it is right if you do it. I can not take the position that anarchy is wrong in another man, but if you are an anarchist it is all right. I can not take that position. If I regard a thing as wrong I am bound to regard him wrong who practices it. I believe social equality is wrong, and believing that, I believe the white man that encourages it or sets the example, it matters not where he is, is committing a wrong; and the higher his station the worse it is. I believe that the great principle that lies at the bottom of this social question is miscegenation or amalgamation of the races, or rather the preservation of the races. I believe if you want to keep them separate and apart, you must do like the laws of the Southern States say—you must not allow their intermarriage. If you allow intermarriage, and if they follow it, it means amalgamation; and when you amalgamate, though it may elevate the black man, it brings down the white man.

If you want to preserve to mankind the civilization of the world and to maintain the most progressive race on the face of the earth, you want to preserve the white race uncontaminated.

Now, if you believe in social equality, if you have social equality in your homes, at your table, in your parlors, it follows that there will be intermarriage, and when you have intermarriage it means amalgamation, and amalgamation means degradation of the most progressive, the most aggressive, and the most intellectual race on the face of the earth.

I care not how much Republican members of Congress may believe theoretically in social equality, how much they may defend social equality for political purposes, I do not believe there is one of them who—and if he lives in the city he has the opportunity—would invite to his home at a social function a half dozen of the most refined and educated colored women of his city.

I say he would not do it. Why? Would it be because he has not the lawful right? No; but when you propose to put the colored woman at the same table as the white woman and let them intermingle in the same parlor, that spirit of social repugnance heretofore mentioned this afternoon rises up and repels it. Why does it do it? Because down in the heart and judgment and conscience of every white man, it matters not what his political theories may be, that one little thought exists that the white man is superior to every other. Amalgamation is to be deplored, and the slightest approach to it will be resented by the white race to which the gentleman from Massachusetts and myself belong.

If you want to keep the greatest of the human races intact, pure, and progressive and aggressive, you must keep it as the Almighty himself made it, and not degrade it by contamination, if I may use the word, with the blood and brains of the inferior race. [Prolonged applause.]

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For pay of eight assistant professors (captains), in addition to pay as first lieutenants, not mounted, $4,000.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the defense this afternoon, or the attempted defense, of the Administration, in regard to the violation of the neutrality law——

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The Administration is not on trial in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to. Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JENKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13676) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLARA H. FULFORD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following change of reference; which was made by unanimous consent: The bill (S. 916) for the relief of Clara H. Fulford, from the Committee on Ways and Means to the Committee on Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BROUSSARD, for three days, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was given Mr. RYAN to print remarks on the Chinese-exclusion bill.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, requested me to present for him the report from that committee on the bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, by request of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, presents the agricultural appropriation bill, which bill be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama reserves all points of order.

STATUE OF ROCHAMBEAU.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I present the following report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, reports the following joint resolution, which the Clerk will read by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 180, authorizing the entry free of duty of a replica of the bronze statue of Rochambeau, by Ferdinand Hamar, and pedestal for the same.

The joint resolution was ordered printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

STOREKEEPERS AND GAUGERS.

Mr. PAYNE, from the same committee, also reported the bill (H. R. 12097) amending the internal-revenue laws in regard to storekeepers and gaugers; which was ordered printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

STATUE OF ROCHAMBEAU.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the House consider, as in Committee of the Whole House, joint resolution 180, just reported. It will take but a few minutes, and I think no one will object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Reserving the objection, I would like to hear the bill read.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the entry free of duty of a replica of the bronze statue of Rochambeau, by Ferdinand Hamar, and pedestal for the same.

Whereas by act of Congress approved March 3, 1901, the Joint Committee on the Library was authorized to purchase a replica of the bronze statue of Rochambeau, by Ferdinand Hamar, and pedestal for the same; and

Whereas a contract has been entered into between said committee and Jules Bœufvé, chancellor and attaché of the French embassy to the United States, dated April 30, 1901, for the purchase thereof, for the sum of $7,500, delivered in Washington, D. C., but which contract provides that said Jules Boeufvé shall not be required to pay any customs duty for the admission of said statue and pedestal at any port of the United States: Now, therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to instruct the collector of customs at the port of importation to admit to entry free of customs duties the said statue and pedestal mentioned and described in said contract.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I see no reason, Mr. Speaker, why I should object to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT ST. CHARLES, MO.

Mr. BERRY. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 12498) extending the time for completing bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo. A bill similar in character—that is, a bill meaning precisely the same thing, different in a few words—passed the Senate. Both bills mean precisely the same thing. The bill consists of only half a dozen lines, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senate bill gone to the House?

Mr. BERRY. The Senate bill has gone to the House, and I move that it be recalled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4469) extending the time for the completion of a wagon-motor bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., as provided by an act approved June 3, 1896, and as extended by the act approved January 27, 1900.

The motion was agreed to.

RED RIVER BRIDGE, AT SHREVEPORT, LA.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12867) to authorize the Shreveport Bridge and Terminal Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Red River, in the State of Louisiana, at or near Shreveport, to report it without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. BERRY. A precisely similar bill has passed the Senate. I move that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4663) to authorize the Shreveport Bridge and Terminal Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Red River, in the State of Louisiana, at or near Shreveport.

The motion was agreed to.

CENTRAL ARIZONA RAILWAY.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am authorized by the Committee on Public Lands to report back the bill (S. 4363) granting the Central Arizona Railway Company a right of way for railroad purposes through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve. This is a Senate bill, which passed both Houses, and while it was in the hands of the Executive, for some reason which is immaterial now, it was recalled by a concurrent resolution of the two Houses. On the return of the bill to the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. That committee has had the bill under consideration this morning, and I am directed to report it back in the form in which it reached the committee and request that it be returned to the President for his action.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not exactly catch the purport of the Senator's explanation. Does he mean that the President has conferred with his committee or that the committee has sent for this bill and has had it under consideration and is advising the President as to his signature of the bill, or what is it? Is it a law up to the signature of the President? In other words, has it passed both Houses?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It has.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then what have we to do with it here?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It was recalled from the Executive by a concurrent resolution of the two Houses, and came back to the Committee on Public Lands, whence it originated.

Mr. TILLMAN. What about the other House? Has the other House had it back and considered it?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not know that the other House will need to take any action upon it.

Mr. TILLMAN. After the bill has been recalled from the President can we send it back to the President without a concurrent resolution or a reenactment, or something of that kind? I am merely inquiring for information.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. My opinion is that, this being a Senate bill, we have jurisdiction of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. When a bill has been recalled from the President by a concurrent resolution, can we do anything with it unless we reenact it in both Houses? In other words, the other House has not been consulted as to whether it should be returned to the President or not?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suppose the other House, if the contention of the Senator from South Carolina is correct——

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not making any contention. I am merely making an inquiry for information.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Will the Senator allow me to finish my sentence? I was about to say that I suppose the other House, if the contention of the Senator is correct, will take due notice of the parliamentary situation and take the same action which I am now asking shall be taken here.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask the Chair to rule as to the legal status or the parliamentary status of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, the bill having been recalled by a concurrent resolution of the Senate, and having been before a committee of the Senate, that committee now reporting it with a request that it be returned to the President, it can be returned to him, and if he approve it he will send it back to the Senate and the notification of his approval will go to the House. The Chair thinks there is no difficulty about it. The bill has been reported back with the request that it be returned to the President.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the ruling of the Chair is absolutely in accordance with parliamentary law. Both Houses have passed the bill, and the Senate, after having passed it, desired to reconsider it. The House has expressed no doubt of its original action at all. The House, however, was asked to concur in the request that the bill be returned to the Senate. Both Houses having passed it, the Senate asked the House to concur in desiring that it be returned to the Senate. That has been done; and on the reconsideration by the Senate, if there is no objection, it goes back to the President for his approval. I do not understand that the House has manifested any desire of its own to reconsider it there.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask the Senator, though, to explain how the House loses touch of the bill. For instance, it has joined the Senate in a concurrent resolution asking for its recall.

Mr. HOAR. But the House——

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, unless the House reenacts the bill or expresses its approval of its return to the President it seems to me we are ignoring the House.

Mr. HOAR. The request for its return does not wipe out the previous action of both Houses. It stands as a bill that both Houses have enacted. The Senate desired to reconsider the matter, and now no action is required, except that the Senate sends it back to the President, saying that it leaves its original action to stand, and it stands.

Now, the question is whether courtesy to the House, that we asked to join us in the request, requires us to submit the bill again to that body for reconsideration. But they have not expressed any desire to reconsider their action at all. They merely consented to the request of the Senate for the recall of the bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. So far as we know they may take the same action we are about to take here to-day; and with that, of course, we have nothing to do.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the conclusion of the Chair is absolutely right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, then, the bill will be returned to the President of the United States.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 5359) granting an increase of pension to Hampton B. Farmer; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a bill (S. 5366) granting an increase of pension to Laura A. Allen; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 5367) for the relief of Charles Y. Squier; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 5368) to authorize the appointment of district court commissioners and to delineate the duties thereof; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 5369) granting an increase of pension to Charles R. Allen; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill I present the petition of Charles R. Allen for increase of pension, together with affidavits of Dr. J. Jay Boyd, John Chapman, and R. L. Hottel. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 5370) granting a pension to William McNelis; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill I present the petition of William McNelis, Captain Eliott's company, Lawrence County, Mo., Home Guards, with Pension Office letter, and affidavits of Dr. Z. C. Denney, J. A. Barker, Porter Allen, R. P. Colley, and J. J. Spilman, and numerously signed petition of neighbors. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 5371) granting an increase of pension Jonathan O. Thompson; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill I present the petition of Jonathan O. Thompson for increase of pension, with affidavits of Dr. John T. White, E. E. Conklin, and G. H. Gilliland, and letters from the Pension Office and War Department. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 5372) granting an increase of pension to Christine Lusk; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill I present the petition of Christine Lusk, with affidavits of Dr. G. Ettmueller, E. L. King, and Julius Wagner, and military record of William H. Lusk, major, Tenth Missouri Cavalry, etc. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 5373) granting a pension to Michael Connor; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, Senate bill No. 551, for the relief of Michael Connor, was introduced, together with the affidavits of Michael Connor, the claimant, Andrew Condra, James Kinsley, and one other, and they are on file now. I move that the papers on file may be withdrawn and referred to the Committee on Pensions, with the bill now introduced.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 5374) to provide for the erection of a monument in the city of Washington, D. C., in memory of those who lost their lives on the steamer Sultana, April 27, 1865; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5375) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Cory (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 5376) granting an increase of pension to Edwin M. Bradford (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5377) granting an increase of pension to John B. Eaton (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 5378) granting an increase of pension to Abiah Richards (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5379) granting a pension to Catharine M. Heaton (with accompanying papers).

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 5380) to increase the efficiency of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5381) to correct errors in dates of original appointments of Capt. James J. Hornbrook and others; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PATTERSON introduced a bill (S. 5382) for the relief of Joshua T. Reynolds; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 5383) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Atlanta, in the State of Georgia, on the first Monday in September in each year; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5384) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. E. Ann Lowry, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 5385) granting an increase of pension to George Mann; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 5386) granting an increase of pension to James Fly; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 5387) to change the terms of the circuit courts of the United States within the first circuit; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 83) directing the Secretary of War to investigate the feasibility of operating an ocean dredger on the bar at the mouth of the Columbia River, in the States of Oregon and Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE PETRIFIED FOREST NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8336) to set apart certain lands in the Territory of Arizona as a public park, to be known as the Petrified Forest National Park; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF H. V. M. MILLER.

Mr. CLAY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Hooper Alexander, administrator of the estate of H. V. M. Miller, deceased, late a Senator from the State of Georgia, $6,602.74, due him as a Senator of the United States from March 4, 1867, to July 28, 1868, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

TRANSPORTATION AND SALE OF MEAT PRODUCTS.

Mr. HARRIS. In the Fifty-first Congress the Senate appointed a committee composed of Senator VEST, Senator Plumb, and Senator Coke, who made an exhaustive report on the so-called beef trust. The supply of this document has long ago been exhausted, and in view of the present situation it has become a matter of very great interest. I therefore offer a resolution and ask to have it read and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The concurrent resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 6,000 copies of Senate Report No. 829, Fifty-first Congress, first session, with testimony; 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HOAR. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That when the Senate meets on Thursday, May 1, it shall be adjourned by the Presiding Officer until Monday, May 5, at 12 o'clock.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to be allowed to say one word about the resolution, and then to have it go over.

It was the custom of the Senate down to a very recent period to take at this season of the year an adjournment of half a week at least, or from Tuesday of one week to Monday of the next. I do not think it has ever been found that it delayed or postponed the final adjournment, and it is very convenient for various reasons. That time especially is always used to take up the carpets, with their accumulation of winter dust and dirt, and have a cleansing of the Chamber.

I will not ask to have the Senate act on the resolution now. I should like to have it go over, in order that gentlemen who have various important measures in charge may look at it and see whether it is going to interfere with their management of those measures.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over, under the rule.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that important special business has been, by unanimous consent, set for next Thursday.

Mr. HOAR. What business is that?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Executive business.

Mr. PETTUS. It is executive business which has been appointed, by general consent, to be disposed of next Thursday.

Mr. HOAR. I thought that order was for Thursday of this week.

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. BERRY. It is this week.

Mr. SCOTT. It is this week.

Mr. HOAR. My resolution applies to next week, not to this week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution has gone over under the rule.

Mr. HOAR. I should like simply to say that I wanted Senators to have full notice of it. I have spoken to several Senators who have a good deal of business to do, notably the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and they all favor it.

FOOD, ADULTERATION, ETC.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I desire to give notice that on Friday, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall submit some remarks on the pure-food bill reported by the Senate Committee on Manufactures.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 2966) for the relief of George W. King;

UNION RAILROAD STATION.

Mr. MCMILLAN. According to the notice I gave, I move to take up Senate bill 4825, to provide for a union railroad station.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The other day when the bill was up the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] objected and the bill went over on his objection. He is away to-day, but he authorized me to state that after examining the bill thoroughly he withdraws his objection and that he is in favor of the bill. I ask that the amendments which were offered the other day from the committee be considered in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment of the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 1, page 2, line 18, after the word "continuing," to strike out "along" and insert "under the west side of;" so as to read:

Thence curving to the northward, crossing over Canal street and South Capitol street, with a clearance of not less than 14 feet above the curbs thereof; thence passing under the intersection of D street with New Jersey avenue, C street SE., and B street SE. at the intersection with First street; thence continuing under the west side of First street to near E street NE.; thence curving to the eastward, crossing under the proposed circle at Massachusetts avenue to a connection with the tracks in the proposed terminal station to be built on the north side of Massachusetts avenue hereinafter provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 9, line 23, after the word "upon," to strike out "square" and insert "squares," and in line 24, after the words "seven hundred and eleven," to insert "seven hundred and twelve, and seven hundred and thirteen;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That in order to provide terminal facilities for the freight traffic of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in lieu of those which said company is now authorized to have within the area to be occupied by the passenger station and terminal described, in the act relating to it, approved February 12, 1901, the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized and empowered (in addition to the power and authority conferred upon it by the provisions of said act relating to it, approved February 12, 1901) to locate, construct, maintain, and operate tracks, switches, sheds, warehouses, other structures, and facilities necessary or proper for a freight-delivery yard and terminal in Eckington, in, over, and upon the bed of Quincy street and Third street between New York avenue and R street, and in and upon the property bounded by New York avenue, Florida avenue, Eckington place, and R street, outside the limits of the city of Washington; and also within the city of Washington in, over, and upon the bed of Second street between M and N streets and in and upon squares 711, 712, and 713, and said company is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, as provided in this act, the lands and property necessary for the additional freight facilities above mentioned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 12, line 8, after the words "Delaware avenue and," to strike out "the west 40 feet of Delaware avenue;" and in line 10, after the words "L street and," to insert "so much of the bed of Delaware avenue as lies west of a line drawn parallel with the east building line of said avenue and 40 feet westerly therefrom;" so as to read:

In the city of Washington, Ivy street, between South Capitol street and a point 220 feet east thereof, Second street NE. between N street and Delaware avenue, and between the north side of M street and the south side of L street, and so much of the bed of Delaware avenue as lies west of a line drawn parallel with the east building line of said avenue and 40 feet westerly therefrom; also all parts of streets included within the area of the terminal herein described, except H and K streets, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 20, line 24, after the words "And provided further," to strike out "That the right to institute condemnation proceedings as authorized in this section shall cease and expire two years after the date of approval of this act," and in lieu thereof to insert:

That any property owner whose land is included within such location shall have the right, within two years, to begin proceedings to compel the appropriation of said land by said company and the payment of damages in the same manner as if the proceedings had been instituted by the company under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to ask if there is a report of the committee accompanying the bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. There is a report, which has been printed for some time.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the report of the committee be read.

Mr. McMILLAN. There is both a report of the committee and a report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator withhold the request until action is had on the remaining amendment of the committee?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

The next amendment was, in section 12, page 25, line 7, after the word "thereto," to strike out "and to authorize the use of;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 12. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to lay out on the plaza provided for in this act and on the streets extending thereto, such extensions of street-railway lines as may be necessary to accommodate public traffic to and from said union station.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. McMILLAN on the 3d instant, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having considered the same, make a favorable report thereon.

The bill proposes that the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall remove its tracks from the Mall and shall unite with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in the construction of a union passenger station on the north side of Massachusetts avenue at its intersection with Delaware avenue.

The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company occupies a portion of the Mall by virtue of a grant made by the common council and the board of aldermen of the city of Washington, made on March 20, 1871, which grant was confirmed by the act of Congress entitled "An act to confirm the action of the board of aldermen and common council of the city of Washington, designating a depot site for the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, and for other purposes," approved May 21, 1872, the bill having been passed by a two-thirds vote in each the Senate and the House of Representatives. A station site south of the Mall had been granted to the road, but the people living in the neighborhood strenuously objected to a location near the schools and churches, and leading merchants petitioned Congress for a site convenient to business on Pennsylvania avenue.

During the Fifty-sixth Congress legislation was enacted enlarging the occupation of the railroad in the Mall. This action was taken only after years of effort to obtain the withdrawal of the road from public space, and because of the demand for the elimination of grade crossings and increased facilities for handling the rapidly growing traffic. In the adjustment then made, the railroad received land in the Mall in lieu of the usual cash payment of one-half the cost of track elevation.

The proposition now is that the United States shall buy, at a fair valuation, this land on which the railroad has been paying taxes for thirty years, and that the railroad shall use the money so received as a portion of the expense of building a tunnel and making connections with the proposed union station.

This proposition does not come from the railroads. They are satisfied with their present situation. When the question of improving the District of Columbia was taken up, the removal of the railroad tracks from the Mall was considered absolutely essential. The Mall was laid out to form the great approach to the Capitol, and it is impossible to conceive any adequate treatment of the capital park system without freeing the Mall from the railroad tracks and station. When this view of the situation was placed before the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, he replied, after very careful consideration, that while he did not desire any change, yet he realized that if Washington is to have the development of a capital city in the true sense of that word, the railroad must leave the Mall; and he was willing to accept any adjustment that would be fair to the stockholders whose interests he represented.

From the standpoint of economical railroad management, the proposed union station has little to recommend it. The terminal charges are increased from about 40 cents to about $1.20 per passenger car, and there will be no corresponding increase in passengers. The Baltimore and Ohio Company, which does a comparatively small passenger business, claims that it would be much better off by keeping to the C street site provided for in existing legislation, especially as contemplated change compels that road to give up its present extensive and well-located freight yards, and purchase city blocks in Eckington.

Yet a station at C street would bring a great commercial structure in close proximity to the Capitol, the approaches would be narrow and indirect, and Massachusetts avenue would be permanently disfigured by being bridged by a train shed 800 feet in length. Those ugly features which lead to the removal of the railroad from the Mall would be repeated by the C street location.

Very careful figures have been made in regard to the height at which the station should stand above the present grade of Massachusetts avenue. The architect desired the lowest possible grade, but the Engineer Commissioner of the District has figured that the grade selected (+ 56) will result in the smallest amount of damages to property. At the same time the new grade will allow the grade of North Capitol street to be raised and other like improvements to be made, and the location of the station as proposed will greatly increase property values in what has long been practically dead territory. The Massachusetts avenue site also benefits the Government Printing Office by removing the car shifting and the consequent dust and smoke.

The new station will be the finest structure of its kind in the world. Its length will be 760 feet, which is 8 feet 8 inches longer than the Capitol itself. It will be built of white marble, with the interior of marble and stone. The classical style of architecture will be used, and the building will be so located and designed that while distinctly subordinate to the Capitol it will take rank among the great public structures in Washington. The minimum cost of the station has been placed at $4,000,000, but the total cost will be nearer $5,000,000.

The station as planned is arranged for 29 tracks, with room for 7 additional tracks, thus providing for an indefinite future. The public convenience has been studied, with the result that persons arriving or departing will be accommodated without loss of time; and a private entrance is provided for use of the President of the United States and for ceremonial occasions. All street-car lines receive and discharge passengers in close proximity to the station, and ample accommodations are provided for bodies of troops and great delegations arriving or departing at inaugural times or when other large gatherings occur at the capital. In a word, every provision has been made for a great, dignified, convenient, accessible gateway to the capital of the nation..

At the same time the occupation of public space set apart by Washington to give dignity and beauty to the Capitol will be restored to public uses; and that great thoroughfare, Massachusetts avenue, which under present legislation would be disfigured by the construction of a railroad viaduct, will be left free and open. Every question relating to beauty, dignity, and convenience has received attention; and while the initial expense of a union station is large, at the same time the solution reached seems to the committee ideal in every respect.

It is proposed to pay to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company $1,500,000 for the ground in the Mall, this amount to be expended by the company as a portion of the cost of making the connection with the new union station. The tunnel under Capitol Hill alone will cost $1,642,000. The ground given up by the railroad becomes available for two public buildings, as well as for park purposes.

It is further proposed that the District of Columbia shall make suitable approaches to the new station. This is a municipal improvement; it will not increase the revenues of the railroads, but it will conduce to the convenience of the people of the District, of Government officials, and of visitors to the national capital. It is provided that the railroads shall construct so much of the plaza as lies between the building line of Massachusetts avenue and the new station; and also that they shall provide for streets on the west side of the station. The cost of these street improvements will be $620,000 for grading and paving, $500,000 or less for land, and $550,000 for damages to property due to changes of grade; in all, $1,670,000, the payment of which amount will be spread over a number of years.

It is not proposed to disturb the present legislation in regard to the elimination of grade crossings in the District of Columbia. That legislation was the result of an agitation carried on in Congress and in the District for the past twenty years. Aside from the question of the occupation of the Mall, the present laws are well adapted to secure all the results necessary to give to the District of Columbia the best possible railroad terminals. The acquisition by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company of a controlling interest in the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad makes it possible at this time to secure such a modification of the project of last year as will, when carried out, give a complete, adequate, and monumental treatment of the railroad terminals in Washington.

The entire cost to the railroads of all the changes that are to be made in the District of Columbia for the elimination of grade crossings and the construction of improved terminals amount to $6,761,651 for the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, and for the Baltimore and Ohio, $5,599,408, or a total of $12,361,059.

In addition to this amount, the District and the United States is to expend on its own property in streets and avenues $1,670,000, thus bringing the total sum of money to be spent in the District to more than $14,000,000. Of this amount the United States and the District of Columbia contribute $1,500,000 to the Baltimore and Ohio, as their share in the elimination of grade crossings along that line; and the United States pays $1,500,000 toward the elimination of grade crossings along the line of the Baltimore and Potomac. The railroad relinquishes its occupation of the Mall. There are various smaller items in the account, such as the use of lands in Garfield Park and damages to property along the line of the Baltimore and Potomac, but these are comparatively small items and do not materially affect the above statement.

There is practical unanimity among the people of the District of Columbia in favor of a union depot on the Massachusetts avenue site. Indeed, the solution of the railroad problem proposed is what the District of Columbia has been striving for during the past quarter of a century.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may be likewise read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. CULBERSON. I only asked for the reading of the report of the committee. I do not insist on the reading of the report of the District Commissioners, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well, then, let the report of the Commissioners be printed in connection with the report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the report referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The report referred to is as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 27, 1902.

SENATOR: The Commissioners have the honor to submit the following preliminary report upon Senate bill 2481, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, "To effect the relinquishment and surrender by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company of its right to use and occupy a portion of the Mall for a passenger station, and to provide for a passenger station and terminals in the city of Washington, D. C., to be used in common by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, and for other purposes."

A full report can not be submitted at this date on account of certain data as to cost of work to be done by the railroad, and of land owned by the railroad not having been obtained. All the main engineering features have been thoroughly considered and are included in this report. The full report will follow within a few days.

This bill is supplemental to the acts of Congress approved February 12, 1901, entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings in the District of Columbia, to require and authorize the construction of new terminals and tracks for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in the city of Washington, and for other purposes," and "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and enable it to relocate part of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," which acts still continue in force except as modified by this bill.

OBJECTS OF THE BILL.

The general provisions of the bill are:

First. The relinquishment by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company of the public space occupied, in accordance with existing legislation, on the Mall, on the streets north of Maryland avenue west of Eighth street, and north of Virginia avenue east of Eighth street.

Second. The construction of a union passenger station on the axis of Delaware avenue and near the north edge of Massachusetts avenue.

Third. The construction of a double-track line from the present tracks of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad at Virginia avenue and Second street SW., passing under Capitol Hill by means of a tunnel to the new station.

Fourth. The relinquishment of the proposed Baltimore and Ohio passenger station and freight stations as authorized under existing law.

Fifth. The establishment of a Baltimore and Ohio freight station in Eckington at New York avenue and Eckington place, and a second station at M, N, and Second streets NE.

Sixth. The construction of a new line for the Baltimore and Potomac

Railroad from the new station to Magruder Junction, none but passenger trains coming south of Florida avenue.

Seventh. To increase and construct new yards at Eckington place and eastward.

DESCRIPTION OF CHANGES.

Taking up the changes in detail, they are as follows:

In South Washington the main line of the Baltimore and Potomac is generally not altered. The tracks are to be removed that branch out from the main line to the present passenger station on the Mall, except that at Sixth street a freight station, with overhead crossing over that street between Virginia avenue and C street, will be built. At a point near the crossing of Second street SW. a branch line of two tracks leave the main tracks, crossing Virginia avenue with a clearance of 15 feet; First street and Delaware avenue with a clearance of 16 feet; and South Capitol street with not less than 14 feet; thence entering a tunnel just before reaching New Jersey avenue, keeping in tunnel under First street until station is reached at Massachusetts avenue. This tunnel presents no difficulties. It is not known just what the material is through which it will pass, though probably it is clay, or clay mixed with sand, as the indications from sewers and old wells are of that nature. Whether it is earth or rock, there should be no difficulty in driving and protecting the tunnel. It will pass with the rails about 55 feet below surface at Capitol Hill and under the west side of First street E. There can be no danger anticipated to the Congressional Library, nor to any private buildings. At the south edge of the plaza in front of the station the double track branches into six tracks entering the station. The west end of Ivy street is closed and the street diverted into Canal street.

The station is built on the axis of Delaware avenue at the north edge of Massachusetts avenue. In front will be an elliptical plaza about 500 feet in width along the axis of Delaware avenue and about 1,000 feet at right angles thereto. From this plaza the existing streets and avenues, as well as certain projected ones, radiate in a symmetrical manner, making the frontage of this terminal a focus for the thoroughfares leading from all parts of the city.

The terminal structure, which has a frontage of 760 feet on the plaza, has a length of 1,500 feet without a reduction of width up to a point between H and I streets; it then begins to narrow until at the south side of L street, which is the end of the terminal structure proper, it has a width of 160 feet. From that point a viaduct extends to Florida avenue, where the tracks divide into three branches, the first connecting with the Metropolitan branch of the Baltimore and Ohio, as in existing legislation; the second connecting with the Washington branch of the Baltimore and Ohio near Montello station, and the third connecting with the main line of the Baltimore and Potomac near Magruder station.

F street and G street will be closed. It is not important in the former case as Massachusetts avenue is so near, and in the latter case it is impossible to keep the street open. H street will be kept open under the railroad. I street is closed. K street will be kept open under the railroad, and similarly L and M streets. N street is already closed under existing legislation. Florida avenue will be kept open under the tracks, and New York avenue it is planned to carry over the railroad.

The Washington Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio and the Baltimore and Potomac then run north of New York avenue extended to Montana avenue.

Ninth, Twelfth, and Fifteenth streets will be carried over the railroad and Montana avenue underneath.

From Montello Station the Baltimore and Ohio continues on its present line. The Baltimore and Potomac continues between U and V streets, crossing the Reform School grounds near the District line. The projected streets that are to be kept open are Twenty-second, Twenty-fourth, Twenty-sixth, Twenty-eighth, Thirty-first, Thirty-third, and Thirty-fifth. The plan of street extension will be so altered as to accommodate itself to the changed conditions, which can be done without difficulty, as the streets have not yet been opened.

CHANGES OF STREET GRADE.

The main changes of grade, according to this bill, will be at the terminal station. At that point there will be a maximum fill of 35 feet with changes of grade as far east as Second street and as far west as New Jersey avenue, with about 23 feet fill at North Capitol street and a maximum grade of 3 per cent on Massachusetts avenue. The exact figures are shown on the map transmitted herewith.

At H street there will be a tunnel 800 feet in length and a cut of 9 feet at the east end, and no change of street grade at the west end, with a grade of approach of 4 per cent. It is proposed to have openings for air and light, and further, to require any street-car company using this street to light the tunnel. At K street the tunnel will be 430 feet long, with a cut at the east end of 12 feet and at the west end of 5.6 feet, with a grade of approach of 3 per cent. At L street the tunnel will be 160 feet, with a cut at the east end of 11 feet and at the west end of 9 feet, and a grade approach of 3.7 per cent. At M street the cut at the east end will be 15 feet and at the west end 11 feet, with a grade approach of 3 per cent. In all these streets the grades are not difficult and there will be a continuous fall from east to west. At Florida avenue the tunnel will be 160 feet long; there will be a cut of 14 feet at the east end and 15 feet at the west end, giving a depression of 9 feet below the summit of the western approach.

At New York avenue an overhead bridge is recommended, principally because to the east of the railroad and south of New York avenue the ground is high and the avenue will better serve this property if a bridge is constructed over the railroad instead of a tunnel under. The crossings of the streets farther to the east are not difficult and can readily be arranged.

The elevation of the plaza and the arrangements of street crossings have been carefully studied, and assuming the location of the station as fixed the grades agreed on are as favorable as possible to the District. The difficulty of arriving at a thoroughly satisfactory arrangement of street crossings lies in the necessity of bringing the trains from the south under the plaza and then over H street. Any further raising of the plaza would increase the fill and grades, and besides, in the opinion of the Park Commission, be injurious to the appearance of the station building.

Any lowering of the plaza would injure all the street crossings to the north of the station, as the streets would have to dip under the tracks. If the plaza were lowered about 20 feet bridges could be built over the tracks instead of carrying the streets under, but this would cause great damage to the property on these streets, and besides the crossings would, in each case, be more difficult, as there would be an up and down grade in the streets instead of a continuous grade in one direction. It would also make the grades of the Baltimore and Ohio to the north very heavy.

The subways for the streets will be lined with light brick and will have air and light shafts. In order to have as little change of grade as possible the bridges will go over in four spans, with columns in the center and at curbs, allowing 50 feet width between the curbs and 12-foot sidewalks.

LIST OF STREETS VACATED AND OF THOSE RESTORED TO PUBLIC USE.

The streets vacated and abandoned to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company under the act of February 12, 1901, are as follows:

Canal street, between South Capitol street and New Jersey avenue.

G and H streets SE., between South Capitol street and New Jersey avenue.

I street SE., between First street and South Capitol street.

South side of Virginia avenue, between Second and Four-and-a-half streets SW.

North side of Virginia avenue SW., between Four-and-a-half and Seventh streets.

South side of Maryland avenue SW., between Ninth and Tenth streets.

All of Maryland avenue SW., between Twelfth and Fourteenth streets.

Thirteenth and Thirteen-and-a-half streets SW., between D and Water streets.

E street SW., between Twelfth and Water streets.

E and F streets SW., where they cross the new railroad right of way.

D street SW., between Four-and-a-half and Sixth streets.

C street SW., between Sixth and Seventh streets.

That portion of Garfield Park lying south of the main tracks authorized by the act, as well as all the area of the Mall lying between Sixth street and a line 340 feet west thereof.

The streets vacated and abandoned to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company under the act of February 12, 1901, are as follows:

N street NE., between Second and Third streets.

Delaware avenue, between M street and Florida avenue.

E street NE., between North Capitol and First streets.

D street NE., between North Capitol and First streets.

Delaware avenue NE., between C and F streets; and all streets embraced within the area of the terminal and viaduct described in the act.

In the subdivision of Eckington, east of the right of way of the Metropolitan Branch:

All streets between T street, Florida avenue, Brentwood road, and Sixth street; also Brentwood road, between S street and Florida avenue, and R street, between Third street and the Metropolitan Branch.

Under the provisions of the pending bill the following additional streets are vacated and abandoned for railroad use:

In the city of Washington: The west 220 feet of Ivy street; Second street NE., between N street and Delaware avenue; the west 40 feet of Delaware avenue NE., between the north side of M street and the south side of L street; and all parts of streets and avenues within the area of the terminal and viaduct described in the bill, except that H street, K street, L street, M street, and Florida avenue shall be carried under the railroad through these structures, and that New York avenue extended shall be carried over them.

In Eckington: T street between the right of way of the Metropolitan Branch and the west line of Seventh street; Thomas street from the west line of Seventh street westward; Seaton street from Sixth street eastward; S street from Sixth street to the Brentwood road; Brentwood road from the south side of S street to the west side of Seventh street; Third street from the south side of R street to Florida avenue; and Quincy street throughout its length; except that T street shall be carried over the railroad by a bridge.

The streets and reservations that are granted to the railroads by the acts of February 12, 1901, and which will revert to public use under this bill, are as follows:

Delaware avenue NE., from C street to Massachusetts avenue; Massachusetts avenue within the limits of the terminal specified in those acts; E street, from North Capitol street to First street east; D street, from North Capitol street to First street east; the portion of F street from Massachusetts avenue to the west line of the terminal structure authorized by the pending bill; the area of the Mall between Sixth street and a line 340 feet west thereof, and C street SW. between Sixth and Seventh streets.

To summarize the above, the value of public property in addition to present occupation, with deductions for such as is restored to the public use, is as follows (the prices per square foot being either those used in previous reports and estimates, or, where such are not found, being arrived at by careful analogous determination):

Under the act of February 12, 1901, in relation to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, $1,374,000; in relation to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, $1,138,610; total, $2,512,610.

Under pending bill there is an occupation in common by both railroads of portions of public space, giving a total of $1,454,521. The figures relate in each case to a comparison with conditions as they exist to-day.

PROVISION FOR DAMAGES.

The principal objections that have been raised to the bill by citizens and property owners are regarding the damage to property due to change of grade. This can not be avoided, but it is thought that by concentrating the changes at the station a less permanent amount of damage is done, as it is expected that the rise in value of the property around the station will in many cases counterbalance the damage. The damages at the other streets, where there would be less advantage due to the location, have been minimized. The Commissioners have introduced an amendment allowing damages to property owners injured. This provision would take into consideration in awarding damages any increase in value due to location near the new station.

SUGGESTED CHANGES.

Some citizens of South Washington have petitioned that instead of the railroad crossing at Ninth street at existing grade and at Sixth street about 20 feet above existing grade, as required by existing legislation, the railroad tracks should be lowered so as to have the street at Ninth street at about existing grade and the railroad at Sixth street at about grade, carrying the street over by a viaduct. The object of this would be to depress the tracks around the park at Virginia and Maryland avenues, and to carry Seventh street above the railroad instead of below, on account of the less damage to business and other property in that vicinity and to better save the park. It would also be of advantage in that the view down Maryland avenue from the Capitol will be less obstructed. The citizens claim that the grades authorized by existing legislation were assumed so as to allow the railroad to get readily into the Mall.

The Commissioners do not recommend the change for the reason that Sixth street is a through street from Pennsylvania avenue south to the wharves and will probably become an important thoroughfare, while Ninth street is a short street, not passing through the Mall. The arrangement proposed by existing legislation takes Seventh street under the railroad, and while the cut will be greater than the fill suggested by the citizens of South Washington, the dip would be about the same as the rise on a bridge, as there is a slight elevation at present at Seventh street and Virginia avenue. The damage to property in that vicinity is estimated, in the report on existing legislation, as not great.

The citizens who claim to be affected most disadvantageously by the proposed legislation are those living in and around Eckington. This suburb has the railroad to the east and south and a hill to the west, over which the streets are not yet improved, and even when improved will have heavy grades. Communication with the city is only to be had along R street, between Second and Eckington place. This short piece of street has double car tracks with curves at Eckington place and Second street, making it rather difficult passing. Existing legislation provides for the final opening of Third street, but the present bill closes this street. The widening of Eckington place will help the matter somewhat, but the exit will still be inconvenient, and S and T streets should be opened and improved as soon as possible. The Eckington Citizens' Association has expressed itself as interested in the project, and while it states that the proposed legislation will damage property in Eckington, it only asks for the following concessions:

First. That the roundhouse and shops be located east of Seventh street. This is provided for in the plan submitted by the railroad companies.

Second. That the freight station be kept south of Q street, and, failing that, south of Quincy street. The former restriction does not seem practicable, as the station covers most of Q street east of Eckington place. The railroad plans do not indicate at present any extension north of Quincy street, but it is explained that the railroad may wish to extend over the whole space to the south side of R street within a short time.

The south side of R street between Third and Second streets is almost entirely built up with substantial houses; the north side of R is as yet unimproved. The north side of Quincy street, on the part opened, is built up with brick dwellings; the south side is unimproved.

Owing to the shut-in condition of Eckington it would be desirable, unless the railroad company has absolute need of this land for freight facilities in the near future, to require Quincy street to be kept open and continued to Eckington place.

Third. That there should be a stone wall 7 or 8 feet high built between Eckington and the freight yards and tracks as far north as T street. This is simply a question of expense. This fence would cost $12 per foot, or a total cost of $28,000. If the railroad extends its freight yard to the south side of R street such a fence should undoubtedly be built for the protection of dwellers on the north side of R street.

COST.

The cost will approximate as follows:

The bill provides that the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad shall receive $1,500,000. This is approximately the assumed value of the property on the Mall occupied by the railroad under existing legislation and is intended to repay the company for its relinquishment. As the Mall is to become United States property this cost is, according to the bill, to be borne by the United States.

Existing legislation requires the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to be paid the sum of $1,500,000. As the final figures of the cost of the changes required by this bill have not yet been received, it is not possible to make exact comparisons. It is probable that the cost will be less than by existing legislation, due to the Baltimore and Potomac sharing many of the expenses and to less length and height of viaduct. Besides, the Baltimore and Ohio will have a southern connection, which is very valuable. On the other hand, the cost of operation as to terminal facilities, and more especially the change of location of the freight depot, will be a continuous source of expense to the railroad.

The railroad companies are required to construct the street crossings of existing streets within the right of way, the streets thereafter, including viaducts carrying the streets, to be cared for as other streets and bridges in the District.

In cases of streets not yet opened the bill directs that the railroad companies shall pay half the cost. This is the usual method in such cases.

The money to be expended by the Government in making the changes is as follows:

The estimated cost in South Washington, according to existing legislation, was $250,000. This amount will be reduced to about $170,000, on account of work around the Mall which will not be necessary, $50,000 of which is due to damages on account of change of grade.

North of the Capitol the cost is estimated as follows:

238,943 cubic yards grading (cut to be used in fill), at 40 cents	$93,577.20
547,283 cubic yards grading (barrow to be used in fill), at 15 cents	82,092.15
25,580 linear feet curb reset, at 30 cents	7,674.00
7,500 linear feet new curb set, at $1.10	8,250.00
77,803 square yards asphalt (new and relaid), at $2	155,606.00
4,599 square yards granite block relaid, at 75 cents	3,449.25
7,851 square yards macadam relaid, at 20 cents	1,570.20
7,610 square yards gravel relaid, at 25 cents	1,902.50
49,158 square yards sidewalk to be laid, at $1	49,158.00
	403,279.30
Changes in sewers and water pipes	25,000.00
	428,279.30
Add 15 per cent for contingencies	64,241.89
Total cost of grading and paving	492,521.19

Say $500,000.

The railroad companies agree to supply earth for filling free of cost on cars at station, thus allowing this great fill to be estimated at 15 cents per cubic yard.

The asphalt pavements that are to be relaid are generally quite old, and the ones that will replace them will be a betterment to this extent. While difficult to estimate the value of this betterment, it can safely be placed at not less than $20,000.

Of the above total of $500,000 the following are directly attributable to change of grade of streets, due to elimination of grade crossings from H street, inclusive, northward:

233,943 cubic yards grading (cut to be used in fill), at 40 cents	$93,577.00
9,789 square yards grading in fill, at 15 cents	1,468.35
11,020 linear feet curb reset, at 30 cents	3,306.00
2,040 linear feet new curb, at $1.10	2,244.00
15,248 square yards asphalt, at $2	30,496.00
3,668 square yards gravel relaid, at 25 cents	916.75
7,851 square yards macadam relaid, at 20 cents	1,570.20
19,103 square yards sidewalk to be laid, at $1	19,103.00
	152,681.30
Changes in sewers and water pipes	25,000.00
	177,681.30
Add 15 per cent for contingencies	26,652.19
Total	204,333.49

Say $200,000.

The balance of the total of $500,000, or $300,000, is directly connected with the grading and paving of the plaza and streets leading thereto, itemized as follows:

537,494 cubic yards grading in fill, at 15 cents	$80,624.10
14,560 linear feet curb reset, at 30 cents	4,368.00
5,460 linear feet new curb, at $1.10	6,000.00
62,555 square yards asphalt (new and relaid), at $2	125,110.00
4,599 square yards granite block relaid, at 75 cents	3,449.25
3,943 square yards gravel relaid, at 25 cents	985.75
30,055 square yards sidewalk (new and relaid), at $1	30,055.00
	250,593.10
Add 15 per cent for contingencies	37,589.70
Total	288,187.80

The real estate to be purchased can not be valued until further figures are obtained from the railroad. The president of the Baltimore and Ohio has promised that such land required as is owned by the railroad will be given at cost price. A preliminary estimate is made of $500,000.

A map showing all property affected is submitted. The value of most of the unimproved property will probably be enhanced. While the work is going on around the plaza, and until the roads are paved, much of the improved property will be difficult of access. It will also be left below grade. In many cases it will be possible to raise the houses, but there will be considerable damage to private owners. It is impossible to estimate, even with reasonable accuracy, the amount of these damages. As far as can be estimated it will be at least $500,000.

A summary of the preliminary estimated cost is at follows:

To be paid by the United States, $1,500,000, to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad for evacuation of the Mall.

To be paid half by the District and half by the United States, $1,500,000 to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad as per act of February 12, 1901: $320,000, cost of grading and paving; $500,000, real estate to be purchased; $550,000, damage to property.

All of this will not be paid out at once. The sums to go to the railroad companies will be paid only when the work is completed, and the remainder only as the work is done.

Taking all questions into consideration, the Commissioners are of the opinion that the proposed arrangement is for the best interests of the District. The change is a great one and intended to be permanent. All grade crossings within the city limits and on all new construction are abolished. A union station is built, monumental in character and in keeping with the plans for beautifying the District. The location, while not as simple from an engineering point of view as the one on C street, has the great advantage of keeping Massachusetts avenue open, of locating the station where it will appear to the best advantage, and of being reached by direct line and wide streets from any part of the city. The cost to the District will be greater than the first-named location, but it is thought it will in the end be more satisfactory.

Provision should be made for the street cars to come to the station. The companies have submitted plans for this, but such can hardly be considered as final. As the tracks can not be put in until the grading is completed, there is no need of immediate legislation, but it may be advisable to authorize the Commissioners to make proper provision for the street-car companies to connect with the plaza.

The Commissioners return the bill with certain amendments inserted, most of which are minor and have practically all been agreed to by the railroad companies.

The following maps are submitted herewith:

A. Map showing existing and proposed terminal systems within the District.

B. Map showing public space vacated for railroad uses in the northeast section.

C. Map showing changes in street grades and property affected thereby.

Very respectfully, yours,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 9 it is proposed to insert:

And any railroad company whose tracks may or shall connect with or intersect the tracks of any of the companies hereinbefore named shall have the right to move its passenger traffic over the tracks so connected with or intersected and to use the main passenger station and terminals hereinbefore provided for upon such terms as may be agreed upon between such railroad company and the company or companies owning said tracks, station, or terminals; and in case of failure on the part of any of such companies to agree about such use, either as to terms, accommodations, schedules, or otherwise, the matters in dispute shall be submitted to the supreme court of the District of Columbia in equity term for its determination upon the petition of either party to the controversy, and jurisdiction to hear and consider such disputes and to finally adjudicate the same according to principles of equity and the very right of the matter and to enforce its orders or decrees in such respect is hereby conferred upon said supreme court.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the way I became interested in this bill is as follows: Several of my constituents, with some capitalists of Pittsburg, Pa., invested several million dollars in the construction of a railroad from Washington City to the shores of the Chesapeake Bay. That railroad is some 40 miles in length. At the terminus on the bay the company expended hundreds of thousands of dollars in the purchase of land on the shore, the erection of hotels, baths, piers, walks, and the like.

The purpose of the construction of the railroad and the buildings on the beach was to afford to the people of the city of Washington a cheap and convenient seaside summer resort, which those who could not afford to go to the Atlantic coast, to Long Branch, Saratoga, and other great and expensive watering places might reach from the city of Washington at a minimum charge.

That road was constructed; its Washington terminus is some 3 or 4 or 5 miles out, and since its construction the company has found it impossible to enter the city of Washington. Passengers from Washington desiring to visit that resort must leave the city on electric cars and transfer at the terminus of the steam road. It is practically a railroad in the air, capable of immense good to the city of Washington and its people, but rendered almost valueless by reason of its being refused ingress into the city. I was conversing several weeks ago with the manager of the road and he told me of the difficulties in that connection and mentioned the pending bill. It caused me to examine the bill and to offer this amendment.

Ordinarily, Mr. President, I understand that Senators do not interfere with the management of the District of Columbia by the Senate committee having in charge its interests and business; and were it not that I have constituents who are very deeply interested in this matter, I presume I should have followed the common practice. The examination of the bill, however, disclosed to me a measure which in most of its features is extraordinary and without a parallel in the dealing of municipalities with railroads or other corporations—a measure that grants to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company more money and more property than was ever before granted by any municipality within the limits of the United States, and, I will venture the assertion, more than was ever given to any corporation by any municipality in the world.

The result of this extreme prodigality upon the part of the Government in dealing with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is to establish a monopoly in that company of all of the passenger traffic and practically of all of the freight coming into and going out of the District of Columbia. I mention this for the purpose of showing the necessity of some such amendment as that I have offered.

The amendment does no more than break the monopoly. The bill as it is makes the District of Columbia a mere annex to the Pennsylvania Railroad. It gives to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company practically a perpetual monopoly of all the passenger and freight business to and from the District of Columbia, and unless this Congress, in connection with the passage of this bill, puts some amendment upon the measure, it will be utterly impossible, in my judgment, ever in the future to break this monopoly.

I call the attention of the Senate to the grounds upon which these tremendous grants are proposed to be made: That the city of Washington is to be improved along certain artistic and extensive lines; that it is necessary for the harmony of the design that some such depot as this should be erected; that by the last Congress certain grants and concessions were made to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, in consideration of which two depots, two terminals, were to be created in the District of Columbia, but that influences have been at work to induce the two railroad companies to coordinate and cooperate so that they will unite in the construction of a single large union depot, and in the construction of approaches thereto of a certain character. They seek to impress the inference upon the Senate that these two railway companies, as an act of grace, by way of concession to Congress, have agreed to consolidate their business in one union depot and their entrance to the city along one single approach.

The fact is, Mr. President, that by reason of the consolidation of these two great lines of railway it has become almost an imperative necessity that, instead of having two terminal depots, there should be but one union depot. It was admitted in the reports, which were printed for the information of Congress, that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company own and control both the Baltimore and Potomac and the Baltimore and Ohio railroads. That ownership did not exist when the two measures were passed in the last Congress; but in the interim the consolidation has occurred. So that, instead of being an act of grace and favor upon the part of these two corporations to unite for the construction of one union depot, it has become a necessity with those corporations that there should be but one depot.

You can not very well imagine any well-conducted railway entering any city upon two separate and distinct lines and transacting its business at two separate and distinct depots without any connecting railway tracks between them. But, under one ownership, reaching the same city, to compass the passenger and the freight traffic of the same locality and the same people, having two terminals, two sets of officers, and a duplication of all that is necessary to carry on their business, when a single system is all that is necessary, is absurd in the extreme.

So that, for one, Mr. President, I am inclined to believe that when the necessity for the consolidation of the interests of these railways in the city of Washington occurred, instead of increasing the grant to the railway companies to secure the erection of a proper depot, a concession should have been demanded of the railway companies, and the benefit should have been received by the District of Columbia and the Government, and the grant should not have been increased to the consolidating lines.

I call the attention of the Senate to what this bill grants to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. First, a cash payment of $3,000,000, most extraordinary if that were all; second, real estate in the way of streets and other public property, which is estimated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, determining the value of these streets by the value per foot of private real estate adjoining—that, in all, amounts to $4,167,131—a pure gift of real estate, and real estate that belongs to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia and to the United States.

In addition to that the Government has to expend in the purchase of land, in payment of damages to abutting real estate, and in the construction of fills an additional sum of $1,800,000, making a total cost to the Government of $8,967,131; practically a gift to a single railway corporation, and for what? To erect a depot that will stand simply to the glory and the profit of this railroad corporation.

When Congress has heretofore appropriated money for the improvement of the District of Columbia, the improvements belonged to the Government and to the people; but here, in round figures, the sum of $9,000,000 in money—cash gifts, real estate gifts, and money to be expended by the Government, of $9,000,000—all given for the benefit of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; and, except in the mere matter of ornamentation, the fact that in the city of Washington there will be a beautiful depot, a costly depot, and that these railways will enter that depot in a way that will make travel measurably safe, not an atom of benefit is to accrue to the Government by reason of this vast expenditure of money and property.

Mr. President, when you add to this vast sum of $9,000,000 the value of a perpetual franchise, a franchise in perpetuity, and the value of the monopoly to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, it means that you are giving to that company a sum of money and benefits and the value of benefits that will not fall short of $50,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator please restate that proposition? The figures $50,000,000 attracted my attention.

Mr. PATTERSON. I said that in cash gifts, in the value of real estate, in the expenditure of money by the Government to make ready the plaza, in the purchase of real estate to give to the company, and in the value of franchises, embracing, as they do, practically a perpetual monopoly, the value of the gift to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company does not fall short, if it can be estimated in money, of $50,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, the company has that franchise now, has it not?

Mr. PATTERSON. The company has a franchise to enter the city of Washington on Pennsylvania avenue or near thereto, and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company has a franchise to enter the city of Washington near the Capitol, but there is no legislation that creates in those franchises, or in connection therewith, a monopoly; and it is by reason of the right to extend their tracks through the city to a common terminus, and the exclusion of other railroad companies from entering the city of Washington, that this franchise and monopoly is of so vast a value.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me there?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think that it is to the detriment of the city of Washington to have a franchise that permits these railroad corporations to enter one station rather than two? Is the Senator not aware of the fact that this legislation will allow every railroad that enters the city to-day the use of this station?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I do not think it is a disadvantage to grant a franchise that will consolidate two terminals into one. I also understand that all the railroads—I believe they are four in number—that now enter the city of Washington will have the use of this depot.

Mr. GALLINGER. Five or six.

Mr. PATTERSON. And these railroads, Mr. President, are all practically under the control of the one high beneficiary.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. PATTERSON. But I would ask the honorable Senator from New Hampshire is the city of Washington completed? Has it its full growth? Is the city of Washington to be deprived of other railways? Is Washington, the capital of the nation, in times of war or in times of peace to be perpetually at the mercy of one single railway corporation? No matter how other railway companies may look with longing eyes toward the capital, no matter how anxious they may be to enter the city of Washington, no matter what the benefits of such railway companies might be to the business and the residents of the city of Washington, no matter what the necessity for these railways may be, the practical effect of this bill is to continue the monopoly in the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and to exclude these incoming roads, if any there be, from the limits of the District.

I take it, Mr. President, that if the city of Washington is to remain a hamlet, if its size is now fixed and determined, if the lines of railway that other municipalities are seeking for, bidding for, and longing for, are to be excluded from the city of Washington, if it is to the benefit of the Government that such shall be the case, if it is justice to the taxpayers and the property owners and the residents of the District of Columbia that that condition shall exist, then, Mr. President, this is an eminently fit and proper bill no matter what its cost may be to the Government and to the people of the District of Columbia.

Is this a monopoly? Let us see, Mr. President. The Board of Commissioners of the District have agreed upon a general system for the ornamentation and the beautifying and the laying out of the city of Washington. The system forbids the erection of unsightly depots outside of this one great depot; it forbids the laying of other lines of track along the streets or thoroughfares or across them or along or upon private property. To permit such things to be done would be to destroy the system of improvement which has been practically agreed upon; and it is by reason of that that this vast sum of money is to be expended by the District and by the Government for this new depot and the construction of the entrance for these two railways into that depot.

There is a provision in this bill for allowing other railways to enter the city of Washington. But what is the provision? They can only enter and use the tracks and use the depot, for which the Government in money and property will expend at least $9,000,000, by a contract with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company in possession, having the right to fix the terms upon which a new railway will enter the city of Washington, will make it easy for it if it suits the purpose of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, but if it is opposed, it will make its demands so onerous and burdensome that it will be impossible for the new line to enter. Thus, pretending to provide for the entrance of new railways and cutting off the appearance of a monopoly, the provisions of the bill exclude all new railways and create a monopoly as binding and as grasping as any with which a community has ever before been afflicted.

Since it is the Government that is making this grant, since it is the Government that must legislate to permit the construction of these railway lines within the city and the depot, the Government has the right, and it is the duty of the Government, to protect the public, to make the grant only upon condition that the growth of the city shall not be retarded; that the city shall not be held in the grasp of this monopoly; that the taxpayers of the city of Washington shall have some benefit arising out of the vast sums of money which they will be compelled to pay by taxation. It is eminently wrong, Mr. President, for Congress, upon which the eyes of the country are centered, to set an example to all the municipalities of this country of absolute, complete, and abject surrender to any single corporation, and to place the great capital city of the nation fettered and under the control and at the mercy of this corporation.

I take it the time may come when the District of Columbia will need more railroad accommodations than the Pennsylvania Railroad may offer. There may come a time when troops must be hurried to the capital in great number. There may come a time when munitions of war of every kind—horses, artillery, provisions—must be hurried to the capital.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think a railroad will be built when the emergency arises for the purpose of bringing munitions of war here?

Mr. PATTERSON. I have no idea, Mr. President, that any company will build a railroad simply to have it in readiness to carry arms and armies to and from the capital, but I take it that the city of Washington as a focus, as a great and a growing community, offers advantages to railway companies to come here, so that in the no very distant future, if the necessity arose, we would have several more lines of railways to do the business of the country than we will have if this bill as it is now framed shall go into effect. That is what I mean, Mr. President.

See what other cities are doing with this very railway company. The Pennsylvania Railroad wants to enter the city of New York. Reading the New York papers, I discover that it is to construct a tunnel under the river, through which its trains will be hauled from the West and the South to the heart of the great metropolis, an improvement of vast advantage to the city of New York and of vast expense. Is the city of New York giving to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company a great bonus to induce it to construct that great work which it is on the verge of constructing?

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me?

Mr. PATTERSON. Always.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suppose the Senator is familiar with the fact that New York now has a general grade-crossing act, which provides that the expense of abolishing grade crossings is to be borne 50 per cent by the railway company, 25 per cent by the municipality, and 25 per cent by the State, and New York has paid out millions of dollars to the railroads that enter that city at the present time for the abolition of grade crossings. The money appropriated in this bill is largely for that purpose in the city of Washington. Every other State, I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me, is doing the same thing.

Boston has spent a great many million dollars for that purpose. The Senator would insist that it was a gift to a railroad company. The city, desiring to improve the transportation facilities and to get rid of dangerous grade crossings, has spent fabulous sums of money for that purpose.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if it is not true that the city of Boston and the State of Massachusetts——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PETTUS in the chair). The Senator from Michigan is reminded that he must first address the Chair and secure the permission of the Senator entitled to the floor.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLAN. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if it is not true that in Massachusetts the division is 40 and 60 per cent, the State paying 40 and the railroad 60?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. McMILLAN. In Connecticut, I think, it is 50 per cent each.

Mr. LODGE. The city pays part.

Mr. McMILLAN. The city pays half and the State pays the other half.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the rule, if I may be permitted, in every city and every State of the country, and what this bill proposes to do in the city of Washington is not so generous, so far as contributions for this great public improvement are concerned, as what has been done in Boston, in New York, in Chicago, and in all the other great cities of the country, as can be readily shown.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am not familiar with the figures and therefore must accept the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire and also the statements of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, but as I understand their claim—and the Senators may correct me if I am mistaken—the municipalities to which they have referred have borne a certain proportional share of the expense of constructing either overhead railway tracks or tunnels in order that the surface of the streets might be relieved from existing impediments.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly. Take it for granted that consent is always given.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is exactly what we have done in the District of Columbia. The same principle has been acted upon here as in every State, or in the Eastern States anyway.

I will state, while I am on my feet, that the bill to which the Senator from Colorado is now addressing himself, calls for not one cent of money from the District of Columbia or the United States, except in connection with the Mall. All the improvements—the new depot, the site for the new depot, and the damages, and the stations outside for freight—are to be paid for by the railroad company, even the connections between the two railroads. So the railroad company pays under this bill $4,500,000, nearly $5,000,000 more than it would under the old bills which have been passed by Congress.

The United States and the District of Columbia pay not one dollar, but they simply improve the land in front of the station, do what is necessary in order to make a plaza, and for the fillings, which it is estimated will cost $1,800,000, one-half to be paid by the United States and one-half by the District of Columbia. They pay nothing for stations or tracks or anything like that. It is all paid by the railroad company.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like permission to ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia some questions. You do give the railroad company $3,000,000 in money, do you not?

Mr. McMILLAN. The old acts which are now in existence—the legislation having passed a year ago—give the Baltimore and Potomac a million and a half dollars in land instead of money. It was to help it to do away with grade crossings. The Congress gave the Baltimore and Ohio a million and a half for the same purpose. Now, they have the legislation for that at the present time, but the new legislation does not call upon the United States or the District of Columbia to pay one cent except to improve the land in front of the station.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is a long way around Robin Hood's barn. The United States is to pay to the consolidated company for consolidating its lines and to help it to build this new depot, $3,000,000. That is one thing which is settled. Does not the United States pay (to be paid one half by the Government and the balance to be levied on the taxpayers of the District of Columbia) $1,800,000 for property, for construction, for fills, and for damages? Is not that the estimated cost to be paid for those items?

Mr. McMILLAN. In reply to the Senator from Colorado, I will say that it will cost $1,800,000 for those improvements. That, however, has nothing to do with the operation of the railroad. It is simply to make the access by opening streets and paving streets and providing a grand plaza there suitable for such a depot. In all cases of that kind, in all cities, in the East especially, you will find that the cities provide everything outside of the station, just as we are doing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator must not lose sight of the fact that the two railroad corporations were given a grant of $3,000,000, which, under existing law, they can now claim if they should continue their terminal facilities as they are at the present time; and the Senator should also keep in mind that the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, under this bill, vacates its present location in the Mall, at the corner of Sixth street and Pennsylvania avenue, and surrenders that land to the Government, which in all probability, if it should be put on the market, would amount in value to more than $3,000,000. Certainly if that property were sold at the same rate at which property in the immediate vicinity has been sold, it is not an overestimate to say that it would amount to as much as the Government is giving, so far as the elimination of grade crossings is concerned.

Mr. PATTERSON. Recurring to the last question I propounded to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the United States and the District of Columbia are to expend $1,800,000. That is the estimated expenditure for the filling in to secure the elevation upon which the great depot is to stand, for the purchase of real estate to turn in and make a part of this great plaza by which entrance into and exit from the depot can be reached and made. That much money is not paid to the railroad company, but that much money is paid for the benefit of the depot, to make it easy of access, to make it handsome in appearance; in other words, to add to the facilities for the depot to be constructed by the railroad company and in a certain measure to help in the adornment of the city in that particular locality.

Mr. McMILLAN. Does not the Senator from Colorado believe that if these great improvements, costing millions of dollars, are made on the north side of the Capitol, eventually the District of Columbia will gain great benefit in taxation? Property there has already gone up three or four times in value, and those streets would have to be improved in the next five years anyway. So, in reality, we are simply improving the District of Columbia, improving our own property, and the benefits will come hereafter, no doubt, to some extent anyway.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to answer the questions in their order. To recur to the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire, the land occupied by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, I understand, it holds practically as a tenant at will. It never paid a dollar for it. It was Government property, a part of that which is called the Mall. The company was given the right of entrance and the right to construct and build upon it. That is all, as I understand the fact and as it has been claimed by a number of excellent lawyers.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not wonder that the Senator understands it in that way, because I so understood it until somewhat recently, but the fact is that that land went to the railroad company by a grant from the municipal government of the city of Washington, which act was confirmed by the Congress of the United States. So the railroad company owns the land absolutely. There is no doubt that the railroad received it for nothing; but if the Senator should make me a gift and I accepted it, there would be no legal reason certainly why I should return it to the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. I want to interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire to say that in twenty-five years' service here I have always understood that the railroad company held that land at the will of the Government of the United States. I believe that is the law of the case.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is manifestly mistaken about the matter, and I will quietly guarantee to the Senator that I will persuade him he is mistaken.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me ask the Senator from New Hampshire if the gift to which he refers was made by the last Congress?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not by the last Congress.

Mr. PATTERSON. How long ago was it made?

Mr. GALLINGER. A long time ago. I have forgotten when, but when the railroad took possession.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think I can make one statement——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that the chairman of the committee states it was in the year 1871.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think I can make a statement which will not be contradicted, and that is that so far as the city of Washington is concerned or the District of Columbia, it had no authority to make a grant of any portion of that real estate; that it belonged to the Government of the United States, being specially reserved to the Government.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLAN. As I understand it, the grant was given by the municipal government and confirmed by act of Congress, two-thirds of both Houses voting therefor at the time, 1872.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have never seen the confirmation. I have never even seen the grant by the District of Columbia, but I have so much faith in the common sense and prudence of the Congresses of twenty-five or thirty years ago that I express the gravest doubt about the Congress ever having granted to any railway company, as a gift or otherwise or for money, a part of what was and is to be a great garden and a site for great buildings between the Capitol and the Potomac River; and I will be pleased to see and to examine the very terms of the act of Congress to which the Senators refer.

Mr. President, to recur to a question propounded by the Senator from Michigan as to the great benefits which are to be derived by property owners and the people of the District of Columbia generally from this enterprise, there never was a demand made by a railway or other corporation upon a municipality to secure which the same claims were not made. I take it there is not a private owner of real estate within the limits of the District of Columbia who desires to erect upon his lot a ten or twelve story building who may not come to Congress with the same plea for a donation of money, because he is going to erect a structure that will add to the beauty of the capital, to the value of property, and to the business of the city.

The great scandals of the last century in the United States, Mr. President, have been the scandals in which municipal corporations were parties, in the struggle of street railway companies and steam railway companies with municipal councils to get from the city grants of franchises and donations of money to help along improvements which they claimed they desired to make for the benefit of the people. Only the other day we read in Associated Press dispatches of the tremendous scandals in the city of St. Louis, where street railway companies and other corporations had paid to the members of the city council time and time again sums of money—$100,000, $50,000, $25,000, and in one instance $250,000—for what? For franchises along the streets of the city, to build up the city, to improve the city, to give facilities to the residents and visitors for locomotion throughout the city. That was their plea, Mr. President. The corporation always confers the benefits——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would remind the Senator that a couple of years ago, I think it was, the Hon. John Wanamaker offered $2,000,000 for franchises in the city of Philadelphia which had been granted by the municipal government free. He offered to buy them and pay the cash, and I think he put a certified check in bank.

Mr. PATTERSON. Anyone who has given attention to municipal transactions will realize the nature of the dealings between the corporations and municipal councils. I venture the assertion that if you will take the stocks and bonds, or the asking price, of street railways in the city of Washington, you will find that the demand is twice or thrice what it has cost the constructors. I know in my own city we have a street railroad system for which, as I am credibly informed, $8,000,000 was refused. They never paid $3,000,000 in construction and betterments. The franchises make up the difference between the actual cost to the company and the price demanded or the value of the property by reason of the dividends that the company are able to earn.

Mr. President, people, as a rule, do not seem to comprehend franchises. The right or the monopoly in a street of a city is the property of the city and the property of the taxpayers. Pennsylvania avenue, and F street, and G street, and H street, and Massachusetts avenue are the property of the people of the city of Washington, and when Congress, or any other body, grants a monopoly of those streets to any company, for street transportation or otherwise, or to lay therein water mains or gas mains, that body is simply taking from the people their property and giving it to corporations. As well might the corporation go to the owner of a large amount of real property and say, "I propose to erect a manufacturing establishment, and you must give me a part of your property, no matter how much its value, to erect my establishment upon, because it will improve the remainder of your property." No court of justice and no people would hearken to a demand of that kind. When you grant a franchise along the streets, you are simply giving a leasehold of the streets to a monopoly, and that leasehold is worth immense sums of money to the municipality. Still such leaseholds are given away, although if they were properly and honestly administered the use of those streets would yield immense revenues to the municipality.

Let me give one illustration close at home. Only 40 miles away, in the city of Baltimore, the street railway companies pay to the city 9 per cent of their gross receipts for the right to use the streets of the city of Baltimore; and it is no more than a fair rental for those streets. Those vast sums, amounting each year to between three and four hundred thousand dollars, are used by the city of Baltimore to lessen the taxes of the people and to beautify their park system and to add to the park area. The people in different municipalities all over the country are awakening to the immense value of these franchises, which heretofore have been held as baubles to be given to the first comer who would promise to create some improvement upon the streets. The people in the different municipalities of the United States are commencing to realize that the streets belong to the people, that the streets are the property of the population, and that they are as much entitled to compensation for the use of those streets as the private property owner is entitled to compensation for the use of his town lot or his farm acres.

Now, then, what I object to in this measure is not so much the vast and magnificent gifts that are being thrown at the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, but that we give to the company a practical monopoly, the value of which must increase year by year, as the city of Washington and the business of Washington and the population of Washington constantly increase. The amendment I have offered is simply for the purpose of destroying that monopoly—to say to the railway companies of the country, "If you will construct a line to the city of Washington and you desire passenger facilities where the Government has made up its mind passenger facilities shall alone be afforded to railroad companies, you may negotiate with the owner of the depot and the tracks leading to it, and if you can not agree with the owner, then you may go to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting in equity, and ask the judge of that court to determine the terms upon which you may be permitted to enter and use the privileges, what the rental shall be per year, what the rates of charges to passengers may be," and imposing upon the company which desires the benefit of the terminal facilities such terms as the supreme court of the District of Columbia may think just and proper.

Is that wrong? Is it not the very essence, the very spirit, of equity itself? Can the Congress afford to pass a bill which leaves it in the power of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to deprive of its passenger traffic every other railway company which may desire to enter the city of Washington? For if, as is the case with the road which extends to the Chesapeake shores, new railroad companies are compelled to halt out on the boundary line of the city and to have their passengers transferred to the city over electric railway lines, what railway will build here? If this amendment shall be adopted, before long the Pennsylvania Company will be more than compensated in rentals for the expenditures that it is said it will make in constructing these approaches and this building.

I am reminded—and I want to refer to it before I close—to what is being done by other cities where they change surface trackage to elevated or underground trackage. I doubt if there is a case on record where a municipality has done more than to help bear the expense of the change, but here Congress transfers to this railway company, according to the estimate as I took it from the Saturday Evening Star, streets and other city property which aggregates in value nearly $4,800,000. And for what? To build upon that property their freight yards, their freight sheds, their freight switches, and their freight lines. When did you ever hear of a municipality, however corrupt, to secure the elevation of trackage, the change of trackage from surface to some other method, not only helping to bear the burden of the change, but also giving millions of real estate to the railway company in order that it might construct its freight yards, its freight sheds, and its coal yards—real estate given to it by the city upon which to do its freight business?

Mr. President, monopolies and perpetuities are inimical to a spirit of free government. Jefferson and all of the great fathers of our country have so declared. There is hardly a municipality of 50,000 people or more in the United States in which the people are not engaged in struggling against the encroachments of these quasi-municipal corporations and the corruption of their city councils. There are efforts being made all over this country for municipal ownership of the great public utilities, street railways, water supplies, electric lights, gas, and privileges of that character. It is a struggle that is now only in its infancy. It is necessary that that system shall ultimately prevail or else the corruption that is the curse of municipal life will continue to increase until those who live in cities will be the serfs of the corporations who own and control the councils and who own and operate and control the franchises.

What should be done by Congress with reference to this depot and this line is for Congress to build it itself. Congress should own the depot, and Congress should construct the tunnel and should construct the overhead trackways. Then it should force every railway company within the District of Columbia to do its business there and to pay to the city of Washington or to the Government fair rental and compensation for the privileges.

If it does not do that, then Congress should content itself with paying to these corporations a fair pro rata for the change of its existing tracks from surface tracks to those that will be over head or under ground. It will be impossible for members of the Committee on the District of Columbia to show wherein more than two or three million dollars will be required to make these changes. The construction of the tunnel, which is the most expensive part of the work, will cost less, as I am informed by a member of the committee, than a million and a half of dollars. Then, how about the elevated line of trackage? It certainly will cost no more. The length is limited, the height is not great, the kind of construction is not overexpensive.

But under the plea of helping to compensate the Pennsylvania Railroad for elevating its tracks in some localities and submerging the tracks in others it is proposed to give to this corporation, and at the same time enable it to establish a monopoly, $3,000,000 in money, $4,700,000 in land, and to expend $1,800,000 in order to make the depot when it is completed approachable by the public.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have here the act of May 1, 1872, which is entitled "An act to confirm the action of the board of aldermen and common council of the city of Washington designating a depot site for the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, and for other purposes;" and there occurs in it toward the end, after making some specification as to what might be done under it, this clause:

And provided further, That the United States, by act of Congress, shall have the right to repeal or modify the provisions of this act.

It therefore can not be said that any title has ever vested in the Pennsylvania road or the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad for the present site on Sixth street. They do not own it. They are merely tenants at the will of Congress. Therefore in abandoning it for this other site they give us nothing.

Mr. PATTERSON. Senators who are not lawyers are often misled by a provision at the end of acts reserving to Congress or the legislative authority the right to repeal or amend the grant. In most instances it stands simply as a proviso, and with that clause in it courts have repeatedly held that it is not within the power of the legislature making the grant to repeal or in any wise interfere with what might be termed the "contractual" part of the statute. That was the reason I desired to see the act to which the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia referred. I am told by my colleague [Mr. TELLER] that it is not a grant of title, but simply a confirmation of the right given by the legislative council of the District of Columbia to the company to construct its depot and its tracks upon this Government property.

Now, Mr. President, I will do no more than urge upon the Senate the adoption of the amendment I have offered. I am not particular about the phraseology, but some amendment should be adopted that would put it out of the power of the Pennsylvania Company to keep all competitors from entering the limits of the city, and that would give access to this trackage and the depot to other lines upon fair and just and equitable terms, taking nothing from the Pennsylvania Railway, simply making it amenable to rules of equity and law and conscience, so that the growth of the city of Washington may not be dwarfed; that a monopoly shall not continue indefinitely, and that if the taxpayers of the city of Washington are compelled to pay a couple of million dollars added to their already great burden of taxation, the tax will not be used for the purpose of closing the gates of the city of Washington to all other railways and fastening upon the people of the city a monopoly in perpetuity.

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

PAN-AMERICAN RAILWAY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, with respect to the resolution concerning a Pan-American railway adopted by the delegates of the republics represented at the Second International Conference of the American States, recently held at the City of Mexico.

I recommend an appropriation by Congress of the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the President to appoint two commissioners to visit Central and South America to carry the purpose of the resolution into effect, and to investigate and report upon the means of extending the commerce of the United States with those regions.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 22, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that only the message and accompanying typewritten matter be printed, and that they be referred, with the report, to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

STATUE OF ROCHAMBEAU.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the President of the Senate will lay before the Senate the joint resolution received from the House this morning.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 180) authorizing the entry, free of duty, of a replica of the bronze statue of Rochambeau, by Ferdinand Hamar, and pedestal for the same, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is important that action should be had upon the joint resolution promptly, and I ask that it may be placed upon its passage.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas by act of Congress approved March 3, 1901, the Joint Committee on the Library was authorized to purchase a replica of the bronze statue of Rochambeau, by Ferdinand Hamar, and pedestal for the same; and

Whereas a contract has been entered into between said committee and Jules Bœufvé, chancellor and attaché of the French embassy to the United States, dated April 30, 1901, for the purchase thereof, for the sum of $7,500, delivered in Washington, D. C., but which contract provides that said Jules Bœufvé shall not be required to pay any customs duty for the admission of said statue and pedestal at any port of the United States: Now, therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to instruct the collector of customs at the port of importation to admit to entry free of customs duties the said statue and pedestal mentioned and described in said contract.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. HOAR. Does it require an act of Congress to admit a statue of the Government?

Mr. ALDRICH. The importation was made in the name of the chancellor of the French legation, and I suppose that is the reason why the Secretary of the Treasury has decided that action by Congress is necessary to authorize the entry free of duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to temporarily laying aside the unfinished business and proceeding to the consideration of the joint resolution which has been read?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. RAWLINS addressed the Senate. After having spoken for half an hour,

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Kearns,	Pettus,
Bacon,	Elkins,	Kittredge,	Platt, N. Y.
Bate,	Foraker,	Lodge,	Quarles,
Berry,	Foster, La.	McComas,	Rawlins,
Blackburn,	Foster, Wash.	McEnery,	Scott,
Burnham,	Frye,	McMillan,	Simon,
Carmack,	Gallinger,	Mallory,	Stewart,
Clark, Mont.	Gamble,	Martin,	Teller,
Clark, Wyo.	Hawley,	Mitchell,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Heitfeld,	Money,	Warren,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Wellington.
Deboe,	Jones, Nev.	Patterson,
Dolliver,	Kean,	Perkins,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. RAWLINS resumed his speech. After having spoken for nearly an hour,

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair). Will the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. RAWLINS. With pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but it hardly seems to me that any important question of this kind should be discussed in this way. I think we ought to have the attendance of Senators or we ought to adjourn, one or the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask for a quorum?

Mr. MONEY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. LODGE. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOAR. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]. I do not know how he would vote, if present.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FOSTER of Louisiana. I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] who is absent, and I refrain from voting.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I am paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE]. I withhold my vote.

Mr. HOAR. I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]. I think he would desire me to vote on this question. So I shall vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—12.

Bate,	Culberson,	Money,	Simmons,
Berry,	Dubois,	Patterson,	Teller,
Carmack,	Heitfeld,	Rawlins,	Vest.

NAYS—22.

Bacon,	Gallinger,	Kittredge,	Platt, N. Y.
Burnham,	Hansbrough,	Lodge,	Scott,
Cullom,	Hawley,	McComas,	Wellington,
Elkins,	Hoar,	McMillan,	Wetmore.
Foster, Wash.	Kean,	Morgan,
Frye,	Kearns,	Perkins,

NOT VOTING—54.

Aldrich,	Deboe,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.
Allison,	Depew,	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,
Bailey,	Dietrich,	McCumber,	Proctor,
Bard,	Dillingham,	McEnery,	Quarles,
Beveridge,	Dolliver,	McLaurin, Miss.	Quay,
Blackburn,	Dryden,	McLaurin, S. C.	Simon,
Burrows,	Fairbanks,	Mallory,	Spooner,
Burton,	Foraker,	Martin,	Stewart,
Clapp,	Foster, La.	Mason,	Taliaferro,
Clark, Mont.	Gamble,	Millard,	Tillman,
Clark, Wyo.	Gibson,	Mitchell,	Turner,
Clay,	Hale,	Nelson,	Warren.
Cockrell,	Hanna,	Penrose,
Daniel,	Harris,	Pettus,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call of the yeas and nays discloses that there is no quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dillingham,	Heitfeld,	Platt, N. Y.
Bacon,	Dubois,	Hoar,	Quarles,
Bate,	Elkins,	Kean,	Rawlins,
Berry,	Foster, La.	Kearns,	Scott,
Burnham,	Foster, Wash.	Kittredge,	Simmons,
Burrows,	Frye,	Lodge,	Simon,
Carmack,	Gallinger,	Mallory,	Teller,
Clark, Mont.	Gamble,	Mitchell,	Vest,
Clark, Wyo.	Hanna,	Money,	Warren,
Clay,	Hansbrough,	Morgan,	Wellington,
Culberson,	Harris,	Perkins,	Wetmore.
Deboe,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, having made the motion to adjourn, I now ask to withdraw that motion, and I also ask permission to say that the motion to adjourn was not made by me to procrastinate or delay the consideration of this measure, but rather to expedite and facilitate it. It is impossible, with an empty Senate, to consider a bill of this vast importance, embracing as it does the rights, life, liberty, property, and well-being of the Filipinos generally, and also involving material and important changes in our manner of government at home. I want it understood now that the Senate must consider this bill before it is ever passed, and if a quorum is not present there will either be a call for a quorum or a motion to adjourn to bring Senators back to their places.

I want to say that I am not anxious to delay the bill by any means, but I am willing that we shall have a vote upon it whenever the Senate thinks it is ready to vote; but while the bill is before the Senate it ought to be considered by a quorum of the body.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the Senator from Mississippi think for a minute that the arguments of any Senator on the floor of this Chamber will change the vote of a single Senator upon this proposition?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I never in my life have indulged in such an unreasonable assumption as that the judgment of the Senator who has last spoken could be affected by any argument. [Laughter.] If he or any other Senator upon that side of the Chamber imagines for an instant that I am addressing an argument to them with any hope that they will be influenced by considerations of reason or justice which will be presented in behalf of ten millions of people who have no political voice in the destiny of this country, he is entirely mistaken. The argument which I address to the Senate is addressed to the country. There are 70,000,000 people who want to know the truth about this measure and the questions which are now pending before the Senate.

It is natural, Mr. President, and I am not surprised at it, that Senators upon the other side, knowing the infamy of the proposition which they propose to enact into law, skulk away and observe the consideration of it through the keyhole. An oligarchy as foul as ever disgraced the history of mankind is about to be established and continued in perpetuity by this measure. It is the most impudent despotism ever conceived for the purpose of greed, and not for humanity: its object is spoliation and plunder. Ten millions of silent, unheard, and suffering people are waiting upon its consideration; their fate hangs in the balance, and Senators, while this bill is thus under consideration, slink away and declare impudently to the American people that no argument in behalf of humanity or justice or reason will have the slightest influence upon their minds in their determination to commit this robbery and this crime. If the Senator wants to retire, he may go. I have no words to address to him or to any other Senator who assumes such an attitude upon a question so vital as the one which is now before us for consideration.

Mr. WELLINGTON. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to say a word.

Mr. RAWLINS. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I think the Senator is wrong to impute such motives as he has to many of the Senators who are here. He knows very well that at this time many of the Senators are compelled to be absent from the Chamber by reason of their committee work. I was absent from the Chamber on account of being in attendance upon the Committee on the District of Columbia, having under consideration a very important matter, and came into the Chamber when the call was made. I do not think the Senator is just in imputing such motives.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, that explanation was not necessary from the Senator from Maryland. I impute to no Senator any improper purpose, and I would not have made the remark I did except for the statement that was made from the other side, in a degree, I supposed, representing the purpose of the other side, although this bill was before us for discussion and consideration, that it was presumptuous on the part of Senators upon this side to suppose that anything which might be advanced by them would have the slightest influence upon the minds of Senators on the other side. I applied the remark to no Senator. I could not and would not impute any improper motive to Senators, many of whom I know are busily employed with other matters, and so far as I am personally concerned, I would not desire to interrupt their consideration of business which may demand their attention elsewhere.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. RAWLINS. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator, in all courtesy and kindness, if he will not withdraw the words he just used—"slink away."

Mr. RAWLINS. Did I use those words?

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that they are hardly in accordance with the rule which the Senate has just laid down for itself.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I do not recall the exact phraseology I employed. I meant only by it what was implied fairly, I think, by the statement made by the Senator who said that he went away because he could not be influenced. I may have used the words "slink away," but I will change them to "walk away," if that be more appropriate.

Mr. TELLER. Or "stay away."

Mr. RAWLINS. Or "stay away." It would be worse to say "ran away." [Laughter.] I will say "retired."

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me, I do not wish to assume the rôle of making suggestions to gentlemen about these matters of debate; and I beg the Senator's pardon if in any way I trench upon him. But I think the Senate mean, if they can, for the future to establish the rule of courtesy for the deliberations of this Chamber which would prevail in ordinary social intercourse, or certainly that which would prevail in the intercourse of diplomatic representatives of great nations, which we are in one view of our places here, the ambassadors of great States.

The phrase of the new rule is that we will not use any language imputing to any Senator conduct or motives unworthy of a Senator. While I know that in the warmth of political debate no man probably has been a greater transgressor than I have been in the past—and I have no right to lecture anybody—this is the first time that this thing has happened since that rule was adopted, and I am quite sure I shall have the earnest approval of my honorable friend from Utah, who, so far as I know, has never transgressed any rule of the Senate—certainly not, so far as I have ever heard—in endeavoring to err on the safe side of that question if he err at all.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I appreciate the high purpose of the Senator from Massachusetts. I agree with him fully that we ought to use proper diplomatic, inoffensive language, and I seek to do that. I do not recall the exact words I used, but the Senator says I used the word "slink," or "slunk." I am willing to withdraw any word that is objectionable, and substitute any appropriate equivalent which the Senator from Massachusetts may suggest. [Laughter.]

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I only want to say a word. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, according to the rule of the Senate, the committees of this body have not any business to be in session during the regular hours of the sessions of the Senate. It is no excuse for a Senator to come in here and say that he was in committee.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator apply that to conference committees? A conference committee has the right to meet at any time, and there is a conference meeting on the Chinese-exclusion bill in session which has kept three Senators away from the Chamber.

Mr. TELLER. All the absent Senators are not on conference committees.

Mr. LODGE. Three Senators are absent attending the session of the committee of conference on the Chinese-exclusion bill.

Mr. TELLER. They are still absent. Nobody complains of that; but the complaint is that Senators deliberately go out of the Chamber who have no business to do so, and sit in the cloakrooms or sit in other places and do not attend the sessions of the Senate a good part of the time. Of course we expect Senators to go to lunch, but they rarely all go to lunch at the same time. When the roll was called some time ago a number of Senators were at lunch, and they came into the Chamber.

I made the suggestion that there ought to be a quorum in attendance here, but I did not make the motion for an adjournment. I said if we could not keep a quorum present, we ought to adjourn, and thereupon another Senator made the motion to adjourn. Nobody wants to adjourn now. If I recollect aright there were present but four Senators on the other side of the Chamber when I took the floor; and they were all who had been here for some little time.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] talks about courtesy, etc. It seems to me that nothing can be more discourteous in the Senate than for the entire body of one political organization to abandon the Chamber when a discussion is going on, and a discussion which has been conducted in a proper spirit and in a proper manner by a Senator who is a member of the committee reporting the bill.

I think, in order to do the business of the Senate in a decent, orderly, and respectable manner, it is the duty of somebody to keep a quorum here, or else to move to adjourn, and hereafter I am prepared to say that unless there is a reasonable attendance here some Senator will be found to make such a call or such a motion.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, we seem to have arrived at that point in our history when there are those who affect to believe that to think is sedition and to talk is treason. "For heaven's sake, let us keep silent until the war is over!" exclaimed one of the heroes and graduates from the Philippine Islands. He would make, if he could, free speech treason, treason odious, and cart us away to the gallows. He would perhaps allow the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] the benefit of clergy on account of his sympathy for a superheated conscience. All this, if we are to believe what he says, has the approval of the President of the United States. Congress no longer has to declare war. An Otis or a Chaffee will graciously undertake to do that and relieve us of the responsibility.

A few days ago a message came to us that Malvar, the last of the insurrectos, had surrendered. On the next day it was announced that General Chaffee had made a declaration of a new war, and had dispatched an army to wage it against 2,000,000 people in the island of Mindanao. But, Mr. President, mum is the word so long as there is any disturbance anywhere within our borders or in any one of the thousand islands of the sea. The temple of Janus will never be closed; the brazen gates of war will remain forever open; and there will be no peace if only the party in power can thereby put a padlock upon our mouths and coin political capital out of the blood of our soldiers and the slaughter of unoffending peoples.

So, Mr. President, if we are to speak at all we are compelled to speak now, although the Senator in charge of this bill desires it to go through in silence, pursuant to the notion that so long as we have troubles upon our hands anywhere it is our patriotic duty to remain silent, even in respect to a measure of great importance and which is pending before the Congress for consideration.

Mr. President, there are facts which cry out for utterance. There are things which demand revelation. Across the water there are more than 10,000,000 of suffering people silent and unheard, but whose souls doubtless cry out against wrongs, cruel, unspeakable, beyond the ken of mortal language to describe. There are more than 70,000,000 people on this side of the water wanting to know the truth heretofore stifled and suppressed.

Mr. President, it seems to me that it is a time when it is a patriotic duty to give utterance to the truth, that the American people may be advised and that we may intelligently deal with the important questions which confront us.

Friends of justice, champions of liberty, have ever been jealous of the encroachment of the executive or kingly power, and those who, irrespective of consequences to themselves, have resisted its aggressions and refused to be seduced by its blandishments have passed into history with enduring and honorable fame, while those who have catered to it and sought to profit by the favors which it had to bestow have sunk into oblivion, or, if remembered, are only remembered to be despised.

What is this bill? The Senator who introduced it has not explained it; but upon its examination we will find that it continues, if it does not establish in perpetuity, a Presidential despotism—not a benevolent despotism, but a cruel, a remorseless, and a predatory despotism.

For this they have no warrant in our history or traditions. To do this they must trample under foot the precepts of our Constitution and axioms of our liberty. This bill reaches backward as well as forward. It strikes its roots into and derives its support from that excrescence upon the Army appropriation bill of 1901 known as the "Spooner amendment." The qualification of the absolute power therein conferred, adopted at the instance of the Senator from Massachusetts, by this bill is eliminated. After this bill shall have passed, this absolute power will stand forth stripped of every qualification and limitation. In order to comprehend this bill, therefore, it is necessary to read into it as a part of it that grant of absolute authority. This bill appears in some respects in disguise. Its real purpose does not in all respects appear upon its face. It is another Trojan horse stalking into the citadel of the nation filled with the arms and soldiers of a despotic power, concealing the instrumentalities of tyranny and oppression and the means of spoliation and plunder.

That provision to which I have referred reads as follows:

UNLIMITED POWER OF COMMISSION.

All military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the Philippine Islands, acquired from Spain by treaties concluded at Paris on the 10th day of December, 1898, and at Washington on the 7th day of November, 1900, shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such person and persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct, for the establishment of civil government and for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of said islands in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion: Provided, That all franchises granted under the authority hereof shall contain a reservation of the right to alter, amend, or repeal the same.

Until a permanent government shall have been established in said archipelago full reports shall be made to Congress on or before the first day of each regular session of all legislative acts and proceedings of the temporary government instituted under the provisions hereof; and full reports of the acts and doings of said government, and as to the condition of the archipelago and of its people, shall be made to the President, including all information which may be useful to the Congress in providing for a more permanent government: Provided, That no sale or lease or other disposition of the public lands or the timber thereon or the mining rights therein shall be made: And provided further, That no franchise shall be granted which is not approved by the President of the United States, and is not in his judgment clearly necessary for the immediate government of the islands and indispensable for the interest of the people thereof, and which can not, without great public mischief, be postponed until the establishment of permanent civil government; and all such franchises shall terminate one year after the establishment of such permanent civil government.

All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

I invite attention to the first section of the pending bill, which reads:

That the action of the President of the United States in creating the Philippine Commission and authorizing said Commission to exercise the powers of government to the extent and in the manner and form and subject to the regulation and control set forth in the instructions of the President to the Philippine Commision, dated April 7, 1900, and in creating the offices of civil governor and vice-governor of the Philippines, and authorizing said civil governor and vice-governor to exercise the powers of government to the extent and in the manner and form set forth in the Executive order dated June 21, 1901, and in establishing four executive departments of government in the Philippine Islands as set forth in the act of the Philippine Commission, entitled "An act providing an organization for the departments of the interior, of commerce and police, of finance and justice, and of public instruction," enacted September 6, 1901, is hereby approved, ratified, and confirmed, and until otherwise provided by law the said archipelago shall continue to be governed as thereby provided, and all laws passed hereafter by the Philippine Commission shall have an enacting clause as follows: "By authority of the United States be it enacted by the Philippine Commission."

Future appointments of civil governor, vice-governor, members of the Commission, and heads of executive departments shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The Spooner amendment provides that all civil, military, and judicial power necessary to govern the Philippine Islands shall be vested in such person and persons and be exercised in such manner as the President may direct. The persons constituting the United States Philippine Commission are such person and persons as above referred to. The first section of the bill approves the instructions of the President to the Commission and directs the Commission to impose certain rules taken from the amendments of the Constitution upon their subordinates. These rules are not limitations either upon the power of the President, the Secretary of War, or the Commission, and their authority is therefore left without qualification.

The first section also approves the act of the Philippine Commission instituting certain bureaus. Why this was selected for approval out of more than 200 acts passed by the Commission is not explained.

Future members of the Commission are to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The present members, therefore, may hold their position during life without the concurrence of the Senate.

It is not necessary to read the whole of those instructions of April 7, 1900. They have been called to the attention of the Senate; they have been read here; and it has been claimed that they constitute limitations upon the authority of the Government which has been established under the provisions of the Spooner amendment and subsequent legislation.

Mr. President, a casual examination of these instructions will disclose that they constitute no limitation whatever upon the President of the United States who, in the first instance, is clothed with this absolute power; and the President could not circumscribe by his own act the authority which we conferred upon him in the Army appropriation bill of 1901. The President himself may violate every one of the cardinal principles which are here in these instructions named, and he may grant dispensations to those who do violate them. The Secretary of War may violate every one of these cardinal rules and grant dispensations to those beneath him who may violate them. The United States Philippine Commission, when we examine these instructions to them, may violate every one of these rules, and they also may grant dispensations and confer immunity to anyone beneath them, or subject to their control, who may see fit to violate any one of these principles.

Let us see if that be not true. Passing over the mere details of instructions as to these commissioners to travel, to meet, and to organize, the immaterial incidents relating to their authority, we have this language on page 8:

Upon every division and branch of the government of the Philippines, therefore, must be imposed these inviolable rules:

That no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation; that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense; that excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted; that no person shall be put twice in jeopardy for the same offense or be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; that the right to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated; that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall exist except as a punishment for crime; that no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed; that no law shall be passed abridging the freedom of speech or of the press or of the rights of the people to peaceably assemble and petition the government for a redress of grievances; that no law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and that the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference shall forever be allowed.

Mr. President, it is enjoined upon the United States Philippine Commission to impose upon every division and branch of the government of the Philippine Islands these inviolable rules; a direction to the person and persons who are the creatures acting under the direction of the President to impose upon their subordinates these inviolable rules. It is not necessary to argue the question that these rules, these axioms of human liberty, these limitations upon the exercise of arbitrary power, are in no degree restrictions upon the President, or upon the Secretary of War, or upon the oligarchy known as the United States Philippine Commission. Any one of those agencies of government in the Philippine Islands is left with a free hand to violate every one of those cardinal rules, which are declared, as to their subordinates, to be inviolable.

Mr. President, before I shall conclude the argument in the discussion of this bill it will be shown that every one of those rules has been time and again violated from the moment of their promulgation down to the present hour. In the Philippine Islands they have deprived the people of freedom of speech and of the right of petition. The people over there are being railroaded into prison on the charge of the offense of sedition, which consists in nothing more than the publishing of the truth in relation to the administration of this very Commission, and when arraigned before the judge, who is in the exercise of this authority, and the plea is interposed that the publication is true, the judge answers that that is an aggravation of the offense. As well and clearly pointed out upon the floor of this Chamber by one of my colleagues, this treason and sedition law, which has been laid before the Senate and presented to it for its consideration, expressly denouncing as a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment publications relating to the administration of the oligarchy in the islands, nowhere makes it available to the defendant as a defense to prove that the statement in the publication is true.

Governor Taft certainly had not read this treason and sedition act; he was not present when it was passed; he did not look through it; for if he had he would not have made the statement that under the charge of crime for the violation of any one of these provisions it was open to the defendant to prove the truth of the publication.

"No person shall be compelled to be a witness against himself." It has been shown—and it is no longer controverted, because it can not with semblance of truth be controverted—that not only have the people been compelled to bear witness against themselves, but the most excruciating tortures which the invention of cruelty and tyranny in the past has been able to devise have been applied in order to extort statements to be employed for the conviction and punishment of the victim of the cruelty and to obtain information otherwise to be employed to the advantage of the oligarchy and the upholding of its authority.

"No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." Yet, under the declarations of a military dictator, unoffending citizens and, indeed, all inhabitants, without regard to age, sex, or condition, are presumed conclusively to be guilty of the highest crime known to the law, until in certain ways they establish their innocence, and upon such presumption their persons are thrown into prison and their property confiscated or destroyed. And when we come to an analysis of the only way pointed out for the poor wretch to escape the dire punishment, the drastic cruelty which is to follow in the wake, and as a result of the presumption it is developed that he must do things which to him might be and probably would be utterly impossible. He must go out and seize some of his former compatriots and drag them into the custody of the military power; he must disclose information which proves to be true and effective and valuable to the Army as to the whereabouts of persons who are being sought, or he must render active, affirmative, unequivocal service such as to demonstrate beyond all question that he was in all respects, in thought as well as in act, loyal to the government instituted under the provisions to which I have already made reference.

Mr. President, I do not intend at this juncture to go into details as to the extent to which these rules or these instructions have been violated and the extent to which they are now being violated; and violated not accidentally or in sporadic cases, but violated according to a well-established programme emanating from the highest authority in the islands, with the consent and by the direction of such person and persons as have been constituted to exercise the powers of government in those islands. Hence it is that these instructions, so ostentatiously referred to in the first section of this bill, as setting limitations upon the exercise of civil, military, and judicial power, have no vitality, no force whatsoever, and that no hand disposed to tyranny and oppression is in the slightest degree restrained by reason of any one of these instructions; that they have been and are being violated with perfect impunity; that the "person and persons" and those in control of the islands, if these things have not been done by their direction, are affording dispensation to those who have thus violated them.

Mr. President, the act of the Commission which, in addition to the instructions, is selected in the first section for approval provides:

> The department of the interior shall embrace within its executive control the bureau of health, the quarantine service of the marine hospital corps, the bureau of forestry, the bureau of mining, a bureau of agriculture, a bureau of fisheries, the weather bureau, a bureau of pagan and Mohammedan tribes, the bureau of public lands, the bureau of government laboratories, and the bureau of patents and copyrights.
>
> SEC. 2. The department of commerce and police shall have under its executive control a bureau of island and interisland transportation, the bureau of post-offices, the bureau of telegraphs, the bureau of coast and geodetic survey, a bureau of engineering and construction of public works other than public buildings, a bureau of insular constabulary, a bureau of prisons, a bureau of light-houses, a bureau of commercial and street railroad corporations and all corporations except banking.
>
> SEC. 3. The department of finance and justice shall embrace within its executive control the bureau of the insular treasury, the bureau of the insular auditor, the bureau of customs and immigration, the bureau of internal revenue, the insular cold-storage and ice plant, a bureau of banks, banking, coinage, and currency, and the bureau of justice.
> SEC. 4. The department of public instruction shall embrace under its executive control the bureau of public instruction, a bureau of public charities, public libraries, and museums, the bureau of statistics, a bureau of public records, a bureau of public printing, and a bureau of architecture and construction of public buildings.

Then this follows:

> SEC. 5. The secretaries of the departments described in the foregoing sections shall exercise the executive control therein conferred, under the general supervision of the civil governor.

Those who support this bill deemed it necessary to select this one act out of more than two hundred for special approval by act of Congress, and in this bill it is provided that the heads of each of those departments shall be appointed in the future by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

COURTS AND OFFICERS DEPENDENT.

You will see an outline here of wonderfully complicated machinery. These various departments and bureaus, covering every conceivable subject of administration, are to be supported by the taxes derived from the people of the Philippine Islands. The heads of these bureaus and all the subordinates and employees connected with them are dependent for the tenure of their office and the amount and payment of their salaries upon the United States Philippine Commission. They are subservient in all respects to the edicts and behests of that Commission. The persons now in office, so far as we are enabled to determine from an inspection of the law and from anything in the bill which we now have under consideration, are to continue to hold those offices during life; and that is true of the membership of the United States Philippine Commission. They are selected by the President, and now constitute the sole depositary of power in the islands. They are to hold their positions during life, nothing being said about good behavior. The concurrence of the Senate is only required as to future appointments, and the bill is very careful to prevent the possibility of the Senate passing upon the fitness of the persons who are, during their lives it may be, to exercise these unusual and arbitrary powers to which I have already made reference.

When we come to consider the judiciary, which is provided for in the next section, we shall find that that, too, is absolutely dependent upon the will of the United States Philippine Commission and will be subservient to its purposes. When we proceed farther, to ascertain if there be any limitations circumscribing the authority mentioned in the Spooner amendment which I have read, we look in vain. They have control of the courts. They have control of the salaries and the tenure of judges. The extent of the jurisdiction which any one of them may exercise, if any, is dependent wholly upon the action of the Commission. All property and rights—rights in the generic sense, without qualification, as distinguished from property, embracing thereby, as it does, according to every reasonable implication, the sovereignty, if any, that we acquired from Spain by the peace treaty—are by one section of the bill turned over absolutely and unqualifiedly to this oligarch, the United States Philippine Commission. To what end? To be administered, distributed, disposed of.

POWER OVER LANDS.

Mr. President, the feet of the archipelago rest near the equator. Twelve hundred miles to the north its head is bathed by the waters of the Chinese Sea. It is said there are more than 600 islands; more than 76,000,000 acres of land, embracing mountains, volcanoes, valleys, lakes, rivers, and swamps, timber resources, whatever they may be—and all these things are turned over absolutely to the control and the disposition of the United States Philippine Commission. Of the 76,000,000 acres of land to-day, according to the reports, there are but 5,000,000 acres subject to private ownership, and this bill is not content to leave that inviolable in the hands of the people who have acquired it, because there is a provision in the bill authorizing the same United States Philippine Commission to appropriate it in the exercise of the power of eminent domain and to dispose of it, to sell it, or give it away, as they may deem proper. In order to acquire it they are given authority to issue bonds in payment therefor, mortgaging the future of the islands and their people.

All these lands, every acre and every foot of land within the archipelago, including all appurtenances, all rights of every description, under the provisions of this bill are to be disposed of absolutely without limitation, according to the rules and regulations which may be enacted or prescribed by the United States Philippine Commission. I said "without limitation." Practically so. This limitation is provided in one of the sections of the bill. When the rules of the United States Philippine Commission are passed, they are to be submitted to the President, and are not to take effect until approved by him. They are to be submitted to Congress, and if not disapproved by Congress before the expiration of the next session of Congress, then they become effective and go into operation.

The despotic power conferred upon the President of the United States and the United States Philippine Commission is therefore in no degree limited with respect to the rules and regulations providing for the disposition of the public lands in the islands, except to the extent that Congress may be able, after the rules are submitted for its consideration, to disapprove of those rules within the time limited. Either House may prevent such disapproval, and delay may prevent such disapproval, although a majority of each House may so desire.

WHAT COMMISSION MAY DO.

In this cursory review of the general powers of the Commission it follows, it seems to me, without possibility of controversy, that the Commission, under the direction of the President, may declare war and make peace. The President and such person or persons as he may designate and under his direction possess all civil, judicial, and military power necessary to govern the islands. That covers and includes every conceivable power. They may declare war and make peace, because the Constitution does not restrict them. That reservation to Congress is of no potency when we step beyond the shores of the continental Republic. That is the theory of the friends and supporters of this bill.

The same oligarchy can raise armies and provide navies. It can regulate commerce among the islands and with foreign countries, with any sort of discrimination as to islands and ports. It may lay taxes to the extent of the destruction of the subjects of taxation, without justice and without uniformity, because there is no such limit circumscribing its authority. It may coin money and regulate the value thereof, and it has already set up a bureau relating to coinage and currency as well as banking. It may pass ex post facto laws and bills of attainder, working corruption of the blood to the remotest generation, with incidental confiscation and things evil to the victim of such legislation. It may take the property of one man and give it to another, and that express authority is given in the pending bill. It can destroy freedom of speech and of the press; make the thought as well as the word and the thought and word as well as the act punishable capitally.

Mr. President, I might go on and enumerate the various things that may be done under the authority which we have conferred and which will be conferred under this bill, but these are sufficient to illustrate it.

JUDICIARY.

Now, I invite attention specifically to the judiciary, because, as against encroachments of power and acts of tyranny, an independent judiciary in every country has usually been the main, the best safeguard. The second section provides:

SEC. 2. That the supreme court, courts of first instance, and municipal courts of said islands shall possess and exercise jurisdiction as heretofore provided by said Commission, subject in all matters to such alteration and amendment as may be hereafter enacted by the Commission or otherwise enacted by law; and the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court shall hereafter be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The judges of the court of first instance shall be appointed by the civil governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Philippine Commission: Provided, That the admiralty jurisdiction of the supreme court and courts of first instance shall not be changed except by act of Congress.

The judges of the supreme court are to be appointed with the concurrence of the Senate. They are, however, to have only such jurisdiction as may have been conferred upon them by the Philippine Commission, and that may be regulated, altered, and amended in any way in which the Commission may hereafter enact. While these judges are not dependent upon the Commission for the tenure of their office, they are for the amount and payment of their salaries, and they are wholly dependent upon the Commission as to the extent of the jurisdiction which they may exercise.

It will be noted that there is no appeal provided in any case in this statute from the decisions of the judges of first instance to the supreme court herein referred to. When we look to the judges of the courts of first instance, we find that they are to be appointed by the civil governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Philippine Commission. The same Commission fixes the compensation of the judges and their terms of office. The extent of their jurisdiction is to be defined by laws which the Commission is expressly authorized to enact. It is competent for the Commission to make final every decision of these judges, dependent in every way upon the Commission, allowing no appeal from their decision to the supreme court which is provided for in this act. Thus we see how absolutely dependent both these courts are upon the United States Philippine Commission.

We turn to the provision relating to appeals. There is no provision regulating appeals from the courts of first instance to the supreme court, but section 67 relates to appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States, and is as follows:

SEC. 67. That the Supreme Court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, revise, reverse, modify, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the supreme court of the Philippine Islands in all actions, cases, causes, and proceedings now pending therein or hereafter determined thereby in which the Constitution or any statute, treaty, title, right, privilege, or obligation of the United States is involved, or in causes in which the value in controversy exceeds $5,000, or in which the title or possession of real estate exceeding in value the sum of $5,000, to be ascertained by the oath of either party or of other competent witnesses, is involved or brought in question; and such final judgments or decrees may and can be reviewed, revised, reversed, modified, or affirmed by said Supreme Court of the United States on appeal or writ of error by the party aggrieved, in the same manner, under the same regulations, and by the same procedure, as far as applicable, as the final judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of the United States.

Mr. President, it will be noted that there is no jurisdiction given the Supreme Court of the United States except such as the Philippine Commission may see fit to allow to be exercised. Having absolute control of the jurisdiction of the supreme court of the islands, that Commission can cut off any case from reaching the Supreme Court of the United States which they do not wish to have come before that tribunal for determination. So we have the courts constructed upon such a plan as to be subject absolutely to the control of the United States Philippine Commission; and those courts are, therefore, no safeguard against the exercise of any power which that Commission may undertake to employ, and the victim of its oppression, if it shall practice oppression, can have no remedy except such remedy as the Commission may see fit to provide.

DISPOSAL OF LANDS.

If it is desired by the Commission to appropriate lands to subserve purposes which they may wish to subserve, and to employ the judiciary to that end, they have a subservient tool to carry out that wish. If they want to deprive of liberty any man who becomes obnoxious to them or dares to assert a policy which may be antagonistic to that which they desire, they have the courts as subservient tools for his suppression. Section 10 reads as follows:

SEC. 10. That all the property and rights which may have been acquired in the Philippine Islands by the United States under the treaty of peace with Spain, 1898, are hereby placed under the control of the government of the Philippine Islands to be administered for the benefit of the inhabitants of the islands, except as hereinafter provided.

The purpose of that is self-evident. I have already made sufficient comment upon it. The next section is as follows:

SEC. 11. That the government of the Philippines, subject to the provisions of this act and except as hereinafter provided, shall make rules and regulations for the lease, sale, or other disposition of the public lands other than timber or mineral lands, but such rules and regulations shall not go into effect or have the force of law until they have received the approval of the President, by and through the Secretary of War, and they shall also be submitted to Congress, and unless disapproved or amended by Congress at the next ensuing session after their submission they shall at the close of such session have the force and effect of law in the Philippine Islands, when they shall have received the approval of the President, as hereinbefore provided.

Those two sections put together place lands of every description within the islands subject to these rules and regulations for lease, sale, or other disposition. The power which this section confers upon the President and the Commission may be employed to any conceivable iniquitous end, depending wholly upon the honor, the disposition, or the integrity of the men who may happen to constitute the government.

We already know the ends really to which these powers are to be employed. They have been pointed out to us by the civil governor of the islands. It is designed that leases may be made to cover a period in the neighborhood of a hundred years. The nature or terms of those leases of course may be prescribed by the Commission. The tenure under which those lands may be held may be of a feudal nature. The right to hold the lands, the privilege of holding the lands, may be made dependent upon the rendition of service to the government, upon whom is conferred this authority to make leases.

In other words, the Philippine Commission is made the lord paramount of all the lands and property in the islands, and they may be leased or they may be sold or they may be otherwise disposed of without any reference to the quantity and without any reference to the purposes for which they may be used. They may be turned over to syndicates or to corporations, or it is possible they may be confined to those who may be seeking homes. But we know that the main purpose of the Commission, which seeks to have conferred upon it this power, is to dispose of those lands in large quantities, as large as 20,000 acres, if not more, to syndicates and corporations, with a view to their exploitation.

Section 12 provides:

SEC. 12. That the government of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized and empowered to enact rules and regulations and to prescribe terms and conditions to enable persons to perfect their title to public lands not exceeding 160 acres.

The following section provides:

SEC. 13. That pending the preparation and until the adoption of rules and regulations as provided in section 8 the government of the Philippines is hereby authorized and empowered, on such terms as it may prescribe, to lease, let, and demise to actual occupants and settlers and others, for a term of not more than five years, such parts and portions of the public domain other than timber and mineral lands of the United States in the Philippine Islands as it may deem wise, not exceeding 160 acres, or its equivalent in hectares, to any one person, nor more than 5,000 acres to any corporation or association of persons.

This is a temporary authority, to be exercised by the commission, without the necessity of any approval by the President, until the general rules and regulations which are prescribed in section 11 have gone into effect.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. As I understand the Senator, it is his understanding that as soon as the rules and regulations provided for in section 11 have been made the provisions of this entire section will become dead?

Mr. RAWLINS. That is my understanding of the meaning of this bill. The provision to which I have made reference last is simply a temporary provision.

Mr. CULBERSON. What section?

Mr. RAWLINS. Section 13 is a temporary provision to be employed by the government of the Philippines only until the rules and regulations provided for in section 11 go into effect. Of course the limitations contained in section 13 do not apply to the rules and regulations which are referred to in section 11 of this bill.

I have offered an amendment striking out the sections to which I have now made reference, and in lieu thereof I propose to extend over the islands the public-land laws of the United States, giving to the Commission or to the legislature of the islands, whatever it may be, authority to prescribe rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of the public-land laws of the United States, for the purpose of carrying them into effect. That amendment, if adopted, will preserve the lands in the islands to actual home seekers. No one could acquire title thereto to a greater extent than 160 acres, and he could only acquire it under the provisions of our homestead laws. Natives who are in actual possession of lands, occupying them as homes, under the provisions of those laws would without expense to themselves be able to acquire title. No government could thus use the lands for the purpose of speculation or spoliation or to bestow them upon syndicates or to put them in dead hands.

Mr. President, those islands belong to the people who now inhabit them and who seek to maintain their homes there. They are the legitimate heritage of them and them alone.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. RAWLINS. With pleasure.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if it was not the testimony of General MacArthur that, speaking in general terms, with the exception of railway franchises, every other consideration looking to the improvement of the Philippine Islands ought to be postponed to such time as the Filipinos themselves should take charge of the government of the archipelago; that is to say, the Government of the United States ought not to attempt or permit anything like an exploitation of the islands, but that with the exception of granting railway franchises all matters looking to an improvement of the islands should be postponed until the Filipinos themselves could take charge of the government?

Mr. RAWLINS. That was certainly the purport of the testimony of General MacArthur, but it is of course antagonistic to the recommendations of the United States Philippine Commission. It is also in harmony, in a measure at least, with the testimony of General Otis so far as he testified upon that subject. The military commanders of the islands have disapproved of the policy of retaining them for the purposes of exploitation or spoliation. They (and it seems to me every reasonable man must concur with them in that regard) consider that it would be disastrous to the peace and to the welfare of the islands to have the lands there disposed of in large tracts to syndicates and corporations. Indeed, we have a most apt illustration of that in the condition of affairs which has heretofore prevailed there in regard to the friars' lands. There are, in round numbers, about 30 religious haciendas or tracts of land, amounting to the neighborhood of 60,000 acres each, belonging to the different orders of friars. Of course those orders are in reality nothing but corporations, and just like any other corporation possessing a similar tract of land they hold it for mercenary ends, just as any corporation seeking to exploit lands would hold them.

Mr. MONEY. With the permission of the Senator from Utah, I should like to interrupt him for information.

Mr. RAWLINS. With pleasure.

Mr. MONEY. Before he passes from the subject of grants by the Philippine Commission to companies or corporations, to use his very expressive language, to exploit these lands, do I understand him to mean that those lands are granted forever, irrevocably, in fee, or that they are limited for a term of years? What is the nature of the grant of lands made to corporations or companies?

Mr. RAWLINS. By the Philippine government?

Mr. MONEY. By the Philippine Commission.

Mr. RAWLINS. The present bill, as I have pointed out, authorizes the Commission to make rules and regulations for the lease, sale, or other disposition of the lands. As we may infer, the purpose of those who will exercise this power, as manifested in the testimony of Governor Taft, is to grant the lands in large tracts, at least as large as 20,000 acres if not larger, to corporations, to hold in perpetuity.

Mr. MONEY. Is this power to grant on the part of the Commission without any review from any other power?

Mr. RAWLINS. Of course the authority conferred is primarily to the Commission to make the rules, and they may make them just as they desire. Those rules, before they go into effect, must have the approval of the President, but with the concurrence of the President it is in the power of the Commission to do just what Governor Taft in his testimony said the Commission desire to do, and that is to bring about the development of the islands by granting the lands in large tracts to corporations who would employ large capital for their improvement and development; and as the Executive authority has approved that policy and has in every act upheld the recommendation, we have every reason to believe that as soon as this bill becomes a law the United States Philippine Commission will enact rules for the disposition of the lands in large tracts of 5,000, 10,000, 20,000, or 50,000 acres, for aught we know, to be held in perpetuity for the end which I have described.

Mr. MONEY. I will make a still further inquiry, if the Senator will permit me. I understand, then, from what the Senator says, that the Philippine Commission have the power to dispose of the public lands of the United States in the Philippine Archipelago, which power is denied to any other except the political power of the Government, the Congress of the United States, within the continental limits of the United States; in other words, that that Commission enjoys in the Philippine Islands a power which is enjoyed alone by the Congress of the United States within the continental borders of the United States. Is that the understanding of the Senator?

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes. Mr. President, in answer to the pertinent inquiry of the Senator, the authority of the Philippine Commission under the provisions of this bill is far in excess of that which has ever been exercised, at least by Congress, and, in fact, is coextensive with any power that Congress might by possibility exercise in regard to the disposal of the public lands in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to ask again, if I am not trespassing too much upon the Senator's usual good nature——

Mr. RAWLINS. Not at all.

Mr. MONEY. I am asking for information now, because I do not understand the bill. I should like to ask the Senator if there is any doubt in his mind as to the character of the proprietorship of the United States in the public lands within the Philippine Archipelago, whether we are not subrogated, I might say, to the rights of Spain in sovereignty there, and if the public lands in the archipelago are not as much the public lands of the United States as are the public lands in the State of Utah?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, if we acquired, under the Paris treaty, the Philippine Islands we acquired there such title to the public lands as Spain then possessed, which included practically all the lands in the archipelago—about 76,000,000 acres, with the exception of about 5,000,000 acres which were at the time the subject of private ownership. It was for these lands that we paid the $20,000,000. That is practically what we obtained, with the incidental benefits of war.

Mr. MONEY. Then, Mr. President, I understand from the Senator that we confirm to the Philippine Commission a power granted to the President to dispose of the public lands of the United States, which power alone belongs to the Congress of the United States, and if so it can not be delegated to the Commission, nor conferred by the President upon that Commission, constitutionally.

Mr. RAWLINS. That is undoubtedly true. The limitation of the Spooner amendment, adopted at the instance of the Senator from Massachusetts, forbade the Commission making disposals of these public lands, but that limitation will be abrogated if this bill passes in its present form. The bill purports to confer on the Philippine Commission, with the approval of the President, subject to the disapproval of Congress at the next session—assuming that Congress can not disapprove this legislation unless they do it at an ensuing session—the power to make rules and regulations for the lease, sale, or other disposal of all lands not subject to private ownership which we acquired under the treaty with Spain.

Not only may they dispose of the lands; they may grant them according to any tenure they please—for life, in fee, or in perpetuity. They may exact what consideration they please. They may compel those who become their tenants, they being lords paramount, to render feudal service in return for the privilege of possessing and cultivating the soil. There is the possibility of the power which is hereby conferred to make them villeins, an incident of and attached to the soil of the lands. They can require the people who occupy those lands and derive their sustenance from them to obey any behest or edict which that Commission shall issue. Any money or any consideration which may be derived upon the lease, sale, or other disposal of these lands does not go into the Treasury of the United States, I would advise the Senator from Mississippi. They are not to be the subject of an appropriation of the Congress for the benefit of the people of the United States. They are not to be the subject of the appropriation of the people of the Philippine Islands. They are to be subject to the absolute disposal of the oligarchy known as the President and the United States Philippine Commission.

Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] made inquiry as to the purpose of the Commission in regard to the disposition of the public lands in the Philippines. I can not answer that any better than to read briefly from the testimony of Governor Taft, on page 184 of the hearings. Governor Taft said:

I am not at all sure that 5,000 acres is large enough. We did not form any definite view. There is a company represented by Mr. King, I think it is, of San Francisco—I call it a company; he said he had a number of very wealthy men interested with him—which sent him to Mindanao to look over the field. He went there, and he stated to me that the company which he expected to form intended to establish headquarters at Parangparang, in Mindanao, and to establish direct steam communication between this part of Mindanao and San Francisco, and that in order to carry out the plan they had it would be necessary that they acquire quite large tracts of land. I do not think he mentioned the amount, but I think he had in his plan somewhere between 5,000 and 10,000 acres.

Mr. President, a further review of the testimony of Governor Taft will indicate a purpose on the part of the Commission, at least, to dispose of these lands, if authority be given, in very large quantities, and, I think, in one place Governor Taft says that 20,000 acres might not be excessive.

One of the evils in the islands is the large holdings of land by what are known as the friars. These holdings each amount on the average to about 60,000 acres of land, held by corporations; and authority is given in this bill to appropriate those lands in exercise of the power of eminent domain. The effect of the transaction will be, if it is consummated, to take lands now held in large quantities from one corporation in order to sell them in equal quantities to another corporation.

The mischief which now exists in the islands does not consist particularly in the character of the individuals who compose those organizations, but in the fact that they are corporations or syndicates holding large tracts of land and excluding all the people from proprietorship in those lands. They are a constant source of irritation. The persons holding them desire to exploit them to the greatest possible advantage, and they naturally desire to obtain the cheapest labor which will yield to them the largest amount of product with the lowest amount of outlay. That same mischief——

Mr. HOAR. How many acres did the Senator say was the amount of these lands?

Mr. RAWLINS. Held by the friars?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator stated the number of acres as 60,000, as I understood him, and I thought he had made a mistake.

Mr. RAWLINS. Those lands are held in tracts of about 60,000 acres each, and there are about 30 such tracts. There are 30 religious centers, and the aggregate of the land is something in the neighborhood of half a million acres.

TAKING FROM ONE TO GIVE TO ANOTHER.

Mr. President, it is an unusual authority, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who is a distinguished lawyer, will, I think, at once recognize, to undertake to appropriate in the exercise of the power of eminent domain the lands or property belonging to one corporation in order to transfer the same lands to another corporation. In this case the power is to be exercised by the application of a sort of religious test. If these lands are held by a corporation composed of Catholics of a certain order, they are to be the subject of condemnation, to be turned over by the process of eminent domain into the hands of another corporation, composed perhaps of Protestants, or people of mixed religion, or no religion.

It is scarcely a public purpose, within the usual rule established at least by the courts of this country, to condemn one man's land in order to sell it or dispose of it to another. That is not a public purpose. This provision in relation to the friars' land, this attempted exercise of the power of eminent domain to appropriate the property of one individual in order to give it to another, is fundamentally vicious. It is in effect taking the property of one individual without his consent, not for a public use, but in order to bestow it upon another individual in order to devote it to a private use. Under our Constitution that could not be done. If there is no Constitution in the Philippine Islands perhaps there is no constitutional difficulty in the way of thus appropriating property of one individual in order to give it to another.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. RAWLINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is more familiar with this matter than I am, but I want to ask him if he is exactly correct in stating that the purpose is to bestow these lands, or give the use of them, to some other corporation? Is not the sole purpose to take the title of the lands out of one corporation regardless of the question as to who will get the benefit of them? In proceedings of condemnation the object in view is to give a certain privilege or interest in land to some party who is to make a certain use of it—under our system a public use—but in this case, as I understand it, the motive is not to give the advantage of the lands to some other particular person, but to see that they are gotten away from a certain corporation, which is distasteful to some people. Is not that true? In other words, there is no particular object that is in view in the change of ownership; it is not for the purpose of benefiting somebody else who is going to make a certain use of them—build a railroad, for instance, or engage in any other work—but the purpose, as I understand it, is to get the title of the lands out of the friars. Is not that the main and controlling motive?

Mr. RAWLINS. Well, Mr. President, I am unable to give to the Senator the motive otherwise than appears from the provisions of the bill, and the effect of the bill, if it shall become a law, will be that if the lands of these religious orders are condemned and appropriated in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, the title will vest in the government of the Philippine Islands, in which government the titles to all other public lands in the islands are vested under the provisions of this bill. I mean the title in the sense of having the power of absolute control and disposition.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. RAWLINS. Now, if the Senator will permit me, these lands when thus condemned, these religious orders thus being deprived of them, will become a part of the public lands of the islands. Then the Philippine Commission, if it carries into effect the purpose as expressed by Governor Taft, and which is embodied in the report of the Commission, in the exercise of the authority which this bill is designed to confer, will grant those lands by sale to syndicates or corporations in large tracts for purposes of exploitation, Governor Taft saying that 5,000 acres was too limited a quantity, and mentioned one concern which desired at least 10,000 acres, and in another place indicating that 20,000 acres would not be excessive. So that the practical effect, if this policy be carried out, will be to issue bonds, to incur this indebtedness, and to appropriate, against the will of these religious orders, in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, this more than half a million acres of land and immediately, under rules to be prescribed by the Philippine Commission, dispose of it in tracts ranging from 5,000 to 20,000 acres to syndicates or corporations in perpetuity.

I do not believe in the policy of keeping lands tied up in mortmain, or in dead hands, under the control of syndicates or corporations. The policy of the English law has ever been in contravention of that. Evil and mischief necessarily grow out of such a policy; but yet, if the mischief is limited to the fact that the lands are held in large quantities by religious corporations or organizations, no more mischief will follow than if they be held by a secular corporation.

This bill proposes to take the lands away from the friars and vest the title to them in alien landowners, operating in the form of syndicates, equally desirous of exploitation, and gaining the largest realization of the production of the lands with the cheapest possible labor. As a result of this you will find in a little while that the disturbance and trouble in the islands, growing out of such large holdings of land, will be as prevalent when the lands are held by one corporation as by another.

Mr. President, this proposition to exercise the power of eminent domain is not to condemn those lands to any specific public purpose. There is no pretense that any such purpose is in view. It is not for a highway. It is not for a public common. It is only to the end that title may be acquired, to be retransferred to private interests. Thus we establish, if this is to be carried into effect, the vicious principle of exercising this power to take property from one individual and give it to another individual.

THE PROPER REMEDY.

But we ought to reach this mischief, and some of the Filipinos who have been questioned have suggested a method to solve this trouble, which, in my opinion, is entirely worthy of the consideration of the Senate. It is founded upon well-established precedents and can be exercised without any violation of the fundamental principles of justice and right.

These religious orders are corporations, deriving their charters under the laws of Spain, and it is provided in those laws that whenever these organizations are in such a position that they are unable to devote the lands to the ends to which they are consecrated, it is competent for the civil authorities to dissolve the corporation and provide for a reappropriation of the land in accordance with the old doctrine of cy pres; that is, where lands are dedicated to a charitable use, to a particular use, and it becomes unlawful, or it becomes contrary to the public policy, it is then competent for the civil authorities to enact a law authorizing a court, some judicial tribunal, to make application of the charity to some lawful and legitimate end nearest akin to that to which it was originally dedicated. These religious orders, as the facts develop, are no longer able to devote their lands to the charitable and religious purposes to which they were originally consecrated, and it is perfectly competent for them to be reappropriated.

That has been done in my own State, where a religious organization was claimed to hold real estate in contravention of public policy. Proceedings were instituted declaring its escheat, and for its new application under this doctrine to ends which were legitimate and lawful, and not in contravention of public policy. That proceeding was sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States. It is competent for us to institute a proceeding to terminate the right of these religious orders in the Philippine Islands to hold property in large tracts, upon the ground that it is a menace to the welfare and peace of the islands. But we ought not to exercise that power for the purpose of taking lands from one hand in order to bestow it upon another hand no more meritorious. It ought to be our confirmed and resolute purpose in those islands to prevent the acquisition and holding of lands in large bodies, in order that they may be reserved to the people for homes, in order that there may be built up there, if it be possible to build up in that climate, a race of independent native owners, who shall exercise freely and with propriety the powers of government which they ought to employ for their own welfare and advantage.

TENDS TO DEGRADE PEOPLE.

But if the policy which is recommended by the Commission and which this bill it designed to subserve is carried into effect the evils which now prevail there, and which prevailed there during the dominance of Spain, will be multiplied in extent and in their difficulties as we proceed to create new orders, new syndicates, new corporations for purposes of spoliation or exploitation and to place the control of lands in large quantities into their hands.

We know now absolutely with certainty that syndicates of this character are not interested in the public weal. Their primary and, in fact, their only purpose is to derive the largest degree of profit possible.

There will be ten or twenty thousand acres of land in a tract, and a few such large tracts will cover all the available land in the islands, that is, land which can be reclaimed. These syndicates will be controlled by alien proprietors who have no personal interest in the islands or in their welfare or in the welfare and happiness of their people. It will be a system of pernicious landlordism, which has led to disquiet on the part of the people of Ireland.

Mr. President, these syndicates, organized with stockholders in New York and Chicago and San Francisco or Great Britain, with their agents in the islands to execute their policy of greed (using that word in no offensive sense, but only to the end for which the corporation itself is organized), the land being thus held and thus managed, how are you ever to have a citizenship in the islands upon whom could safely be devolved the exercise of the powers of government? How do you ever expect by such a policy to uplift the people of the islands and make them fit for self-government? This policy does not tend to insure an independent and self-reliant and intelligent citizenship. It tends to degradation, to turpitude, and slavery. It tends to unfit the people, and if they are now unfit to be intrusted with the employment of any power of government, they will be doubly unfit after they receive a schooling under the training and despotism of alien syndicates holding possession of all their lands.

So, Mr. President, this part of the bill relating to the friars, while apparently justified on account of the difficulties which have grown out of the situation in the islands, it seems to me will result in no cure of the mischief, unless we shall alter the bill so as to make an entirely different disposition of the lands that may be acquired from these religious orders.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. RAWLINS. I do.

Mr. CARMACK. I ask the Senator from Utah to yield to me for the purpose of making a motion to adjourn, if the Senator would prefer to go on to-morrow. The hour is growing late, and if it is satisfactory to him I will make that motion.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Utah prefers to go on to-morrow, as it is now nearly half past 4, it will be entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. RAWLINS. I would prefer to do so, and probably I can conclude my remarks more satisfactorily then than to undertake to proceed further to-night. There are a few more topics to which I wish to refer.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. CARMACK. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 23, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 22, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, with amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 2062) to authorize the Western Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Ohio River.

The amendments were read.

Mr. GRAHAM. I move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

MONUMENT TO BENJAMIN F. STEPHENSON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with amendments of the Senate, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 61) granting permission for the erection of a monument or statue in Washington City, D. C., in honor of the late Benjamin F. Stephenson, founder of the Grand Army of the Republic.

The amendments were read.

Mr. McCLEARY. I move that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

REFUND OF DUTIES ON IMPORTS INTO PORTO RICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 11096) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to render judgments for the principal and interest in actions to recover duties collected by the military authorities of the United States upon articles imported into Porto Rico from the several States between April 11, 1899, and May 1, 1900.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the House concur in these amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If I may be allowed a moment, I would like to ask whether this bill confers on the Court of Claims authority to draw the money upon these claims out of the Treasury without warrant from Congress. I tried to understand, as they were read, the amendments put on by the Senate.

Mr. RAY of New York. This bill would be the warrant by Congress to pay these judgments. I consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. PAYNE] on this subject, and he thinks that we should concur in the amendments. The quicker these judgments are paid the better.

Mr. PAYNE. Allow me a moment. The judgments, when obtained in the Court of Claims, will draw interest from the date the judgments are rendered. The United States having this money to pay, I thought it would be best, instead of letting it run along at 6 per cent interest—for that is what the proposition amounts to—to pay the judgments at once. The bill applies, of course, only to this class of claims.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There may have been a precedent for such a procedure in the past, but there has been none to my knowledge. It has always been the custom of Congress to require that when a judgment was found against the Government, it should be brought to Congress, certified to the Appropriations Committee, and Congress allowed to pass on the expenditure; in other words, that Congress should exercise the authority conferred on it by the Constitution to hold the reins on payments from the United States. Although I think it proper to pay these claims—when judgment has been rendered they ought to be paid, and I am in favor of paying them—I am not in favor of surrendering to the Court of Claims the power of Congress to appropriate from the Treasury the amount of the judgment. Even if the Government does lose a few thousand dollars in the form of interest, I think the bill ought to provide that the judgment of the Court of Claims, after being rendered, should be certified to the Appropriations Committee as is done with other claims, and then have Congress provide by appropriation for the payment. In this way we still hold our hand on the Treasury.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on the motion of Mr. RAY of New York, to concur in the amendments). The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call for a division.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 67, noes 21.

So the motion of Mr. RAY of New York was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. LACEY obtained leave of absence for one week, on account of a death in his family.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, changes of reference were made in the following cases:

A bill (H. R. 11803) for the purchase, for a national park, of a tract of land upon which the Natural Bridge in Virginia is situated—from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Agriculture.

A bill (S. 4619) granting an increase of pension to Clifford Neff Fyffe—from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Pensions.

ALLOWANCE FOR CERTAIN CLAIMS FOR STORES, ETC.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to disagree to the amendments of the bill (H. R. 8587) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1893, and commonly known as the "Bowman Act," and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House this bill was set apart for war claims, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, from the Committee on War Claims, asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 8587, the omnibus war claims bill (so called), and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say this: That there are a certain class of claims in this omnibus bill that I do not believe ought to be passed. I think they should receive the careful consideration of every member of this House. The bill originally left this House carrying about $200,000 worth of claims. It comes back here with over $3,000,000 worth of claims. They have not been considered by this House in the Committee of the Whole, as they would have to be if they had been originally reported by the War Claims Committee. Now, I do not want to obstruct legislation; I do not wish to assume that because I am opposed to a claim it must be absolutely wrong, but I do assume and I do assert that it is the right of every member of this House to have claims considered in the legitimate way—under the rules, where they can be discussed under the five-minute rule and the fair consideration of the House obtained.

Now, to-day is set apart for the consideration of these claims. It is true an appropriation bill has come in here, but nothing can be harmed by delaying that appropriation bill till to-morrow. It can not injure anything. There are very many legitimate claims on this omnibus bill, but there are other claims that Congress for forty years has repudiated and turned out. Now, I think it is the duty of this House to-day, instead of asking unanimous consent to send this matter to a conference committee, where the members of the House lose control of the individual items in the bill, to vote down a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill for the Military Academy, and to give the gentleman from Pennsylvania the right of way to-day. Let these claims be heard by the House. Let them be heard individually on their own merits, and let the House pass on each bill and dispose of it, and I will say this, although I intend to object to any unanimous consent to this going to a conference: I will vote, and I believe I can speak for the members on this side of the House, that they will vote with the gentleman from Pennsylvania to give him this day for the consideration of these claims.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama objects.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be proper now for me to move to nonconcur in the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. That is objected to by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MAHON. Then I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to consider bills on the Private Calendar, and pending that I want to ask unanimous consent that the ominbus bill be considered under the five-minute rule, without general debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think that is a fair proposition, and I suppose if there is any one item that extends beyond five minutes that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow some latitude.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, certainly; the usual courtesies will be extended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 8587, the omnibus war claims bill, and pending that motion asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the bill be under the five-minute rule. It is the duty of the Chair also to state that it will require unanimous consent to name the particular bill.

Mr. MAHON. It is the bill H. R. 8587, and I ask unanimous consent that that bill be considered when the House goes into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 8587, the omnibus war claims bill, so called, may be considered when the House goes into Committee of the Whole, and under the five-minute rule. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8587, the omnibus war claims bill, so called.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the Senate amendment to the bill H. R. 8587, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill by paragraphs.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, there is but one amendment to the Senate bill. I suppose it will all have to be read first, and then it will be open to discussion and amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill and amendment be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill and amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I propose to dispense with the first reading of the bill and then that it be read by paragraphs. That would be the convenient way.

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I will add that to it. Let it be read by paragraphs.

Mr. MAHON. I wish to explain to the gentleman from Illinois that this is but one amendment. When that amendment is read the bill will be open to amendment, the greater part of it. There is a great deal of the bill that probably nobody wants to amend.

Mr. CANNON. Well, after all, it seems to me the orderly way would be for the gentleman to ask unanimous consent to read it by paragraphs. Of course, if there is no challenge, it seems to me you would make better headway.

Mr. MAHON. All right; go ahead without any motion. I will agree to that.

Mr. CANNON. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLAIMS ALLOWED UNDER THE BOWMAN AND TUCKER ACTS BY THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

ALABAMA.

To Francis B. Appling, of Tuscaloosa County, $130.

To Hugh P. Bone, executor of Martha H. Bone, deceased, of Madison County, $2,544.

To Hugh H. Kirby, administrator of James Bundren, of Dekalb County, $980.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, where is the clerk reading?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Clerk was reading from page 1 of the official Senate amendment, which is the same matter as appears on page 21 of the House bill.

Mr. CANNON. It is page 21 of the House bill as printed.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDOX. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], a question. As I understand it, these first claims down here—a number of them—are the same claims that were passed by this House when we sent the bill over to the Senate, the Bowman Act claims?

Mr. MAHON. The Senate committee struck out some of the Bowman Act cases by mistake, and when we get to conference those will go back.

Mr. MADDOX. I was going to suggest that in so far as they were the same claims we had passed on before, we might waive them and go on to some of the others.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to suggest that the chairman of the committee come over here in the center of the House, where everybody can hear him, and that everybody else take his seat and keep it.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will please be seated, so that the business of the House may proceed in order.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a question?

Mr. MAHON. I want to answer the question of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX]. The Senate sent a great many claims under the Bowman and Tucker acts to the Court of Claims. The War Claims Committee in the House has no jurisdiction over them. The Senate has added all the findings of the Court of Claims under the Bowman and Tucker acts that were returned to the President of the Senate. All the claims that went over from the House, with the exception of twelve, are in this bill. Twelve were struck out by the Senate. That is the only difference.

Mr. MADDOX. It occurs to me that those claims that we had passed on might be passed over.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Will the gentleman yield now for a question?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. BREAZEALE. I find on page 7 of this bill, under the head of Louisiana claims, an appropriation to Charles M. Flower, Frank

S. Flower, William Flower, and D. Sprigg Flower, children of Charles H. Flower, deceased, of Rapides Parish, $23,357, has been stricken out by the Senate.

Mr. MAHON. That passed the Claims Committee of the Senate as we sent it over; but, by a page being left out of the report the committee made to the Senate, on which were 12 claims that the House had passed, that claim and the 11 others did not get into the Senate bill.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Will that claim go back into the bill when the bill goes to conference?

Mr. MAHON. It will.

Mr. BREAZEALE. What I want to call attention to is the fact that the Court of Claims has found in favor of this claim.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, I am familiar with it.

Mr. BREAZEALE. And there is not a fairer claim anywhere in the bill.

Mr. MAHON. They were findings of the court that were left out by an error, and they will be put back in conference.

Mr. BREAZEALE. With that assurance, Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied.

The Clerk read as follows:

MASSACHUSETTS.

To Charles Foster, receiver of the Union Steamship Company, of Boston, $18,000.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the committee. All the matter in this bill up to page 95 where the heading occurs, "Selfridge board," are claims that have been sent to the Court of Claims, and it looks like a waste of time to read them all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the gentleman. They have all been passed upon by the Court of Claims.

Mr. MAHON. I therefore ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of all that part of the bill up to page 95 up to the heading "Selfridge board findings."

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama what is the necessity of reading all this bill through? The Senate has put a whole lot of amendments on here that I do not suppose anybody wants to concur in any of them. Why not concur in all of them?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to my friend why I will object to unanimous consent to passing them all to conference. I agree that there are a lot of legitimate claims on this bill, and to send it over to the Senate concurred in there is nothing to trade on, nothing to force anybody's hand. If the House will vote to concur in the legitimate claims and nonconcur in the illegitimate claims, then it goes to the Senate, where they can accept the good claims, and the bad ones will be turned down. But if we nonconcur in everything, gentlemen who have good claims will be put in the attitude, if this thing goes to conference and comes back again, that they may have to take claims that they do not want to get the claims they do want. I am unwilling for that situation to arise.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, we have got Bowman Act claims that have been read up to this time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MADDOX. Why not concur in those and nonconcur in the balance? The Senators put on a lot of Bowman Act claims that seem just as legitimate as any of these.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am perfectly willing to agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair states that the question now before the committee is the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, asking unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill from the end of line 19, page 31, to which point the Clerk has already read, to the line before the heading "Selfridge board findings," on page 95.

Mr. MAHON. All of which have been passed upon by the court.

The CHAIRMAN. This question is not a debatable question. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROBB. For the present I enter an objection, Mr. Chairman. I have here an amendment which I desire to offer on page 35, adding an additional claim there. It was certified in 1892 to this House. The claim has been passed upon by the Court of of Claims. I introduced a bill to that effect, which went to the Committee on War Claims. I can not see why it was not reported. The claim of Isaac G. Whitworth was put on this bill, and the other claim was precisely of the same character, and was not put in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the information of the gentleman that we are now reading one long Senate amendment. When that amendment has been finally read, or with the omission of such parts as it may be agreed shall be omitted in reading, it will then be in order to offer an amendment to any part of the Senate amendment.

Mr. ROBB. Then I will simply ask unanimous consent to return to page 36 for the purpose of offering my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to ask unanimous consent. The gentleman will have the opportunity to present an amendment to any part of the Senate amendment after the entire amendment has been read.

Mr. ROBB. I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Senate amendment from the end of line 19, page 31, to the head "Selfridge board findings," on page 95. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, I desire to rise to an inquiry. I understand the Chair to hold that this is one Senate amendment. Then will it be in order to move to strike out and nonconcur in item after item as reached and read now, or will it be necessary to wait until the whole bill is read through before a motion is in order to strike out and nonconcur?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that this will be treated like any other Senate amendment and that the motion to strike out, or concur, or to amend will have precedence, as usual in ordinary cases.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. When the item is reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to amend would have precedence of the motion to concur.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would ask the Chair if the ruling is whether it is proper to move to nonconcur and strike out when the item is reached, if read now, or after the entire reading of the Senate amendment is ended?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the consideration of Senate amendments in Committee of the Whole House, as we are now doing, is of very rare occurrence. But, considering the rules and precedents so far as applicable, the Chair is inclined to hold that the entire Senate amendment must first be read, and then the Chair is of the opinion that amendments may be offered to any clause, paragraph, or line precisely as if the amendment covered but one page or one line.

This is probably the longest Senate amendment that has ever come over to the House. It covers many pages and embraces many paragraphs to clauses, and yet it is only one amendment. The inquiry is quite pertinent, whether an amendment to this amendment must be offered when, in reading, the Clerk has reached the paragraph to which it is applicable, or withheld until the entire Senate amendment has been read.

The rule as adopted April 17, 1789, provided that—

Upon bills committed to a Committee of the Whole House the bill shall be first read throughout by the Clerk and then again read and debated by clauses, leaving the preamble to be last considered. * * * After the report (to the House) the bill shall again be subject to be debated and amended by clauses before a motion to engross it be taken.

In the revision of 1880 this rule was omitted, possibly because the practice of reading a bill by paragraphs for amendment had become such a matter of course in the practice of committees of the whole that its repetition was considered unnecessary, or possibly because it was entirely overlooked, but the present Rule XXIII, section 6, provides that—

The committee may by the vote of a majority of the members present at any time after the five-minute debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph of a bill close all debate upon such section or paragraph.

This is a recognition of the practice of reading and amending the bill itself by clauses or paragraphs, but the Chair is unable to find any rule or evidence of any practice or any precedent for the reading of an amendment by paragraphs for amendments to the amendment. Certainly an amendment offered originally in Committee of the Whole would not be so read. Although it might be a very long amendment, embracing many paragraphs, it would be read as an entirety, and then an amendment or successive amendments might be offered to any part of it. Now, this is not a Senate bill. It is simply a Senate amendment to a House bill and, in the opinion of the Chair, to be treated as any other amendment—that is to say, first read as an entirety, and then considered as subject to such amendments as may be offered to any part thereof, precisely the same as if, instead of coming from the Senate, it had been offered to-day for the first time by a member of this Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If that is the ruling of the Chair, I ask unanimous consent—we all have the bill before us, and we know the portions we desire to object to—that the further reading of the bill be now dispensed with and that gentlemen be recognized to strike out or amend this section as they may wish under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the Senate amendment be dispensed with, the whole amendment be considered as open to amendment as having been read. Is there objection?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Chairman, to what line on page 95 was unanimous consent given?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading down to the heading "Selfridge board findings."

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to know the effect of that unanimous consent. It was coupled with the statement that everybody should offer amendments to concur or nonconcur, as he might see proper. If that is allowed and unanimous consent is given that everybody shall do that, this bill could be held up here in that shape all this session. I am willing to consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with, and then leave the bill in its parliamentary situation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am willing to do that because the Chair has ruled that it is open to amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to the unanimous consent being given that the further reading of the Senate amendment to be dispensed with, but I want the bill then left in its parliamentary status.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the further reading of the Senate amendment be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out and nonconcur in that portion of the Senate amendment headed "The Selfridge board findings," commencing on page 95, line 18, down to and including line 25 on page 100.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 95, beginning on line 18, strike out the remainder of said page, all of page 96, page 97, page 98, page 99, and page 100 down to and including line 25.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to make the point of order on that amendment, I want to know its effect. I am quite in sympathy with what the gentleman from Alabama desires to get at, but if his motion to nonconcur in a part of the amendment is adopted, does that mean concurrence in the balance of it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not so understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to be simply a motion to amend the Senate amendment, and after that amendment and all other amendments have been passed upon, the motion to concur will be in order.

Mr. CANNON. Or to nonconcur?

The CHAIRMAN. Or to nonconcur.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My motion is to strike out that portion of the Senate amendment, and upon that I wish to be heard.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, what is the gentleman's motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is to strike out that portion of the Senate amendment which has been indicated beginning at "The Selfridge board findings," on page 95, down to and including line 25 on page 100.

Mr. MAHON. That is a motion to nonconcur in the balance?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the motion to nonconcur is not in order at this time. As the Chair has stated, it is simply a motion to amend by striking out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the motion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MAHON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. Would it be in order for me to move to concur?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it would not be in order to move to concur until the Senate amendment has been perfected by the committee by making such amendments as it is desired to make.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state my objections to that part of the Senate amendments to the bill under consideration known as the Selfridge board claims. It is a claim arising out of contracts made by the Government during the civil war.

Among the many and varied amendments made by the Senate to House bill 8587, for the allowance of stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act of March 3, 1883—making 110 additional pages, with nearly three millions of direct appropriations—is one appropriating nearly $1,000,000 to certain contractors, their heirs or assigns, administrators or administratrices, or personal representatives, in payment of their claims for additional allowances over the contract price and in addition to the extra allowances made and paid them at the time and since by the Navy Department or by Congress.

The bill was reported from the Committee on War Claims, with amendments, and taken up in the House on February 12. (RECORD, p. 1688.) Mr. MAHON, chairman of the committee, stated that it was the same bill that was passed by the House in the last Congress and failed in the Senate, and included 172 claims and embraced only cases found due by the Court of Claims. A few amendments were submitted and adopted, and the bill passed unanimously, the total amount appropriated being about $198,000 in round numbers.

The Senate Committee on Claims reported the bill with a great many amendments, aggregating specifically nearly $2,900,000, covering a great variety of subjects, the most important being what is designated the "Selfridge board findings" and the "French spoliation claims," converting it from a strictly "Bowman Act bill" to a general "omnibus claim bill."

The Senate committee struck out the entire text of the House bill, in order to throw it into conference, and then restored it with a few amendments, including cases reported under the Tucker Act, which were not included in the House bill, the accompanying report summarizing the new claims added, as follows:

1. Tucker Act cases.
2. Bowman Act court findings since the House made its list.
3. French spoliation court findings.
4. Selfridge board and Marchand board ship cases.
5. Certain approved claims which have repeatedly passed the Senate or House heretofore.
6. A few items for reference to the Court of Claims, court of admiralty, and Treasury Department.

The Senate report is inaccurate in its statements of detail and fact in many respects, but it would require more time than is now possible to dissect these Senate amendments, involving millions of dollars, most of which have never been investigated by any committee of the House of Representatives in recent years, and many of which—notably the so-called "Selfridge board findings"—have never been approved or passed by the House of Representatives, and but once by the Senate.

The paragraph appropriating nearly $1,000,000 for the claims of contractors, their heirs, assigns, administrators, representatives, etc., for the construction of certain war vessels and machinery in the years 1862–63 should receive the closest scrutiny of each member of the Committee on War Claims, as well as by every other member of the House of Representatives. These alleged "findings" have not only never received the full approval of the Senate, as stated in the report, but they have been repeatedly rejected by Senate committees, and in 1866–67 by the Senate itself, and always by the House of Representatives. Congress created a board, known as the Marchand board, by act of March 2, 1867, to go over the entire ground and make report to Congress thereon.

The Senate report ignores wholly the history and report of the Marchand board—only makes a mere reference to it—and suppresses important facts necessary to a proper understanding of the history and merits of these claims, which have been discredited as a whole by the House of Representatives from the very start. Two or three cases passed Congress on their merits, greatly reduced in amounts, while the few others which became laws were put through Congress after going through the Court of Claims under prescribed conditions which left the court nothing to do but see that the clerical computations made in each case were correct.

No mention whatever is made in the Senate report of the fact that in the first session of the Thirty-eighth Congress (1863) Congress passed a joint resolution (S. R. 50) for the relief of the contractors for the machinery of the side-wheel gunboats known as "double-enders," the Senate passing it after a long debate by a bare majority and the House promptly referring it to the Committee on Naval Affairs without an opposing vote, where it was unanimously pigeonholed.

The debate in the Senate commenced on May 11, 1864, and ended on June 22 following, the Senate adopting by a majority of 2 votes the following amendment submitted by Senator Grimes, of Iowa, viz:

All claims based upon or arising from the contracts with persons who contracted with the Government of the United States for the machinery and engines of the side-wheel gunboats commonly known as "double-enders" be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for examination and adjudication; and said court is hereby authorized to examine and report to Congress what amount of work said contractors have done and what amount of materials they have furnished in addition to their contract, and what is the fair value of the same.

Senator Grimes again stated—

That the joint resolution was a matter of more magnitude than Senators might at the first blush suppose, for whenever this bill passes there is to be another one following it immediately for every class of vessels that have been built for the Navy. These contractors enter into a contract agreeing to finish a vessel by a certain time, but none of them do it.

He then made a motion to postpone the consideration of the joint resolution until information could be procured from the Navy Department concerning the matter. A proposition to make it a special order was resisted by Senator Sherman, who stated—

That if the joint resolution passes it will only be but the beginning of 500 similar bills. We shall have similar appeals from contractors who agreed to furnish flour or supplies to the Government, and they will have precisely the same claim. Every person who, by the rise of prices, has lost money by his contract will have the same claim. This principle would apply to all the various departments of the Government, and would produce disorder and confusion.

On June 2 a motion was made to take up the joint resolution, which was opposed by Senator Hendricks, who in a subsequent Congress favored the reference of all these claims to the Court of Claims under the general law. Senator Grimes stated—

That this joint resolution was only the opening or entering wedge to further claims on the part of other contractors. This is to be followed by the contractors for the hulls of vessels, for the hulls and machinery of other classes of vessels; and if this shall be successful, as perhaps it may be, we shall have some rule applying not alone to the Navy, but to the Army and to every branch of the public service.

After the debate a motion to postpone a special order and continue the consideration of the joint resolution was defeated. The joint resolution was again taken up on June 22 and debated at length. Senators Clark, of New Hampshire; Hendricks, of Indiana; Grimes and Harlan, of Iowa; Reverdy Johnson, of Maryland; Cowan, of Pennsylvania, and Sherman, of Ohio, opposed the joint resolution, which was supported only by Senators Hale, of New Hampshire, and Anthony, of Rhode Island. Senator Grimes stated—

That there was not the slightest claim on the part of these contractors that there had been the slightest deviation from their contracts. They have not been required to do anything in connection with their machinery that they did not stipulate to do in their contract. They admit it, the Secretary of the Navy says it, and it is true as he has said that this is merely an appeal to the liberality, generosity, and beneficence of Congress. It is also true that if we grant it in this case we shall have appeals made to us day after day and day after day, upon the authority of this precedent, just as we have had appeals made to us because we have already this evening decided in favor of the Ericsson claim.

Senator Sherman stated—

That there was a letter on the Secretary's desk from the Secretary of the Navy in which he denied explicitly and positively that there were any changes made since these contracts were entered into.

And the Secretary's letter was read by Senator Grimes (Globe, p. 3174.) The joint resolution as amended was then passed.

A few days before a joint resolution similar to the one reported in the Senate was introduced in the House and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, but not reported. On June 30 (Globe, p. 3428) the Senate bill was reached in its order on the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs on motion of Mr. Rice, of Massachusetts, chairman of that committee, and was unanimously ordered reported adversely, but the report was withheld.

THE SELFRIDGE BOARD.

At a special session of the Senate convened by President Lincoln on March 4, 1865, that body adopted on March 9, just as it was about to adjourn, with no quorum present, without debate, and without even the knowledge of most of the few Senators present, the following resolution submitted by Senator Nye, of Nevada, viz:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to organize a board of not less than three competent persons, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and determine how much the vessels of war and steam machinery contracted for by the Department in the years 1862 and 1863 cost the contractors over and above the contract price, and the allowance for extra work, and report the same to the Senate at its next session, none but those who have given satisfaction to the Department to be considered.

Senator Nye had been a member of the Senate thirty-seven days when he took up the claims of these contractors, less than a half a dozen of whom were in Washington, and at a special session of the Senate, when legislative business, under the unbroken precedents of the Senate (save in emergencies), was never transacted, "slipped" through the Senate covertly a resolution for which, according to the papers of the day, he alone voted for, and which the House of Representatives by an overwhelming vote treated, in the succeeding Congress, as a nullity, and has uniformly since rejected as a whole.

The President was aware, as was Congress, that the Secretary had convened several boards—notably the Boggs, the Gregory, and the Ringgold boards—all composed of able men, with full facilities and information to protect the interests of the Government, and that after the most complete and thorough and searching inquiry, with every disposition on the part of President Lincoln and Secretary Welles to be as liberal as possible with these contractors on account of the peculiar situation of affairs, Congress and the public press of the day criticised the extra allowances of the Navy Department of over $5,000,000 and said the contractors should have no more, the House Committee on Naval Affairs being practically unanimous against the contractors.

On January 30, 1866 (first session Thirty-ninth Congress), the Secretary of the Navy transmitted the report of the Selfridge board to the Senate without any recommendation. It was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which Senator Grimes, of Iowa, was chairman and Senator Nye the "tail-end" Republican member. On March 22, 1866, Senator Nye reported a bill (S. 220) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam machinery. Up to the time of the presentation and adoption of Senator Nye's resolution not a petition or bill or paper of any kind had been presented in the Senate of the Thirty-eighth Congress on behalf of these contractors for relief, save for the machinery for the "double-enders."

On April 11 the bill was called up, and Senator Grimes of Iowa, spoke in opposition to the bill. He first called attention to the fact that the resolution was adopted solely by the Senate; was not approved by the House of Representatives; was not an act of legislative authority, and that no board organized under it had any authority to bind, either legally or morally, the action of Congress. He then stated that if the bill were passed the principle involved would require payment of more than $12,000,000 to these contractors and at least $60,000,000 to other contractors for war supplies where they had lost on their contracts.

On April 27 (Globe, p. 2222) the amendment of Senator Grimes, providing that the Secretary of the Navy should pay to the several parties the amounts awarded by said board, not to exceed the sum of 12 per cent of the contract price, except in the case of the Comanche, which should be paid in full, was adopted. An amendment for the steamer Ashuelot and machinery, and for the Tippecanoe, which had been completed to the satisfaction of the Department, was adopted, as was an amendment by Senator Clark of New Hampshire, providing that the sums authorized should be in full for all work done on vessels and machinery for which said sums were respectively paid, and, if accepted, should be on that condition, and no contractor should be entitled to payment until he had executed a receipt in full for said claim.

The bill was then passed by yeas 22, nays 11, the negative vote being Senators Clark of New Hampshire, Conness of California, Davis and Guthrie of Kentucky, Doolittle and Howe of Wisconsin, Henderson of Missouri, Kirkwood of Iowa, Sherman and Wade of Ohio, and Trumbull of Illinois. The bill was referred to the House Committee on Claims and no further action thereon taken during that session.

On February 15, 1867 (second session), Mr. Sloan, of Wisconsin, reported the bill with a substitute (Globe, p. 1265) which authorized and directed the Secretary of the Navy to investigate the claims of certain contractors therein named, 19 in all, and fix the basis on which such investigation should be made. The substitute was read, and while the report was being read the morning hour expired. Notice of substitutes intended to be offered (Globe, p. 1265) was given.

On February 16 the bill was taken up, and Mr. Delano, of Ohio, chairman of the committee, made a statement to the House (p. 1281), saying that the aggregate carried by the bill under the Grimes amendment was $1,267,000. He also stated that the report of the committee was not in print, but a bill and pamphlet in the interest of the contractors was, and he moved to postpone the bill until the following Friday, which motion prevailed by yeas 77, nays 67.

On February 22 (p. 1472) the bill was taken up and Mr. Sloan stated the case and situation, from which it appears that there were over 40 contractors interested in the bill; that the contract price, together with allowances for extra work, had been paid; and then he gave a full and critical analysis of existing conditions (pp. 1471–1472).

The committee were not satisfied with the Senate bill. As the case stood, Congress is asked to legislate upon these cases blindly, and to appropriate more than a million dollars from the Treasury with no knowledge whether a single dollar ought to be paid or not.

Messrs. Delano, of Ohio; Grinnell, of Iowa; Washburn, of Massachusetts, and others spoke in favor of the substitute and Mr. Woodbridge, of Vermont, in favor of the Senate bill.

The question was put on the amendment (more favorable to the contractors) to the committee's substitute and it was rejected, yeas 36, nays 79. The committee's substitute, as slightly modified, was then agreed to, yeas 88, nays 44, and the bill as amended was then passed, yeas 105, nays 42. The Senate disagreed to the House substitute and asked a conference, which was granted. The conference report was agreed to, the Senate agreeing to the House amendment with an amendment, changing the period of time so as to make it under contracts between May 1, 1861, and prior to January 1, 1864. The report also included one more vessel, the Dunderberg. The bill was approved and became the act of March 2, 1867 (vol. 14, p. 424).

On December 4, 1867 (second session Fortieth Congress), the Secretary of the Navy transmitted to the Senate the report of the board of naval officers composed of Commodore Marchand, Chief Engineer King, and Paymaster Foster under the act of March 2, 1867, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered printed (Globe, p. 19). On January 31, 1868, Mr. Grimes reported from said committee a bill, S. 307, for the relief of certain Government contractors. On February 13 the bill was called up and discussed (p. 1143–1144). The bill made the following appropriations to several contractors, viz:

Secor & Co. and Perrine, Secor & Co	$115,539
Harrison Loring	38,513
Atlantic Iron Works, Boston	4,852
Aquilla Adams	4,852
M. F. Merritt	4,852
Tomlinson, Hartepee & Co	15,171
Poole & Hunt	3,694
Total	187,473

Senator Grimes offered an amendment including the firm of Harlan & Hollingsworth for $38,513, which was omitted by mistake. In reply to a question from Senator Sherman why so large an amount was allowed, Senator Grimes stated the facts and said (Globe, pp. 1143–1144) that in place of recommending the appropriation of one million and a half dollars involved in the Senate bill of the previous Congress, the Marchand board recommended the payment of about $200,000 as against nearly $2,000,000 by the Selfridge board. The reason for the discrepancy was that the Selfridge board "took the statements of the contractors as submitted without going into the subject thoroughly, while the Marchand board have taken the statements made by the contractors, as well as statements made by the Navy Department, and have thoroughly analyzed the whole thing, sifted it down and furnished a tabular statement showing all pertinent details," etc. The bill then went over.

On June 8 (Globe, 2922) the Senate resumed its consideration, and in reply to a question Senator Hendricks explained that the bill was based on the report of the Marchand board, "which was satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy and satisfactory to the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs" (p. 2924, 2925). A special order intervened and the bill went over until the following day. When resumed, Senator Hendricks offered an amendment by adding at the end of the bill the following words:

Which shall be in full discharge of all claims against the United States on account of vessels upon which the board made the allowance as per their report made under the act of March 2, 1867.

Senators Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey, and Howe, of Wisconsin, stated that the contractors had been paid over $5,000,000 in addition to the contract price by the Navy Department (p. 2959). Senator Cameron, of Pennsylvania, "objected to these large claims going through in such a way."

Senator Howe submitted a substitute for the amendment of Senator Hendricks to the same effect.

After lengthy debate the bill went over until June 10. (Globe, p. 3051.) After further debate the amendment submitted by Senator Howe to the amendment of Senator Hendricks was rejected and the original amendment adopted, and as thus amended the bill was passed. (Globe, p. 3052.)

The bill was reported without amendment from the House Committee on Claims, and referred to the Private Calendar.

On June 10, 1868 (Globe, p. 3940), the bill was reached and debated. Mr. ALLISON, of Iowa, tried to submit the following amendment, but was not permitted to do so:

Provided, That the several sums hereby appropriated shall be accepted by the several parties in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States arising out of the construction of vessels by the several parties herein named.

Mr. ALLISON stated that he thought the last clause of the bill—Senator Hendricks's amendment—did not cover the case fully, his own idea being "that if the contractors receive this amount it is to be a final settlement." (Globe, p. 3940.)

Mr. Spalding, of New York, was opposed to the bill, and referred to the combination of contractors to get $7,000,000 more out of the Government, when it was not bound either legally or morally to pay them a dollar. An amendment to strike out the allowance of $115,539 to Secor & Co. and Perrine, Secor & Co., and to M. F. Merritt for $4,852, was rejected and the bill passed without amendment (Globe, p. 3942).

The bill was approved July 13, 1868 (Stat. L., vol. 15, p. 379).

Not satisfied with the action and allowances of the Marchand board, created by Congress at the instance and request of these contractors, they sought still further legislation, and procured in the Forty-first Congress the report of a joint resolution (No. 92) from the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, which was called up on January 24, 1870 (Globe, p. 697), and after brief discussion was objected to by Senators Howe, of Wisconsin, and Sherman, of Ohio, and on January 25 was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and on May 12 was reported back with an amendment drawn by Senator Edmunds.

On July 8, in the closing hours of the session (Globe, p. 5368), the joint resolution was called up and the substitute reported agreed to and the same passed. On July 14 (Globe, p. 5597) it was reached on the Speaker's table and objected to by Mr. ALLISON, of Iowa, and subsequently by Mr. Randall, of Pennsylvania. On July 15 a motion was made to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution, which failed by yeas 98 and nays 77. It went over until the next session. On January 30, 1871, the joint resolution was passed from the Speaker's table, and on February 7 following was vetoed by President Grant, whose message concluded as follows, viz:

The present joint resolution transfers the investigation to the Court of Claims, and repeals "so much of said act as provides against considering any allowance in favor of any such parties for any advance in the price of labor or material, unless such advance could have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary diligence and prudence on the part of the contractor." It seems to me that the provision thus repealed is a very reasonable one. It prevents the contractor from receiving any allowance for an advance in the price of labor and material, when we could have avoided that advance by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence. The effect of the repeal will be to relieve contractors from the consequences of their own imprudence and negligence. I see no good reason for thus relieving contractors who have not exercised ordinary prudence and diligence in their business transactions.

These claims have been discussed in the Congress time and again during the last forty years. Let me read again what Senator Grimes of Iowa said at that time. Senator Grimes was speaking upon the following resolution then pending:

That all claims based upon or arising from contracts with persons who contracted with the Government of the United States for machinery and engines of side-wheel gunboats, commonly known as double-enders, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims; and said court is hereby authorized to examine and report to Congress.

Listen to what Senator Grimes stated:

That there was not the slightest claim on the part of these contractors that there had been the slighest deviation in the contracts.

Mark you, gentlemen, it is claimed in the Senate report and in the reports before the House that the Government changed the terms of the contracts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOWIE. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended fifteen minutes. This is a very important matter.

Mr. SWANSON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague be extended fifteen minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mark you, the claim is made that these claims must be paid because they say the Government deviated from the contracts, that it changed the contracts, and the contractors had to work on new plans and were delayed thereby. I ask you, Does the statement of the Senator from Iowa, made at a time when he must have been conversant with all the facts, sustain such a contention?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask my friend not to interrupt me, because I have only fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Again, listen to what Senator Grimes, who was on the committee that had charge of the investigation of these matters, after investigating it, further said in reference to the justice of paying these claims:

That there was not the slightest claim on the part of these contractors that there had been the slightest deviation from their contracts. They had not been required to do anything in connection with the machinery that they did not stipulate to do in their contracts. They admitted, the Secretary of the Navy says, and it is true, as he has said, that this is merely an appeal to the liberality, generosity, and beneficence of Congress. It is also true that if we grant it in this case we shall have appeals made to us day after day and day after day upon the authority of this precedent just as we have had appeals made to us because we have already this evening decided in favor of the Ericsson claim.

The Ericsson claim was one of the claims that they paid. Now, I have read what Senator Grimes, of Iowa, said. He was in the Senate at the time. He was then chairman of the Senate Committee on Claims, which had refused to allow these claims, and he knew the facts, not forty years afterwards, but knew the facts then, and he said that the only ground on which they had a right to make any appeal to Congress was to the liberality, generosity, and beneficence of Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Were all the claims alike?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am talking about the Selfridge board claims, all of which were turned down by the Marchand board, that are in this bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. All turned down for the same reason?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; because they said that Congress did not owe anything to the contractor, that it was only to the liberality and generosity of Congress that they were appealing. That is what Senator Grimes, of Iowa, the then chairman of the Committee on Claims, stated.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; for a question.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I understood the gentleman from Alabama to state that all these claims had been heard by the Marchand board and rejected. Am I correct?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman is correct. I so understand it.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman ever understood that any of these claims were ever heard by the Marchand board and passed on by that board?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My understanding, from what I gather from the record, is that all these claims that are now in this bill were laid before the Marchand board and were rejected, except a certain number of specified claims amounting to $187,000 that were paid at the time. Now, I want to read again what Senator Sherman said in reference to these claims when they were paid. He stated that there was a letter on the desk of the Secretary of the Senate from the Secretary of the Navy in which he denied explicitly and positively that there were any changes made since these contracts were entered into.

Senator Sherman of Ohio is in the record stating that there was lying on the desk of the Secretary of the Senate at that time a statement from the Secretary of the Navy saying that no changes had been made in these contracts, and therefore if you believe what Senator Sherman says, if you believe what the records of Congress say, you are asked to pay these contractors about a million and a half dollars because the Government changed their contracts. It is not sustained by the record, and their contention has gone up in smoke, in vapor, and is a myth; there is nothing in the argument.

Mr. Chairman, I might say a great deal more in reference to the facts in this matter. As I have stated all the time, I do not desire to filibuster this bill, or to delay its legitimate passage; but in investigating the facts I am satisfied in my own mind that these claims were fairly and justly considered by the members of Congress forty years ago and justly rejected by the executive department and the legislative department of the Government at that time.

I say that the statements contained in the present Senate and House reports are not sustained by the record. The claim that we must pay these men because the Government had changed their contracts is denied by the record. It is shown that the then Secretary of the Navy denied it. It is shown that the chairman of the Committee on Claims of the Senate denied it. It is shown that there is no record here to sustain anything of the kind and that the only appeal that was then made was to the liberality and the generosity of Congress.

I contend you should pay a man what is due him, but the money in the Treasury of the United States does not belong to you. You may be liberal and generous with what is your own, but the money you are voting to-day is not your own. It belongs to the people of the United States, and these men have got no right to come here under an appeal to the liberality and the generosity of Congress and ask you to vote a million and a half dollars out of the public Treasury of the United States because they made contracts that turned out disastrous, and I contend that these claims ought to be stricken out and nonconcurred in before this bill passes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CALDWELL. Have you footed up and found the amount of the Selfridge-board findings in this bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, I have not. I take the statement of the board. I have moved to strike out all of those claims.

Mr. CALDWELL. I think it would be a matter for the information of the House if you would state approximately the amount of the findings, which I do not know.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The amount is stated to be a million and a half, I understand, but I do not mean to say that my figures are accurate to a dollar. It is stated in the report, and any gentleman can find the exact figures there.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What other testimony have you besides that of Senator Grimes?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will look in the Congressional Globe and CONGRESSIONAL RECORD he will find that this matter has been discussed for forty years.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I take it for granted that the gentleman from Alabama has looked through the RECORD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have endeavored to search the records, and there is no doubt that the leading men at that time in Congress did believe these claims should not be paid, and refused to pay them; and they have simply been hanging around here, kicked about like a football, ever since, with no legitimate ground to stand on. I say it is not only absurd, but it would be outrageous for Congress at this late day to take up claims of this kind and pay $1,500,000 out of the Treasury without anything more tostand on than these claims come to this House with.

In conclusion, let me say that this bill contains many just and legitimate claims against the Government—in many cases judgments rendered by the courts in favor of the claimants—and it is an outrage on these claimants to add as amendments to the bill claims of doubtful propriety and attempt to make those who are in favor of the Government paying its honest debts vote to pay claims that otherwise would have no chance of being allowed in order to secure the payment of a few just and deserving judgments that the Government owes to its citizens.

Mr. LINDSAY. Does the gentleman say that he believes these claims are fraudulent?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not say that they are fraudulent, but I say they ought not to be paid; that they are not legitimate.

Mr. LINDSAY. I wish to say that I know one of these claimants, Mr. Thomas Stack, who is now 82 years of age, and has been a shipbuilder since 1844, and I know that he is asking only the payment of a legitimate debt—the repayment of money which he spent on behalf of the Government. I am personally acquainted with this man; he resides in my district. He built a monitor there. Like other claimants of the same class, he built the vessel at a time when it was wanted by the Government, during the civil war, and because this service was rendered long ago that is no reason why its payment should now be refused or the claim pronounced fraudulent or illegitimate. I do not believe any such charge is true. I believe that in these cases the contractors paid out thousands and thousands of dollars for the purpose of carrying out their contracts with the Government, and now after all this delay they ought to be repaid. These expenditures outside of the contract price of the vessels were, as gentlemen understand, incurred by reason of changes made in the vessels by order of the Government, and it is admitted that if there was any fault it was occasioned by the change of the plans by the officer of the Government at that time.

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of March, 1865, a board of Navy officers was appointed to inquire into and determine how much of the vessels of war and steam machinery contracted for by the Department in the years 1862 and 1863 cost the contractors over and above the contract price and allowances for extra work.

The resolution adopted in the United States Senate March 9, 1865, was as follows:

> That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to organize a board of not less than three competent persons, whose duty it shall be to inquire into and determine how much the vessels of war and steam machinery contracted for by the Department in the years 1862 and 1863 cost the contractors over and above the contract price and allowance for extra work and report the same to the Senate next session; none but those that have given satisfaction to the Department to be considered.

Under an order from the Hon. Gideon Welles, then Secretary of the Navy, the following officers of the Navy were appointed: Thomas O. Selfridge, commandant and president of the board; Montgomery Fletcher, chief engineer, and Charles H. Eldridge, paymaster. This board held the first meeting June 6, 1865, and considered the claims contained in this bill until December 23, 1865. On July 12, 1865, the claimant, Mr. Thomas Stack, in this bill, made the following statement under oath before this naval board: That the contract for this vessel was signed by the Navy Department September 9, 1862, in which he was allowed one hundred and twenty-six days, or until January 13, 1863, to launch the vessel and deliver her to the engine builders; but she was not launched until March 7, 1863, the delay being caused by the difficulty of obtaining the composition stems; that the total cost of the vessel, including bill for extra work, was $96,405.45; that the contract price was $75,000, and that he received from the Bureau in the bill for extra work $3,048.64; total amount received from the Government, $78,048.64. That the excess of cost of vessel to him over and above the contract price and amount paid for extra work was $18,356.41. The vessel was delivered to the engine builders March 7, 1863, who were allowed fifty days, or until April 26, 1863, to erect the machinery on board; but this work was not completed by them until November 5, 1863, by which delay on their part he was unable to complete the vessel, and he was at great loss by being compelled to pay larger prices for material and labor. There is no charge in the bill annexed to this record (marked No. 14) for any condemned material or faulty workmanship.

S. M. Pook, naval constructor, in his testimony for the Government before the Selfridge board on September 30, 1865, as printed in Senate Document No. 18, Thirty-ninth Congress, first session, page 30, says:

> Having examined the bill of cost and extra work for the gunboat Metacomet, built by Thomas Stack & Co., I find the charges to be correct, fair, and reasonable, and consider that the extra bills should be paid in full.

The board recommended $16,351.36, the amount the present bill appropriates.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the attention of the House for a moment, I simply want to state the facts in relation to these Selfridge board claims. My ultimate effort is to get this matter into conference, to settle this whole bill. The story of the building up of the Navy at the beginning of the civil war is a long story. I am not going to read it, but I have an official document in my hand in which a high officer of the Navy Department states that the employment of a man by the name of Stimers, who was employed to draft these monitors, was the cause of all this trouble; that he was a man who knew absolutely nothing about it. He drafted the plans and specifications of these monitors, and they were taken by contract to be constructed by these boat builders. They were to be finished in six months, some 18 or 20 of them, because the war was pressing and we were without a Navy.

These contractors went to work speedily, under a threat of the Navy Department that if they did not complete these boats under those contracts and specifications at a certain price the Government would seize their shipyards and build the monitors themselves. Now, I want to say to the House that if the Government had acted in good faith toward these men this claim never would have been here. They would have completed their contract. What was the result? One shipbuilder did build his monitor within about five months and a half. They floated that monitor out in deep water, after they had put her guns on her, and she went down in 20 feet of water. That is what happened under the specifications of this man who drew the plans. Immediately the Navy Department issued an arbitrary order stopping all work upon these boats. New specifications had to be drawn, new plans had to be made, and again they were put to work. For a second time the boats failed to carry out their purpose, because they would not float. Again the Navy Department were compelled to stop work and to build the decks up 22 inches above the second design, because when the boats were completed a second time only 6 inches appeared above the surface of the water.

Now, I know these boats were all put under contract by the Government officers.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Were the failures of these boats for the purposes for which they were constructed on account of the failure of the contractors or the failure of the designers?

Mr. MAHON. It was the fault of the designers of the Navy Department. These parties went on with their contracts. Some of them were not completed until 1864. The Government paid these men the contracts for the change made in these boats; but then the Navy Department refused to pay these men for the advance in labor and material that they were put to by their delay.

Iron could be bought for $30 a ton when the boats were contracted, and before they were completed it had run up to $115 a ton. The men working in the shipyards at the time these contracts should have been completed were paid $2.50 a day for labor, and before these boats were completed labor had risen to $4.50, $5, and $6 a day in these shipyards. Now, these men simply ask that this Government pay them the difference between the increase in the price of labor and material from the time that the contracts were to have been finished until they were finished. Now let me read you a little to show why these contracts had to be changed. I read from the letter of Commodore Benjamin Isherwood, a man who knew all about this matter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 26, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I have the pleasure of acknowledging the receipt of your communication of the 22d instant, asking me to inform you of the causes of the alterations and changes in the plans of the light-draft monitors constructed during the war for the Navy Department, and the causes of the delays in their construction, and whether these delays caused extra expense to the contractors.

In reply I would refer to the report on this subject made by the Hon. B. F. Wade, chairman of the Committee on the Conduct of the War, United States Senate, volume 3. From this report you will find that although I was, as you state in your note above referred to, the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering in the Navy Department during the war, I had nothing to do whatever with either the designing or the execution of the work for these monitors.

The Navy Department had established what was in effect a bureau for this purpose in New York City and had placed Mr. Alban C. Stimers at its head, with a large corps of assistant engineers, draftsmen, etc. The whole work, hulls and machinery, was entirely in his hands. He was absolutely untrammeled, being allowed carte blanche by the Department, and his acts and plans were never submitted to any other person.

The selection of Mr. Stimers by the Navy Department for this duty was most unfortunate. The selection was wholly the act of Mr. G. V. Fox, then the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who had unbounded but misplaced confidence in Mr. Stimers's abilities. In making the appointment Mr. Fox did not consult either of the mechanical bureaus of the Navy Department, nor was Mr. Stimers's plans ever submitted to them. The result, as is well known, was a most disastrous failure, due to the absolute and astonishing incapacity of Mr. Stimers and to the fact of his selection by Mr. Fox without inquiry of the mechanical bureaus as to Mr. Stimers's qualifications. In a professional matter of which Mr. Fox had no knowledge, such a selection without careful investigation of Mr. Stimers's abilities was an act of temerity which in a measure made the Navy Department a party to the cause of failure.

At the commencement, then, Mr. Fox was responsible for a most injudicious selection for a most important position, and Mr. Stimers was responsible for the absurd blunders he committed, and as both represented the Government, the latter was to that extent justly responsible for their acts. Under this system 20 vessels were built, all of which (they were exact duplicates) proved absolute failures, their only value being their worth as old material. The cost to the Government was about $8,000,000, and there was, in my opinon, a considerable loss borne by the contractors chargeable to the action of the Government and not yet compensated.

The contracts were taken at a round sum for a certain amount of work to be done in a certain time, conformably to drawings and specifications to be furnished by Mr. Stimers. The responsibilities of the contractors were limited to the quality of the materials and workmanship and to the completion of the vessels in the specified time. They were not at all concerned in the final success or failure of the vessels.

From the first the plans were continually changed and important modifications introduced, all in the direction of more expensive work and materials and requiring longer time for execution. This increased length of time involved greatly increased cost of the work of the contractors, owing to the daily and rapidly increasing rise, at that date, in the cost of materials and labor. The war was then at its height, and the Government was in the market for the whole mechanical resources of the country, which were not able to meet the demand upon them, and as a result the price of certain materials and labor used in the construction of ships and machinery rose abnormally high above even the general increase of price. The loss due to this cause was of necessity borne by the contractors, and has never in any of the settlements made been taken into consideration. Had the plans and specifications been delivered to the contractors at the date of the contract, so that they could have then made their purchases of materials, and had there been no changes in these plans and specifications, so that the work could have been prosecuted uninterruptedly to completion without the great delays unavoidable to such changes and alterations, it could have been executed in the contract time, and the contractors would have saved to themselves the rise in the price of materials and labor which took place during the extended time.

There must be here recalled that for the great extension of time in the completion of these contracts the Government alone was responsible by the changes, alterations, and additions it made to the work after the contracts were executed. This extension of time reacted upon the cost of the work as a whole, and though the Government paid a certain sum for additional work, that sum was inadequate to cover the losses of the contractors by the rise in the cost of materials and labor used in the construction of the work done according to the original contract, and which was prolonged in consequence of the alterations and additions.

All that the Government paid for was the price of additional work at current rates, but the work as a whole could only progress together; that which was in accordance with the original contract had to wait until the additions and alterations could be completed, and in the meantime the cost of materials and labor was rising rapidly and enormously. These delays, which no efforts of the contractors could prevent, and which were caused exclusively by the action of the Government, were ruinous to the contractors by reason of the continual rise of prices; materials and labor became every day scarcer and scarcer; the shops and plant of the contractors were occupied by the vessels that they could neither abandon or complete. They could not therefore take other and remunerative work, and they had to keep a full force of workmen, for if they once lost them they could not at that time be recovered, so great was the demand.

Some approximation may be furnished of the losses sustained by the contractors from the action of the Government in departing from the original plans and specifications by additions and alterations involving great increase of time by estimating the cost to the contractors of the original work, had it been done in contract time, which would have been the case but for the interference of the Government, and the cost of the same work done in the extended time caused by the action of the Government, taking as the basis the average price of materials and labor in the two cases.

The additions and alterations referred to were due to the incapacity of Mr. Stimers to properly design such vessels. Without knowledge of how to proceed, he was constantly vacillating, doing and undoing; completed work was destroyed and other work substituted; time was lost between the notification to the contractors that other plans would be prepared in place of those already furnished and the reception of such plans. In fact, the character of the vessels was essentially changed during their construction from the original programme; great delays were consequently necessarily experienced, and as the price of materials and labor was continually increasing, due to the continually increasing demand for the same caused by the war, the cost of executing the work, which was done according to the original contract, was much increased at the expense of the contractors.

Respectfully,

B. F. ISHERWOOD.

Hon. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH.

I might also read this long report in the same line.

Congress has paid over one-half of the Selfridge board claims. This matter has been before Congress for a number of years. The Senate passed a resolution authorizing the Navy Department to appoint a board, and they appointed Commodore Selfridge at the head of the board, and a number of other officers, and their examinations covered a period of sixteen long months. This board went to the shipyards, examined the books of those concerns, put these men to their proof, and after a long and careful examination as to the increase of labor and the increased price of material they ascertained the amount due these men. Now, then, the Fifty-fifth Congress and the Congress before that has paid one-half of these men. One-half of the Selfridge board findings has been paid by the Congress of the United States. This is the last of them put in by the Senate.

Now, the gentleman from Alabama quoted from Senator Sumner. I want to read what Senator Sumner said in the Senate in 1866:

The Senator from Kentucky said that they took the war into their calculations. Perhaps they did; but who among these contractors could take that war adequately into his calculations? Who among those sitting here or at the other end of the avenue properly appreciated the character of the great contest that was then going on?

Sir, we had passed half a century in peace; we knew nothing of war or of war preparations, when all at once we were called to efforts on this gigantic scale. Are you astonished that these contractors did not know more about the war than your statesmen? Be to these contractors as gentle in judgment and as considerate as you have been to others in public life who have erred in their calculations with regard to it. (Cong. Globe, p. 1987.)

The building of that invulnerable Navy was one of the great victories of the war, not to be commemorated on any special field, but to be seen in these mighty results which we all now enjoy.

And now, again I ask, Are you ready to see these contractors who have done this service sacrificed? You do not allow the soldier to be sacrificed, nor the national creditor who has taken your stock; will you allow the mechanic to be sacrificed? * * * My friend on my right [Mr. Nye] asked you to be magnanimous to these contractors. I do not put it in that way. I ask you simply to be just. Do by them as you would be done by. The Senator from Nevada also very fitly reminded you of the experience of other countries. He told you that England, at the close of the Crimean war, when her mechanics had suffered precisely as your mechanics have suffered, did not allow them to be sacrificed, but every pound and shilling of their liabilities under their contracts was promptly met by that Government. Will you be less just to your mechanics than England? It is an old saying that "Republics are ungrateful." I hope that this Republic may certainly vie with any monarchy in gratitude to those who have served it. (Cong. Globe, page 1987.)

Now, let me read what a distinguished Democrat said, the man that we all had a great admiration for. Senator Hendricks, who was elected Vice-President of the United States, in the same debate, said this:

I am of the opinion that these sums ought to be paid, as a matter of justice and right, by the Government to these contractors. Each case, of course, has its special merits or demerits. But, sir, I believe in the doctrine that where a man contracts to do a great and very important work for the Government he ought not to be allowed to be a large loser, and in some cases, as will be the result here, to be broken up by the contract that he may have made, and especially in the case of contracts made at such a time as these were made and for such work as they were made. * * * We had to have these ships; the Government could not progress in war without them, and great numbers had to be manufactured or contracted for about the same time. What was the effect of that?

The Government made a contract with one man, then with another, then with another, and started her own shipyards with all the force it was possible to command. What was the effect of that? Of course, to increase the price of labor; of course, to increase the price of material required in the construction of the ships. There are some general views about the equity of these claims, without reference to the particular merit of each case. (Cong. Globe, p. 1890, 1866.)

The point is that these contracts being made in 1862 and 1863, the prices continued to advance during all the time that these parties were building the vessels and constructing the machinery for them, so that they were overtaken by this enormously high rate of prices and destroyed (Cong. Globe, p. 1892.)

These contracts were made by some below their own propositions and at barely fair prices at the then current rates. Is there any Senator here who wishes to see these men broken up merely because they entered into a contract with the Government? Is there any Senator here who wishes to say to these men, "We have your bond and we will hold you to your bond; we will take the blood out of your business; we will have the pound of flesh?" (Cong. Globe, p. 1964.)

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAHON. I would like to have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chairs hears none.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I quoted from Senator Sumner, who was a Republican, a distinguished gentleman, and from Mr. Hendricks, who was on the opposite side. I could waste hours of this House reading from what some of the most distinguished men in both branches have said in advocating the payment of these claims. I could quote from men who were in the Senate and afterwards became judges in our courts.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MAHON. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Have these Selfridge board claims ever been before the Court of Claims; and if they have not, can the gentleman give us any reason why they should not go there?

Mr. MAHON. This class of claims do not go to that court.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Is there any reason why they should not go to that court for adjudication?

Mr. MAHON. There is every reason. You should not be asked to try your case before one court for eighteen months, and then be refused for thirty-five years to have the findings of that court confirmed. They would have to go to that court by special legislation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is it not a fact that some of these claims have been sent to the Court of Claims before?

Mr. MAHON. No.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, my understanding is there have been a few of them sent there.

Mr. MAHON. In the Fifty-fifth Congress $700,000 of these claims were paid.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Some of them, I believe. were sent to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MAHON. There may have been some, but they were mere isolated cases.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Marchand board has no authority to pass on these claims of the Selfridge board. They were carefully examined by the Selfridge board. I might state something about that Marchand board that I do not want to state. That board was raised for a specific purpose. It was raised to pass upon the claims of certain boat builders, and when they had completed that work their duties ended. I will not name these men, but every member of Congress knows that these firms are in bad odor around this Congress. They excluded these men, and all men should have had a hearing.

Mr. CANNON. My recollection is that the Marchand board was a creature of law. The House, Senate, and President constituted it; that its findings as to the Selfridge board were born——

Mr. MAHON. In the Senate?

Mr. CANNON. By a Senate resolution, and that that very Congress that constituted the Selfridge board spat upon its findings. The Senate passed a bill true to their resolution, but the House refused to concur, and it was acquiesced in and the Marchand board was created, which was a board under the law, begotten of the law.

Mr. MAHON. Well, Congress has created many a child that Congress has turned out, and we had better let them sleep.

Mr. CANNON. I would rather have a legitimate child born under the Constitution than a bastard born by Senate resolution. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHON. If the bastard become a good, sober, intelligent citizen, I would take him before I would a drunkard that has wallowed in the gutter. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I judge from the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama that there is considerable confusion in his mind as to what was done by the so-called Selfridge board and the so-called Marchand board. I understood the gentleman to say that all of the cases passed on by the Selfridge board were afterwards retried, so to speak, before the Marchand board.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will pardon me, I did not state that every one in detail, but that the Marchand board was appointed to reconsider the claims passed on by the Selfridge board, and that they reconsidered those claims, but not that every single contractor was heard.

Mr. ROBERTS. The gentleman is totally wrong. The Marchand board was not convened, was not organized to retry the Selfridge board claims. The Marchand board was organized to try an entirely new class of claims that had presented themselves after the institution of the Selfridge board. If the gentleman had made any study of this question he would know that the resolution establishing the Selfridge board limited the class of claims that could be brought before it; and it limited it to those claims in which the work performed had given satisfaction to the Navy Department, and only those could be considered.

This was held by the Selfridge board to include only such vessels and such engines as had been completed and accepted by the Government. When the Selfridge board was established there were many of these vessels that had not been completed, many of them that had not been accepted by the Government, and the same condition of affairs applied to them as to the others. Under the ruling of the Selfridge board these others could not be considered by that board. Hence, the necessity of a new tribunal to consider the new class of claims which had arisen.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROBERTS. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Is it not a fact that the Marchand board was organized under an act of Congress immediately after Congress had refused to carry out the findings of the Selfridge board, and that the same claims that were examined by the Selfridge board were afterwards presented to the Marchand board and findings had upon them?

Mr. ROBERTS. The gentleman is partly right and partly wrong.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. I am entirely right.

Mr. ROBERTS. I can not understand for the life of me why gentlemen on the floor cavil about one board being the board of the Government, and the other not being the board of the Govment. The Selfridge board was created by an act of a coordinate branch of this Government, and appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, and they sat and discharged their duties, and the other, the Marchand board, was created by the joint action, but they were both boards representing the interests of the Government, and nothing else.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ROBERTS. One moment. I want to say further that both boards, both the Selfridge board and the Marchand board, were appointed by the Secretary of the Navy. Why make a distinction between the legality, jurisdiction, and weight of the findings between these two boards? I want to refer to the weight of the findings later. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask this question: Is it not a fact that under the Selfridge investigation the Government was not represented by any agent or attorney or anybody to take that side of it?

Mr. ROBERTS. Why, Mr. Chairman, the Government was represented by the naval officers, and they had the testimony of of the naval officers. The following witnesses were examined by the Government before the Selfridge board: United States Naval Constructors Pook, Delano; Chief Engineers Purse, Albert, King, Brooks, and Lawton; Government Inspectors Childs, Lowry, Betts, Hughes, and Drake, each of whom was examined fully, under oath. They were all examined under oath before the Selfridge board. They were called in there to protect the interests of the Government. Further, this board was in correspondence with Rear-Admiral Gregory, who had charge of the gunboat contracts, with the Secretary of the Navy, with Chief Engineer Denby, with John Renthol, Chief of the Bureau of Construction, and B. F. Isherwood, Chief of the Bureau of Engineering, and Chief Engineer Fletcher, who from time to time they made personal investigation as testimony was offered to the board.

Mr. SIMS. Were they not limited in the scope of their inquiry to the increased cost of labor and material only?

Mr. ROBERTS. No; I do not know that there was such a limitation. I understand that they were there to find out generally the increased expense to these people.

Mr. SIMS. One other question: Is it not a fact that the equities growing out of the case in favor of the Government, and the payments made by the Government were not considered by the Selfridge board?

Mr. ROBERTS. I do not so understand. I infer that they took into consideration all the circumstances attending these cases.

Now, I want to refer to some of those circumstances attending the giving of these contracts, which were considered by the Selfridge board, particularly the machinery contracts; and I want to refer to some of the testimony before the Court of Claims in the case of the Washington Iron Works. This same B. F. Isherwood, Chief of the Bureau of Engineering, was a witness, and he testified under oath that he had been an engineer about thirty years; this was in 1873——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBERTS. I ask for five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTS. He testified that he had been in the service of the United States as an engineer for twenty-eight or twenty-nine years. He was asked——

State, if you please, what you had to do with the making of the contracts for said machinery.

Then he goes on to say that by direction of the Department he advertised for bids for different engines (these are the class of claims relating to engines); that he got bids running all the way from $80,000 to $125,000 for engines, the two lowest bids being $80,000 and $82,000. The Department decided they would not pay more than $82,000, and they let two contracts, one for $80,000 and one for $82,000. They were to let as many at $82,000 as they could get men to take. They could not get the engine builders of this country to take those contracts at those figures. Then what did the Navy Department do? It sent its Chief Engineer around to all the shops of the United States that were available and instructed him to urge upon these engine builders as a patriotic duty that they take these contracts at the price the Government was willing to give.

Now, here is a question of which I wish the House to note the answer, because it involves a vital point:

State, if you please, what arguments you used to induce the parties who took this contract to construct the machinery to so take it.

Then Chief Engineer Isherwood, of the Navy, tells what he did under the instructions of the Secretary of the Navy:

Answer. The general scope of the arguments was that the Government was very greatly in need of this work, and that, as loyal supporters of the Government, they were bound to meet its needs; that a refusal to do so would place them in the category of those not entitled to the patronage of the Department hereafter.

Note that if they did not come in and take these contracts at the price the Government saw fit to pay they were to be blacklisted, and could expect thereafter no more Government work. But that was not all:

I also stated that unless the shops responded to the best of their ability to the exigencies of the Department I would recommend what I had before suggested to the Department, to take possession of the shops and have them operated exclusively for the Government work.

Those were the conditions under which these loyal citizens of the North were induced to take these contracts, for which they now seek adequate compensation. First they were threatened with being blacklisted, so that they would receive no more Government work, and when that threat did not operate they were confronted with the threat that the Government would step in and take their shops and run them for the benefit of the Government, thus shutting them out of all the other remunerative work that they were getting.

Then on top of that they were asked to take the contract for these engines without having before them the plans of the machinery that they were to bid on. They were told, in the case of Buckmaster, that the engines would not be more than twice as expensive as the engines on certain ferryboats; they were told that would be the limit of expense for those engines. Yet when the plans came the engines to be constructed were vastly more expensive than twice the expense of ferryboat engines.

These are the class of claims that were brought before this Selfridge board.

Now, a word or two more in regard to the Selfridge and Marchand boards. The Selfridge board sat for months with open doors, inviting these different claimants to come before them with their testimony. The claimants appeared; their witnesses were put under oath. Every bit of testimony which appears in the report of the Selfridge board, which I have here somewhere, this thick document which I exhibit to the House, the original report, represented months of careful search and inquiry, with Government witnesses before it, and all testimony under oath.

Now, how about the Marchand board, this much vaunted Marchand board that sat about four months, a little less, behind closed doors? All the opportunity the claimants had before that board was to send in a written statement of what they claimed. There was no testimony taken under oath. The claimant was not allowed to appear with his witnesses and state his case, and after four months of star-chamber proceedings this much vaunted Marchand board makes this report, which is contained on less than two pages of paper, and yet that is the board we are supposed to follow. We do not know how the Marchard board arrived at its findings. They locked themselves in; they did not want anybody to know how they were getting at it, and yet we are asked to abide by the finding of that board as against the findings of the Selfridge board, which operated in the broad daylight, and was casting about everywhere to get all the information it could get in the interests of the Government, not in the interests of the claimants.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the careful, patient, accurate work of the Selfridge board; in view of the fact that subseqnent Congresses, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that Congress repudiated that board and spat upon it immediately it filed its report; in view of the action of subsequent Congresses which have adopted the findings of that Selfridge board to the extent of over $1,200,000, and in view of the fact that we have only about $700,000 worth of these claims left to clean up all those findings, I submit that we, sitting here in the Fifty-seventh Congress, should abide by the findings of the Selfridge board, and not by those of the star-chamber proceedings. I want to read right here in this connection the following:

Two high officers of the United States Navy, Admiral Hichborn and Commander Webster, testified as witnesses for the United States in the Snowden case (Court of Claims, No. 16829) that the conclusions of that board "both of law and fact were contrary to the right and justice of the matter" and that "it did not accord to claimants an opportunity to present their claims."

What board? The Selfridge board? Oh, no; the Marchand board, to which so many members on the other side of the Chamber particularly wish to bow down and submit. Those are the facts, and those are the two boards, and those were the jurisdictions of the two boards, and I have given you the findings of the two boards.

Now, I say in all fairness, Why should not we accept the findings of that board, which sat in broad daylight? Why, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says that the Congress which appointed the Selfridge board spat upon it. Now, let us see who spat upon it. Immediately after their report a bill passed through the Senate, paying the claim on the Comanche, the amount of which had been found by the Selfridge board. Here are some of the men who did not spit on the findings of the Selfridge board: Nathaniel Banks, James G. Blaine, Boutwell, Butler, Hays. Those were some of the men who were in Congress at the time the Selfridge board was in session, who were here when they made their findings, and who are supposed to know something about the trustworthiness of the report of that board.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SHERMAN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. CROOK, one of his secretaries.

ALLOWANCE FOR CERTAIN CLAIMS FOR STORES, ETC.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would like the attention of the committee for about five minutes, and I trust not to ask for more than that. I think I can state in substance this transaction from the beginning. I will not take much time. In former Congresses, dating back twenty-eight years, from time to time I have made a study of these claims. They have been rejected from time to time, but after being turned down time and again, like hope, they spring eternal. Now, what is the fact? During the war the Government had need of certain boats. Specifications were made, advertisements, and contracts. That contract or those contracts gave the Government the right to change the specifications and provided that any changes that might be made should be paid for.

The Government had the right under the contract made, not under duress, to make the changes, and did make changes from time to time, and the Government paid every cent for extra work under the contract, amounting to many millions of dollars in the aggregate, and there was a full settlement, a final payment in settlement of the contract as it was originally made, and for all changes. The transaction was closed. Now, then, shortly after the close of the war, the people all living that helped make those appropriations, the Senate of the United States passed a resolution creating what was called the Selfridge board to pass on these claims, and this appropriates the findings of the Selfridge board, which shall be in full discharge of same. Now, that board was an ex parte board.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I have but five minutes, but I will yield to a question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. On what are the claims based?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, on anything necessary to get something out of the Treasury that does not belong to them. [Laughter.] Claim! Why, the vilest sinner on earth, without having his sins forgiven, can claim to pass St. Peter's gate. Claims are the easiest things on earth. I have stated that there was a full settlement and payment for extras, and that these amounted to multiplied millions of dollars.

Now, this ex parte board sat and made its report. It came to the Senate. The Senate created it. The Senate considered the claim and passed a bill appropriating according to the recommendations of the Selfridge board. I speak respectfully of a subordinate branch, or of a body that sits elsewhere, but I apprehend that then as now matters passed more readily there than in a larger body, and naturally so. I do not speak in derogation of the Senate, but I speak of it parliamentarily. It came to the House, and the House of Representatives, coming from the people, rose up and said, "We will not have it," and refused to concur and pass the Senate bill. What was the result? In conference it was provided that a new board should be created, and then the legitimate board was created by law. That board met and made its report, and every finding of that board was promptly appropriated for by Congress.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Is it not a fact that these very men, who sat less than three or four months, absolutely sat down on the men who are now asking for consideration; that they took a few favorites of the chief of that board and paid them and refused to do anything for the others?

Mr. CANNON. The members of the Marchand board are dead and gone. Nearly everybody is dead and gone who was in that Congress, just at the close of the war, and I am speaking historically.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman has not answered my question, whether they did not exclude these men.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know whether they did or not, but I am informed from the statement of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that these men or most of them presented their claims before the Marchand board, and all the while, signed, sealed, and delivered, was the final receipt in full from every one of these men for all claims and demands under contract and for extras now in the records of the Government,

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I should like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. That Congress that was contemporary and familiar with all the facts refused this relief. In the fullness of time that Congress passed away. I doubt if there is a man living to-day who was a member of it in either House or Senate. I began to come here about 1873, and along in the late seventies and then in the eighties we heard these flowery speeches about the poor claimants, and up jumped the Selfridge board claims, and on Friday, frequently without a quorum, with our hands full of our business with the living matters of the day, we being new men then, first one claim slipped through and then another, and then they said, "You have paid one. Why treat one differently from the other?" Well, that is a pretty good argument sometimes, but if a man steals your horse, shall another man come and steal the whole livery stable? [Laughter.] There is not much in that.

Mr. ROBERTS. You might give him the halter.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; you might give him the halter, says my friend. But giving is one thing, if the halter belongs to you; but if you and I stand for the time being as the custodians of the Treasury we ought not to give away the money that comes from the multiplied millions of men who live in the sweat of their faces and of the women who wash that they may live.

A MEMBER. What about the unwashed?

Mr. CANNON. Well, as for the unwashed, worse still. Gentlemen may laugh and find it funny, but somebody somewhere ought to voice the 70,000,000 of people who have got to pay this bill. That is what I claim.

Now, there ought to be a statute of limitation. I suppose if this is turned down to-day, in the next Congress on an omnibus claims bill it will come back. I think it likely, if we do not pay it, that fifty years from now it will come, the attorney, perhaps, having his contingent fee, somebody having bought the claim perhaps for a song. Here it will come, and what assurance have you, after you give this, that they will not come for more? Why, claims constantly come where Congress has granted relief, and they come back and say Congress did not give enough. With a change in the membership of Congress, and a claim persistently prosecuted, there you are! I think it would be fortunate if we had a constitutional amendment covering a statute of limitations to send everybody that has a legal claim to the court and let him abide by the decision, and take from us the power to pass upon these claims.

Now, that is about all I want to say. So far as I am concerned I have always heretofore, after full investigation, time and again voted against these claims. They have no legal standing; and, measuring my words, from the best investigation I have been able to give them from time to time in God's chancery, they have no claim upon the American people. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment be limited to ten minutes, giving five to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] and five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. I want to discuss this matter, and I do not think I could debate it in five minutes.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I should like to have a little time on the amendment too.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me——

Mr. MAHON. Make it fifteen or make it twenty, and give ten on each side.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to have a few minutes on this matter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the debate run for a little while, as I think you would get through quicker.

Mr. MAHON. I do not want to be discourteous. This is the only day this committee has in Congress, and it has been waiting a long time. I want to be courteous to the gentleman from Missouri, the gentleman from Tennessee, and the gentleman from New York, and if the gentlemen will indicate what time they will need I will endeavor to accommodate them. How much time does the gentleman from Missouri want?

Mr. DE ARMOND. About ten minutes.

Mr. MAHON. How much time does the gentleman from Tennessee want?

Mr. SIMS. I can not tell. If questions are not asked, I think I can get through in about ten minutes; but if questions are asked, I may not.

Mr. MAHON. I move that the gentleman from Missouri may have ten minutes, the gentleman from Tennessee ten minutes, and the gentleman from New York five minutes, and then the debate shall be closed on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. LINDSAY. I would like to have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that debate upon the motion offered by the gentleman from Alabama be closed in twenty-five minutes, the time to be allotted as stated by the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think that motion ought to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the motion to close debate in twenty-five minutes.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 40, noes 35.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have no feeling in this case due to any malice or to any dislike for the claimants, for I do not know who they are. But I want to say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, that we reported a bill here from the Committee on War Claims of the House, and we came in and stated to the House we have a bill here, an omnibus bill, with nothing on earth except claims that have been passed on by the Court of Claims and determined in favor of the claimant. We would not let any other class of claims, or anything come in except claims that had been passed upon by the Court of Claims, where the Government had been represented.

That is what we did, and the House passed a bill with $198,000 of this class of claims. The bill went from the House to the Senate without a claim that had not been referred to and determined by a court of competent jurisdiction. It has come back from the other end of the Capitol, and to it, a bill which had claims for $198,000, has been added $3,000,000, or nearly so. I state that there is not a gentleman in this House that knows all about these 600 items or knows anything about them. It is utterly impossible. And what does the Senate do? The Senate, instead of amending our bill, strikes out every item in our bill and then brings in a bill with our items named first in it, and then we are asked to nonconcur in the very items this House has voted in favor of.

Now, their claims may be just, but I think I can see through the philosophy of it. They find that these claims that have been passed upon by the Court of Claims have been favorably considered, are distributed over such a large territory of the country, they demand such a support, as will enable these other claims to be pulled through by them. They could not have been put on here for any other reason. The committee put on no claims in this bill that had not been referred to the Court of Claims and passed upon, and they were passed upon in Committee of the Whole and reported and passed in the House.

Mr. MAHON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman certainly knows that in the Senate they have no Committee on War Claims. Their committee is the Committee on Claims. Every claim under the Bowman Act or the Tucker Act which goes to the Senate would go in, and we can not put in any miscellaneous claims. We have no jurisdiction there, and in two-thirds of the claims put in by the Senate they have jurisdiction where we have none. That is the way bills are often passed; and why not agree to that?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, yes; they do as you say.

Mr. MAHON. They want it added.

Mr. SIMS. I want to say to the House that I shall move to concur in the claims that were on the bill as it passed the House, and I have no objection to a conference on the rest of them. This House having passed on $198,000 of them, I wanted those to be on the bill.

Mr. MAHON. You would stick the knife in the other fellow, but put it in the sheaf when it came to yourself.

Mr. SIMS. There is no use sending to a conference committee that which the House has already considered. I shall move to nonconcur in what the House has not considered, and to concur in all those from the Court of Claims that we have already passed on.

Why, suppose I am on a conference committee and I take up the House claims passed by the House after a long and tedious debate, and I am instructed by the very same House to fight against them as a Senate amendment by a motion to nonconcur. Now, why not concur in the items we have already passed favorably, and nonconcur in the Senate amendments purely and properly? That part of the bill which the House has passed upon ought not to be in here as a Senate amendment; the Senate could have added their items to our bill, but they did not do it. I do not want to make any improper charges, and I will not do it, for I do not know; but I can give no other reason for striking out the whole House bill and putting the whole in as a Senate amendment and letting it all go together but the fact that they wanted it all to go together or fail together.

Now, Mr. Chairman, some of these claims are from my district; many are from my State; but I shall not, as a member of that committee, stand up here and favor the payment of claims I do not believe are just; that as a member of the committee and a member of the House I can not sanction, simply to get justice to those, which has been long delayed, who live in my own State. I could not do it conscientiously and I do not want to do it in any other way.

I have no feeling against the Selfridge board claims. The particular vessels that were built, the total amount of contract price for all of them was $14,201,000; that was the contract by the Government. The total additional amount claimed by the contractors on account of the advance in material and labor, caused by the change in specifications, as they claim, was $10,184,592.50. Now, the Government has paid upon the amount claimed $5,302,847.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHON. I object.

Mr. SIMS. I move to strike out the last word, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield the gentleman two minutes of my five.

Mr. SIMS. Two minutes is not sufficient at this time. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, as the gentleman is on this committee, that his time be extended ten minutes, not to be taken out of the time of any other person.

Mr. MAHON. We have limited debate to thirty-five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I ask unanimous consent that he have ten minutes, not to be taken out of that time.

Mr. MAHON. I do not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair understand. The time for debate on this paragraph has been limited. Does the Chair understand that this ten minutes is to extend that time?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; to extend it ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended ten minutes, which time is not to be taken out of the time originally determined upon when debate should be closed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMS. I thank the committee. I have no desire, Mr. Chairman, to occupy the time of the House only to give the facts as they have been given to me. I just stated that the Government considered every item of cost due to Government delay—advance in material and labor—and they paid $5,302,847.91 above contract price. As I have always understood it, and now understand it, the Selfridge board was limited to the investigation of the increase of cost to the contractor due to advance of material and labor caused by the delay of the Government, and they did not consider anything else, and reported upon evidence which was furnished by the contractor and nobody else. There were no witnesses on the part of the Government; they had no right to appear, and the board so limited it.

The Marchand board, afterwards formed, went over the same items, or nearly all of them, and found only one hundred and fifty-seven thousand and some odd dollars due, all of which has been paid.

I have no feeling against these findings more than any other claims, but if you are going to pay additional amounts to contractors for the Government every time they lose and take nothing back from them when they make a profit, you might as well have no contract at all. There is no use of going through the farce of publishing or advertising for bids if contractors can show that they lost money and come to Congress and be paid for it. Does anybody believe if the price of labor and materials had gone down so that these gentlemen would have reaped a large profit—larger than was contemplated by them—that they would come to the Government and hand over the excess of profit? What sort of a precedent is this? We have vessels built recently, and these contractors may come and say that they lost money, and it was due to advance in material on account of trusts and combines, drought and distress, and that we ought to pay these losses. Why talk about being held up by the Government? I tell you there is very little holding up by the Government that is not for the benefit of the held up.

I here insert in full the table, which I have not time to read in detail, showing the amount claimed by contractors over contract price, and the amounts that have been paid by the Government:

Tabular statement showing the result of the action of the board appointed July 6, 1867, by the honorable Secretary of the Navy to "examine the claims of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam machinery," under act of Congress approved March 2, 1867.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., November 26, 1867.

Mr. Chairman, I think the proper way to treat this bill is to concur in so much of it as was included in the original House bill—and that part is easily separable—and let us go to conference on the rest. There is no use in going over these items, amounting to $198,000, that the Committee on War Claims has gone over, that the Committee of the Whole of this House has gone over, and that the House has solemnly voted for. There is no use of taking those matters again into consideration because the Senate has struck them all out and has inserted one entire amendment. There is no use loading down the conferees with extra work of that kind. If the purpose was not to force through the rest of this bill—French spoliation claims, Selfridge board claims, and miscellaneous matters of various kinds—I can see no reason why we should not concur in that much of the Senate amendment as it now comes to us.

The House was so kind as to give me extra time, but I have no wish to occupy the floor further. I have no feeling whatever in regard to this matter, but I am not willing to vote for what I think wrong simply because some of the money appropriated may go to my district.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, if the items in dispute now were small, and if the persons preferring them were poor and weak, and if there were a design to beat them, the task would be very easy and the result would be very sure. But the items being large and the influence behind them being powerful, the prospect of defeating them is by no means good.

It seems somewhat strange that there should be this great quantity of "good" claims, with the mold of thirty or thirty-five years upon them. It seems very strange that the people who dealt with them in the days when they were fresh—when the facts were known, when the evidence against them as well as the evidence for them was obtainable—did not see their merit, but with their eyes open rejected them; and that now, when the evidence upon the one side has gone and the evidence upon the other side seems not even to be necessary, they may be rushed through wholesale and without consideration. It would seem, if we wished to do what is right by the taxpayers, if we wished to treat the small claimant and the large claimant with equal justice, then the most that could be offered by anybody, preferring any of these stale old claims, would be a request for a hearing upon the merits, taking in all the case, before some tribunal where, leisurely and according to the processes known to the courts, the whole matter could be examined and justice done.

It is totally impossible, in a body like this, to consider in a few hours of hasty debate, grudgingly allowed, a dozen, or fifty, or a hundred, or five hundred claims, such as are pending now in this amendment. There may be some of them with merit, or a modicum of merit. That a large share of them are totally without merit, trumped up, totally unworthy of consideration in any tribunal, designing to do justice, seems to me to be clear beyond the possibility of a doubt.

It is not for us here—and it would be useless if we should indulge in that pastime—to speculate as to how these claims came upon this bill in the Senate. Glancing over the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, we do not find any lengthy debate; we do not find any evidence of careful examination. We find abundant evidence of a complaisant disposition and a ready acquiescence, rather than anything indicating that there has been careful examination or any painstaking desire to get at the truth and the merits, and to act according to the truth and the merits.

I have but little hope that the House will do what it seems to me it ought to do, reject these claims, both because they are without merit and because it is totally impossible for the House to consider them and ascertain what, if anything, of merit may be in any one of them. We have so often here the spectacle of the small claimant, interested to the extent of one hundred, two hundred, five hundred, or a thousand dollars in a claim against the Government, growing weary with waiting with prosecuting his claim, growing old as the years go by and justice is denied, and finally dropping out of life, with the claim unsettled, unconsidered, and still pending, while a combination of holders of large claims, trumped up, having nothing of merit in them, lacking everything of merit, can somehow push the big, bad claims through both Houses of Congress and get at the Treasury.

It is not possible here—it is absolutely impossible—to investigate and reach a conclusion understandingly upon a single one of these items. Yet here they are by hundreds, and men are hungry to push them through; hungry to raid the Treasury for the benefit of their friends; hungry, it may be, to raid the Treasury merely as a pastime; indifferent to the rights of the public; coldly and stolidly indifferent to the rights of the small claimant; reckless and profligate in dealing with the large ones. If the good people of the country could know how the rights of the poor, humble citizen are postponed, know the little chance he has for fair or prompt consideration, know how the claims of the millionaire lobbyist, the claims of the combination and trust in the jobbery of claims may be rushed through, it certainly would be a piece of information very edifying to them, but one which they would by no means relish. I do hope, even against hope, that the House will reject this batch of bogus claims, aggregating no one knows just how many millions of dollars.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that there are any facts in controversy regarding the claims presented. The facts are these: At the breaking out of the civil war the United States had no Navy. They commenced at once the construction of vessels and also the construction of machinery to be placed in those vessels. The Government at that time had little or no knowledge about the making of ships, and the shipyards at that time had very little knowledge of the making of war vessels. Now, in 1862 and in 1863 the Government entered into certain contracts for the building of ships and for the equipping of those ships with machinery.

In those times, Mr. Chairman, conditions changed every minute. Material commenced to go up, labor commenced to go up. The Government found that it had made mistakes in its designs and specifications, and it commenced at once to make changes, and from time to time in making those changes it increased the cost of those vessels. At the close of the war these parties who had made these vessels found that they had cost them about twice the contract price, and they made a claim upon the Government, and the Senate by resolution constituted what is known as the Selfridge Board, a board made up of a commodore, a chief engineer, and another officer of the United States Navy. Acting under that resolution they proceeded at once to make an examination and found the actual cost which each of the claimants had been put to in the construction of these vessels.

Now, I do not undertake to say that if these claimants had sued the Government at the time and the Government had been permitted to set up every technical defense that it might not have defeated those claims. On the other hand, no one can say that the technical defense which the Government could have set up would have defeated those claims, because the Government, as I understand it, had broken its contract with these contractors. Now, what are these parties asking for to-day? They are asking that they shall be paid the actual cost of those vessels, as found by a board constituted by the United States Government. Is that unfair? Is there any gentleman in this House who, after nearly forty years, desires to say that these men who, in the time of their country's peril, came to their country's aid, and under conditions which made it impossible to make a wise contract, shall not have back the money which they expended in performing a contract under which they entered into with the Government?

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry? I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to say that all these claimants had received the full amount of their due, and the Government held their receipt in full.

Mr. MAHON. Receipts for the contract price only.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. They undoubtedly received the contract price, but I do not understand the Government holds their receipts in full, neither do I understand that they have ever received anything in compensation for the extra expense that they were put to by reason of the increased price of labor and the increased price of material.

Mr. SCOTT. May I ask how long it is since the award of the Selfridge board was made?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. The award was made in 1867, and from 1867 down to the present time these claimants have come before Congress, and if I am not mistaken the Senate at different times has favored their payment, and the House at different times has also favored their payment. Now, the present year, as I understand it, the committee favors the payment of these claims. Nearly one-half of them have already been paid, and what earthly reason is there why the other half should not be paid? If it is an equitable claim it ought to be paid, and this great Republic, with all its wealth, with all its reputation for fair dealing, can not to-day in conscience say to these men who performed this work forty years ago, and who have waited all this time for their money, that they shall not have the face of what they expended in performing the contract loyally and honestly for the Government. You must bear in mind, also, Mr. Chairman, that during this time there were delays caused by enlistment. and by draft, and the conditions were such that no contractor ought to be held to conditions as they existed during the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to detain the committee for my full five minutes, nor to enter into a discussion of the merits of this case. I just want to say a word. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] intimates that the Selfridge board is or was the creature of the Senate of the United States. The Senate of the United States, it is true, provided for the board, but the board was named by the Secretary of the Navy. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is this case: The Secretary of the Navy named the board that considered this case. Every claimant was dependent, substantially, entirely upon Government witnesses to make his case. And yet that board finds in favor of every claimant. Now, when I as a plaintiff can choose my own judge, can select my own jury, when my opponent is dependent entirely upon my testimony and the testimony of those in my employ, and the verdict of that jury is against me, I shall take no appeal, and that is all there is in this amendment, and it ought to be voted down.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to strike out that portion of the Senate amendment which the Clerk will state.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, beginning with line 18, page 95, all the remainder of page 95 and all of pages 96, 97, 98, 99, and 100.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. SHERMAN) there were—ayes 67, noes 59.

Mr. MAHON demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. MAHON and Mr. UNDERWOOD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 72.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment and ask for a conference, and that the bill be reported to the House with that recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, in order that there may be no misunderstanding about the parliamentary situation, that the Chair stated some time ago to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROBB] that if he desired to offer an amendment it would be in order at this time.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 17, page 35, the following:

"To the heirs and legal representatives of John W. Hancock, deceased, of Iron County, Mo., the sum of $1,160."

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a brief statement in regard to this amendment. I introduced a bill on this subject, which was referred to the committee, and I supposed that it had been incorporated in this bill. The claim embraced in the amendment was referred to the Court of Claims by the Committee on War Claims on March 3, 1883, was considered by the Court of Claims and reported back June 17, 1892. The claim is for supplies, which consisted of horses furnished the Army during the war. The findings of the court are brief. First, the court finds that the claimant was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout the war. That is the preliminary finding.

The court then finds that in September, 1864, Capt. Pinckney L. Powers, of Company H, Forty-seventh Missouri Volunteers, was instructed by General Rosecrans, then commanding the Department of Missouri, to purchase horses and mount his company so that it might be used as mounted infantry. The instructions were not in writing, but appear to have been confirmed by the facts that General Rosecrans sent inspectors to inspect the horses purchased by Captain Powers, and that horses so inspected were purchased and paid for, and that the company was mounted.

The court further finds that pursuant to the instructions referred to, Captain Powers purchased from the claimant eight horses, at prices ranging from $140 to $150, subject to inspection. The legal title to the property was not to pass to the United States until inspected, but the horses were immediately turned over to Captain Powers, and were held by him with Government horses in the claimant's stable at Pilot Knob. While so awaiting inspection they, with other horses, some of which belonged to the Government, were captured by the enemy on the 27th of September, 1864. No vouchers were issued to the claimant for these horses, and he has never been paid therefor, nor had the horses been branded. The total amount to be paid for these horses, if they passed inspection, was $1,160. It appears that the horses were sound and serviceable, and that they probably would have passed inspection.

The court also find that the sale of the horses took place on the 23d of September, the capture on the 27th. The inspectors were delayed in coming by the advance of the Confederate forces, popularly known as "Price's raid." At the time of the sale it was expected that the inspection would take place immediately; that is, that inspectors would be sent from St. Louis within two or three days. It does not appear that there was negligence or delay on the part of the Quartermaster's Department in sending inspectors.

Now, there is the finding of the Court of Claims ten years ago, finding the loyalty of the claimant, finding the value of the property sold, finding that the horses were sold and delivered to the officer of the Army and were in his possession at the time they were captured by the enemy. Why this claim has not been paid before this time I am unable to understand. I am satisfied that it is as just and legal a claim against the Government as any one embraced in this bill. Just preceding this amendment is an allowance to Mr. Isaac G. Whitworth, of a claim of precisely the same character, on a finding by the Court of Claims. I introduced the bills about the same time. I am disposed to believe that the committee from some cause or other simply overlooked this claim. I think that if the committee had considered the claim it would have been embraced in the bill, and I hope there will be no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

It is a finding by the Court of Claims; it is for supplies. There is no question about the justice or legality of the claim. As to the question of loyalty, some one asks. I stated a while ago that the court found that the claimant was loyal throughout the war. I can not conceive of any objection to the adoption of this amendment, and hope it will be adopted. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, the bill is being read for amendment. I move that the committee rise and report this bill to the House with the recommendation to nonconcur in the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the committee agree to report this bill to the House with the recommendation that it nonconcur in the Senate amendment, and that a committee of conference be appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the parliamentary status before we go out of the committee. The gentleman from Missouri moved an amendment. I suppose that is equivalent to a nonconcurrence with an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the situation is the same as if in Committee of the Whole an amendment had been offered and carried to the bill, and then the bill itself had been negatively reported.

Mr. CANNON. Therefore it has no——

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore it has no particular significance at this time.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration the Senate amendment to the bill H. R. 8587, and, having made two amendments thereto, had instructed him to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the House do nonconcur in the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House nonconcur and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The Chair did not state the question so that we could know what we are called to vote upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on disagreeing to the Senate amendment to the omnibus claim bill and to ask for a conference.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, is, What is the effect as to the adoption in the Committee of the Whole, and the recommendation of the Chairman of that committee, as to nonconcurrence in the balance of the amendment? In other words, if we nonconcur now in the Senate amendment, then we attempt to amend. Very much of it is not attempted to be amended, and that goes to the conference nonconcurred in as well as to the other portion of the amendment. What is the effect, in other words, of the vote of the Committee of the Whole to nonconcur in a portion of the Senate amendment? The Senate amendment was amended in Committee of the Whole and then nonconcurred in. Well, then, is not the effect of that, Mr. Speaker—and I ask it because it is a new proposition, because it is a new question—the entire Senate amendment is nonconcurred in on this proposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is right.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What more has been done in Committee of the Whole, which is simply a committee of the House, except to nonconcur in the Selfridge board amendment? I submit that the Selfridge board amendment or any portion of the Senate amendment would go into conference, it seems to me, whether we desire to or not. But I desire to ask the ruling of the Chair as to whether it goes to conference or not. I confess it is a novel and new question, and I am not advocating the Selfridge board claims. I simply want to know the parliamentary status when it goes into conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I made the motion to strike out the items. My object in doing so was to instruct the conferees. Of course, I think these other portions of the bill could have been concurred in and this nonconcurred in; but as gentlemen interested in the bill, who had claims, desired to send the bill to conference, I have made no attempt to move to concur, because the gentlemen interested in the claims did not want to concur. But my object in making the fight in the committee was not to affect its parliamentary status, because that can not be done without we nonconcur, but it amounted to a vote of this House to instruct, not in so many words, but practically instruct the conferees not to concur in these Selfridge-board claims without they violated the wishes of the House. I think that is all there is in the parliamentary situation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Speaker, before that vote is put I would like to know the parliamentary situation in respect to the amendment offered by me in Committee of the Whole, which was adopted unanimously.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's motion is not in because there is a motion to nonconcur. If there had been a concurrence the gentleman's amendment would be in. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to nonconcur in the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

A. W. CAMPBELL AND OTHERS.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2494) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, upon the requisition of the Secretary of War, without further audit, allowance, or restatement of the claims by the accounting officers, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named, or to their legal representatives in case of their death since the allowance of their claims by the accounting officers, the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of, the several claims examined and allowed by the proper accounting officers, under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, since February 2, 1897, namely:

OHIO.

To John C. and Lushion I. H. Goings, sons of John A. Goings, deceased, late of Greene County, $80.

TENNESSEE.

To Robert Stewart, administrator of Thomas Stewart, deceased, late of Shelby County, $270.

NEBRASKA.

To A. W. Campbell, of Boxelder, formerly of Roane County, Tenn., $100.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

J. V. WORLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2974) for the relief of J. V. Worley.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $40 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and that the same be paid to J. V. Worley, of Hardin County, Tenn., to reimburse him for a like sum wrongfully collected from him by the United States marshal for the eastern division of the western district of Tennessee, in the sixth judicial circuit thereof.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

FLORA A. DARLING.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill S. 1902, Calendar number 681.

Mr. SIMS. What is the bill?

Mr. OTJEN. It is for the relief of Flora A. Darling. It has been reported ten different times to the House.

Mr. SIMS. Is that the bill dealing with the asphalt pavement?

Mr. OTJEN. Oh, no; it is to recompense Mrs. Darling for the goods taken while she was under a flag of truce.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask whether it is too late to object to the taking up of this bill. I think the Calendar ought to be taken up in its order so that those industrious members who get their work in early and the bills on to the Calendar shall not be debarred in getting their bills through by taking up later ones on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to object.

Mr. BROMWELL. Then I object to taking up the bills out of order.

BENJAMIN F. FOX.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the House resolution 56.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 3317) for the relief of Benjamin F. Fox, with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts, under the terms of the act of March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Tucker Act.

The resolution was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM P. MARSHALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 647) for the relief of William P. Marshall.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200 to William P. Marshall, late a private in Company H, One hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, being the amount due him for bounty.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I think it is fair to the committee to know what this bounty is.

Mr. MAHON. Let the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the report will be read.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. MAHON), as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 647) entitled "A bill for the relief of William P. Marshall," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

A favorable report on this case was made by this committee in the Fifty-sixth Congress. The facts involved are set forth in that report, which is adopted and made part of this report, a copy being hereto appended.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 1414, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7038) for the relief of William P. Marshall, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill pass without amendment:

A favorable report on this case was made by this committee in the Fifty-fifth Congress. The facts involved are set forth in that report, which is adopted and made part of this report, a copy being hereto appended.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 320, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1844) for the relief of W. P. Marshall, submit the following report:

Your committee report that they concur in the conclusions embodied in the report from the Committee on War Claims of the Fifty-fourth Congress, a copy thereof being hereto attached as part of this report.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 1246, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5501) for the relief of W. P. Marshall, submit the following report:

This is a claim for bounty alleged to be due William P. Marshall, late a private in Company H, One hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers.

The records of the War Department show that William P. Marshall was enrolled December 12, 1861, and mustered into service January 6, 1862, as a private in Company H, One hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, to serve during the war; that he was discharged the service August 27, 1862, on surgeon's certificate of disability, in which it is stated that he was suffering from hydrothorax and that he had been "off duty six months and still unfit."

Claimant alleges hernia (left inguinal) received by heavy lifting June 16, 1862, and also by a fall from collision of steamers August 18, 1862. The claimant is sustained in both statements by witnesses personally cognizant of the facts. He gets a pension for "left inguinal hernia."

Your committee is of the opinion that the disease for which he was discharged was the result of the injuries at one or both places above mentioned, and that he is entitled to a bounty of $100 under the terms of the act of July 22, 1861, and a bounty of $100 under the terms of the act of July 28, 1866.

The following are the acts above mentioned:

[12 Stat. L., p. 269.]

[Extract from an act to authorize the employment of volunteers to aid in enforcing the laws and protecting public property.]

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates organized as above set forth, shall in all respects be placed on the footing, as to pay and allowances, of similar corps of the Regular Army: Provided, That the allowances of noncommissioned officers and privates for clothing, when not furnished in kind, shall be $3.50 per month, and that each company officer, noncommissioned officer, private, musician, and artificer of cavalry shall furnish his own horse and horse equipments and shall receive 40 cents per day for their use and risk, except that in case the horse shall become disabled or shall die the allowance shall cease until the disability be removed or another horse supplied. Every volunteer noncommissioned officer, private, musician, and artificer who enters the service of the United States under this act shall be paid at the rate of 50 cents in lieu of subsistence, and if a cavalry volunteer, 25 cents additional in lieu of forage, for every 20 miles of travel from his place of enrollment to the place of muster, the distance to be measured by the shortest usually traveled route, and when honorably discharged an allowance at the same rate from the place of his discharge to his place of enrollment, and in addition thereto, if he shall have served for a period of two years, or during the war, if sooner ended, the sum of $100: Provided, That such of the companies of cavalry herein provided for as may require it may be furnished with horses and horse equipments in the same manner as in the United States Army.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That any volunteer who may be received into the service of the United States under this act, and who may be wounded or otherwise disabled in the service, shall be entitled to the benefits which have been or may be conferred on persons disabled in the regular service, and the widow, if there be one, and if not, the legal heirs of such as die, or may be killed in service, in addition to all arrears of pay and allowances, shall receive the sum of $100.

Approved July 22, 1861.

[14 Stat. L., p. 322.]

[Extract from an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.]

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That each and every soldier who enlisted into the Army of the United States after the 19th day of April, 1861, for a period of not less than three years, and having served the time of his enlistment has been honorably discharged, and who has received or who is entitled to receive from the United States under existing laws a bounty of $100 and no more, and any such soldier enlisted for not less than three years who has been honorably discharged on account of wounds received in the line of duty, and the widow, minor children, or parents, in the order named, of any such soldier who died in the service of the United States or of disease or wounds contracted while in the service and in the line of duty, shall be paid the additional bounty of $100 hereby authorized.

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That each and every soldier who enlisted into the Army of the United States after the 14th day of April, 1861, for a period of not less than two years and who is not included in the foregoing section and has been honorably discharged after serving two years, and who has received or is entitled to receive from the United States, under existing laws, a bounty of $100 and no more, shall be paid an additional bounty of $50, and any such soldier enlisted for not less than two years who has been honorably discharged on account of wounds received in the line of duty, and the widow, minor children, or parents, in the order named, of any such soldier who died in the service of the United States or of disease or wounds contracted while in the service and in the line of duty, shall be paid the additional bounty of $50 hereby authorized.

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That any soldier who shall have bartered, sold, assigned, transferred, loaned, exchanged, or given away his final discharge papers, or any interest in the bounty provided by this or any other act of Congress, shall not be entitled to receive any additional bounty whatever; and when application is made by any soldier for said bounty he shall be required, under the pains and penalties of perjury, to make oath or affirmation of his identity, and that he has not so bartered, sold, assigned, transferred, exchanged, loaned, or given away either his discharge papers or any interest in any bounty as aforesaid. And no claim for such bounty shall be entertained by the Paymaster-General or other accounting or disbursing officer except upon receipt of the claimant's discharge papers, accompanied by the statement under oath, as by this section provided.

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That in the payment of the additional bounty herein provided for, it shall be the duty of the Paymaster-General, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to cause to be examined the accounts of each and every soldier who makes application therefor, and if found entitled thereto shall pay said bounties.

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That in the reception, examination, settlement, and payment of claims for said additional bounty due the widows or heirs of deceased soldiers the accounting officers of the Treasury shall be governed by the restrictions prescribed for the Paymaster-General by the Secretary of War, and the payment shall be made in like manner under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Approved July 28, 1866.

Your committee attach hereto a letter from W. P. Marshall, and ask that it be printed as a part of this report:

CLAIM FOR BOUNTY.

DEAR SIR: There being no law or ruling by Department of the Interior covering my claim for bounty, and having been informed by Department of the Interior that, notwithstanding the fact that I proved and made my claim for pension to the satisfaction of the Pension Department (on account of hernia of left side received while in line of duty at James Island, South Carolina, July 16, 1862, for which pension certificate No. 183526 was granted me in March, 1881), cuts no figure whatever in bounty claims. The law in regard to bounty reads, as I understand it, that all soldiers enlisting for three years after August 1, 1861, and have served two years of their time of enlistment, shall receive bounty money to the extent of $200.

All soldiers discharged for injuries received while in the line of duty, and are discharged from the service before the expiration of two years on account of said injuries, shall receive $200 bounty. This law was in force, I think, from August, 1861, to August, 1863. After 1863 all soldiers enlisted received the bounty, as the two-year restriction was done away with. (See bounty laws.)

I first enlisted in the Ninth Indiana Infantry in April, 1861—first call for troops for three months' service. I again enlisted December 11, 1861, for three years, in Company H, One hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry; was discharged from the service August 27, 1862, on account of being unfit for active duty. Now I come to the point upon which I base my claim for the bounty, which I claim I am entitled to under existing laws, but have never received, owing to an oversight on the part of my regimental surgeon, Dr. Horace Ludington, and ruling of Department of the Interior in my case.

During an engagement with the enemy June 16, 1862, on James Island, South Carolina, I was detailed from my command to assist in placing heavy artillery in position. While doing this duty I received inguinal hernia of left lower part of abdomen; was taken to hospital and treated for same by regimental surgeon, Dr. Ludington, whose affidavit is on file with Pension Department to that effect. In a few days after the above occurrence my command was ordered to Port Royal, S. C. From this point we were ordered to Newport News, Va. (I being on the sick list all this time). From Newport News my command was ordered to join General Pope near Bull Run. I was left in hospital at Newport News. On or about August 13, 1862, I, with others, was ordered to embark on board the steamship West Point, bound for Aquia Creek, Virginia, there to be landed for some purpose which I am not cognizant of.

About 7 p. m., as we were proceeding up the river, we collided with the steamship Geo. Peabody. The West Point had her bow stove in, and sank in a few minutes in 8 fathoms of water. All on board were drowned except some 16 persons. After the collision I found that I was fast in the wreckage, and was rapidly sinking with our vessel. In my struggle to get loose, or in my struggle in the water to save my life after I did get loose, I reruptured myself in same place for which I had been treated on James Island and in hospital. I, with others, was picked up by the gunboat Thunderer and taken on board of a large steamship of General Burnside's command, and by it taken to Alexandria, Va. At Alexandria I was placed in Fairfax Seminary Hospital for treatment, from which hospital I was discharged from the service August 27, 1862.

There are affidavits on file with Pension Department in regard to all the above from Dr. Horace Ludington, regimental surgeon; Col. Daniel Leasure, colonel of regiment; Capt. R. J. Ross, captain of Company H; Robert Watson, private, Company H, all of my regiment, the One hundredth Pennsylvania Infantry. All of the above named made affidavit as to my injuries, etc. I have been and am shut off from bounty under existing laws for this reason. Although I received inguinal hernia at James Island and was treated for such injury, the surgeon, either through neglect, lack of time, or incompetency, failed to make his report show for what cause I was in the hospital, and simply has me marked as being sick at that time.

When taken to Fairfax Hospital I was bleeding at mouth considerably on account of internal injury received in or during the wreck spoken of. The surgeons, under Daniel P. Smith in charge, did not examine me or treat me for the rerupture, as it had not fully developed while under their charge, but did treat me for the internal injury, which afterwards caused or proved to be a rerupture in the former place mentioned. I was eventually discharged by the surgeons for hydrothorax (dropsy of the chest), a disease I never had; if so, I would have been dead long time ago.

I find that the only way I can get that which is justly due me, owing to present laws, is by special act of Congress. The fact that I have made my claim clear in Pension Office, backed by the affidavits of officers above named, ought, in my mind, be sufficient evidence that I did receive the injury as stated, and that members of Congress will recognize the fact and grant me the bounty.

Should you need assistance in this matter, or proof as to my hernia, I will refer you to Dr. Jethro A. Hatch, Congressman-elect from Tenth Indiana district. He was the first surgeon to examine me (per order of Government) when I made application for pension.

There should be a law passed or rule made covering such cases as mine; there are quite a number of them. The law or rule should be something after this order:

Where an ex-soldier has proven beyond a doubt and to the satisfaction of the Pension Department that certain injuries were received while in line of duty, to the extent that pension will be granted him, ought to be prima facie evidence with the Department of the Interior in cases of bounty claim. Like my case, there are many ex-soldiers barred from bounty on account of carelessness on the part of regimental surgeons to properly report their cases. Many surgeons drank much whisky during the war.

Respectfully, yours,

W. P. MARSHALL,
90 East Twenty-second Street, Chicago, Ill.

Hon. H. R. BELKNAP, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

Your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage with the following amendment:

In line 7 strike out "the bounty due him under the bounty laws" and insert in lieu thereof "the sum of two hundred dollars for bounty due him."

Mr. LOUD (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, enough of the report has been read to show the character of this claim. I want to say to the gentleman that if this man has a claim for a bounty there is no doubt in the world but what he can get it by going to the War Department at as late a date as this and secure that bounty.

Mr. MAHON. They say they can not pay it; that there is no money to pay it.

Mr. LOUD. That is a mistake. It is a little bill; it is only $200.

Mr. MAHON. All I know about it is that it is Judge CRUMPACKER'S bill, and he said that this was the only way that the man could get his money.

Mr. LOUD. If this man has a claim he can go to the Auditor of the War Department and get it audited, and then he will get his money. You are proposing to give the money by a roundabout way. You are proposing to give him $125 or $130 more than he could ever get any other way. If he has a claim for a bounty it would not exceed $8.33⅓ a month for his term of service. Here you are attempting to lump the act of 1861 and the act of 1867 together. The gentleman knows that after all the bounty acts were passed they were finally equalized, and each man was given $8.33⅓ a month. This man's term of service was less than one year, and so if he has a claim he can not secure $100 at the War Department, therefore he comes here, probably without any claim whatever, and attempts to get out of Congress additional bounty. Mr. Chairman, this claim ought not to pass.

Mr. MAHON. This bill was presented by Judge CRUMPACKER, of Indiana. It is a small claim and I have confidence in the gentleman from Indiana. I told him to examine the law properly as to the proof and report, and this report was made. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Indiana would not have reported anything that was not correct.

Mr. LOUD. I do not think the gentleman would report anything he did not believe to be correct, but even as good men as the gentleman from Indiana are sometimes mistaken.

Mr. MAHON. I have no special interest in this bill whatever, except that I have faith in the gentleman from Indiana, and I know that he believes the bill ought to pass.

Mr. LOUD. I am not going to take part in passing any bill upon the mere report of any member here, because the best men in the House are sometimes mistaken. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] knows something about bounty and something about the service of soldiers. He knows that the Auditor of the War Department is to-day passing upon claims of this kind——

Mr. MAHON. I suggest that we let this bill be passed over without prejudice. The next time it comes up the gentleman from Indiana will no doubt be here.

Mr. LOUD. I have no objection to that suggestion, although I think the bill ought to be defeated. It has no business before this House. There is nothing that can be said in its favor. The gentleman from Pennsylvania well knows that any man who has an equitable and just claim of this kind can go before the Auditor of the War Department and have his claim passed upon.

Mr. MAHON. I would like that the gentleman from Indiana should have his day in court. I move that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. MAHON. I ask that the next three bills on the Calendar—House bill 1591, House bill 1010, and House bill 5896—be passed over without prejudice.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAHON. I ask also that House bill No. 5070, in which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] is interested, and House bill 1937, in which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER] is interested, be passed over without prejudice, both of those gentlemen being absent.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 9290) granting a pension to Frances L. Ackley disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. PRITCHARD, and Mr. TURNER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 12346. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13246. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Chattahoochee River between Columbus, Ga., and Eufaula, Ala., or in the city of Columbus, Ga.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 12498. An act extending the time for completing bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo.; and

H. J. Res. 180. Joint resolution authorizing the entry free of duty of a replica of the bronze statue of Rochambeau, by Ferdinand Hamar, and pedestal for the same.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4469) extending the time for the completion of a wagon-motor bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., as provided by an act approved June 3, 1896, and as extended by the act approved January 27, 1900.

Also:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4663) to authorize the Shreveport Bridge and Terminal Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Red River, in the State of Louisiana, at or near Shreveport.

S. J. BAYARD SCHINDEL.

The committee resumed its session.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8769) for the relief of S. J. Bayard Schindel.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be credited the accounts of Lieut. S. J. Bayard Schindel, commissary Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, with the sum of $77.13, being for subsistence funds stolen from the commissary storehouse by unknown parties, and for which he was responsible.

Mr. BROMWELL. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSIAH B. ORBISON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2782) authorizing and directing the repayment to Josiah B. Orbison, of Donegal Township, Butler County, Pa., the sum of $300 that he paid to avoid the draft in 1863.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the honorable Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay, or cause to be paid, out of any money now or hereafter to be appropriated for the payment of claims, to Josiah B. Orbison, a colored man and a descendant of the African race, the sum of $300; same when paid to be in full for all claims that said Josiah B. Orbison has against the United States of America by reason of his being compelled to pay said sum of $300 to avoid the performance of military duty as a conscript from Donegal Township, Butler County, Pa., on the 31st day of August, 1863, at a time when he was not subject to military duty, not being a citizen, not entitled to vote, and not entitled to hold office.

Mr. MAHON. This is the case of a colored man who was drafted into the military service and compelled to pay $300 as computation, when, as claimed, he was not subject to military duty.

Mr. CANNON. Let us have the report read. I suppose we do not want to go into the business of making reimbursement in cases of this class. It would take us a long time before we got through.

The CHAIRMAN. Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House?

Mr. LOUD. I hope not.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to be heard, if I am recognized.

Mr. PAYNE. Let us have the report read.

Mr. LOUD. That can be done later on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, the House evidently recognizes this claim. I do not see why some industrious advocate of the claim did not have it put into the "omnibus bill." That is where it will ultimately go.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, never; it could never get my vote to go there.

Mr. LOUD. Well, there are very few claims ever presented before Congress, having sought every possible avenue to secure favorable consideration, that do not ultimately bring up in what is denominated an "omnibus bill."

Mr. MAHON. Why does not the gentleman make some motion to dispose of the bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. I move that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] has the floor. Does he yield for that motion?

Mr. LOUD. No; I think we might as well dispose of this bill now as some other time. This is simply an old claim—a proposition to refund——

Mr. MAHON. I desire to move that the Committee of the Whole rise, in order that the Military Committee may take up their bill.

Mr. LOUD. Well, let us adopt a motion that this bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table. I make that motion, and when it is acted on the gentleman from Pennsylvania can move that the committee rise.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. LOUD was agreed to.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report these bills to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills upon the Private Calendar, and had instructed him to report the bills H. R. 2494, 4974, 8769, and House resolution No. 56 with the recommendation that they do pass, and also report back the bill H. R. 2782 with a recommendation that the same do lie on the table.

CLAIMS REPORTED BY THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The bill (H. R. 2494) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole, was considered, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

J. V. WORLEY.

The bill (H. R. 2974) for the relief of J. V. Worley, reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole, was considered, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN F. FOX.

House resolution 56 for the relief of Benjamin F. Fox, reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole, was considered, and agreed to.

S. J. BAYARD SCHINDEL.

The bill (H. R. 8769) for the relief of S. J. Bayard Schindel, reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole, was considered, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

JOSIAH B. ORBISON.

The bill (H. R. 2782) authorizing and directing the repayment to Josiah B. Orbison, of Donegal County, Pa., the sum of $300 that he paid to avoid the draft in 1863, reported from the Committee of the Whole with a recommendation that the bill lie upon the table, was considered, and the recommendation agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GIBSON, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the several bills were passed was laid on the table.

PAN-AMERICAN RAILWAY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, with respect to the resolution concerning a Pan-American railway, adopted by the Second International Conference of the American States, recently held at the City of Mexico.

I recommend an appropriation by Congress of the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the President to appoint two commissioners to visit Central and South America to carry the purpose of the resolution into effect, and to investigate and report upon the means of extending the commerce of the United States with those regions.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 22, 1902.

The message and accompanying documents were ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13670) making appropriations for the Military Academy.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. JENKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13670) making appropriations for the Military Academy, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of Welsbach burner or other suitable incandescent lights, drop lights, tubing, mantles, etc., $20.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I for one am glad that there is inserted into this bill a provision for the purchase of Welsbach lights. I think that those lights will be needed in the Military Academy to throw some glamour over the interpretation of the treaty of Washington made yesterday by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The Washington Post to-day contains a dispatch which contains a commentary upon us by a British officer, which I commend to the House as a sweet opinion entertained concerning us by one of our Anglo-Saxon cousins:

BRITISH OFFICER DEFIANT—SAYS ALMIGHTY DOLLAR RULES AND MULE SHIPMENTS WILL CONTINUE.

CHICAGO, April 21.

"Mules will continue to be shipped to South Africa as long as the 'almighty dollar' rules America," declared Gen. Sir Robert Stewart, an officer of high rank in the artillery branch of the British army, who arrived at Chicago to-day.

"England is not at all alarmed over the investigation at New Orleans," continued General Stewart. "There is no denying that mules and horses are shipped to South Africa by our Government, and it is nonsense to talk of stopping it. We probably will begin shipping your American mustangs to South Africa also."

When General Stewart returns to London he will report favorably on the adaptability of the mustang for use in the British army. While here he has arranged for the purchase of hundreds of the wiry little animals should his Government act favorably on his report.

The interpretation placed upon the treaty of Washington is truly remarkable. He seems to confine that interpretation purely to naval operations, and to believe that these words contained in the treaty have reference to nothing else but naval warfare:

A neutral government is bound not to permit or suffer either belligerent to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the other, or for the purpose of the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms, or the recruitment of men.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a new light will come into the field of international law if the nations are bound to accept the interpretations of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] on that point. He shows an incredulity which is truly remarkable and true Yankee characteristics when he says that there is not sufficient truth adduced here that there are maintained in this country military camps for the purchase, under the supervision of British officers, of horses and mules to be used by the British army for the war in South Africa. Will he be satisfied with the statement of a member of this House who has personal knowledge of the maintenance of these camps in his district?

Mr. Chairman, there are maintained to-day—outside of the one in Louisiana, outside of the one referred to by the gentleman from Missouri in his district—two camps in the county of St. Clair, in the State of Illinois, near the cities of Belleville and East St. Louis, which are operated for this purpose. Members may demur to this and say that the individual citizen of the United States has a right under the law to sell stock to be used for this purpose; but, gentlemen, if we had a statesman in the office of Secretary of State of the character and of the Americanism of Richard Olney, of Massachusetts, a way would be found to stop the loading and shipping from the port of New Orleans of these horses and mules to be sent to South Africa to take part in this war.

Mr. Chairman, it is a poor diplomacy, it is a poor exhibition of American statesmanship to deny the existence of these camps, and it is certainly an encroachment on the very outside boundaries of the rules of international law, when an interpretative law is relied upon to prevent any interference with the shipping of horses and mules to South Africa. It is well known that this is not the only infraction of the laws of neutrality which has been committed without let or hindrance by the executive department of the Government. As has appeared in the public prints, as appeared in the report of those sent officially to investigate, men are taken from our ports to South Africa and there inveigled to enter the service of the British army. Can it be said, by reason of the fact that nobody has sufficiently pointed out enough official evidence to warrant Executive interference, that this condition does not really exist?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Chairman, I object, and I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FEELY. I do not desire that. I will get time hereafter.

The Clerk read as follows:

To increase the efficiency of the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., and to provide for the enlargement of buildings and for other necessary works of improvement in connection therewith, made necessary by the increased number of cadets now authorized by law, immediately available and to remain so until expended, $3,000,000: Provided, That before any part of this amount is expended, except so much as may be necessary to provide an immediate increased water supply and to complete the improvements begun on the cadet mess building, complete plans shall be prepared and approved by the Secretary of War, covering all necessary buildings and improvements at West Point, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, which plans shall involve a total expenditure of not more than $5,500,000: Provided further, That after the preparation and approval of the plans herein provided, the Secretary of War is authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for any part or all of the improvements herein authorized within the said limit of cost, to be paid for from the appropriations annually made for this purpose: Provided further, That no money shall be expended or obligation incurred for supervising architects after the plans for improvements above provided for have been approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I move to amend by striking out the word "three," in line 12, page 29, and inserting the word "two," so that it will appropriate at once for these improvements $2,000,000 instead of $3,000,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, page 29, strike out "three" and insert "two."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I am further instructed to move to amend the bill in line 21, page 29, by striking out the word "six" and inserting the word "five," so as to limit the cost to $5,500,000 instead of $6.500,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 29, in line 21, strike out "six" and insert "five."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with this amendment, and am very glad indeed that the Committee on Military Affairs have recommended it. I am not here to say that they ought to have recommended a still further reduction, because I have very great respect for the personnel of that committee. They have investigated the matter and, I understand, have visited West Point and have given the subject that kindergarten observation, besides what they get from documents. I am inclined to think, with all due respect to the committee, that these cadets might have been provided for and that the present plan could have been utilized, with an extension that would have been much less expensive than the authorization of this bill.

I do not speak positively touching that matter, because I have not given it that investigation that the committee has given it. I want to say enough, however, to put myself upon record, and, I trust, the committee as well. I say it for that object. As I take up the estimate that I have here—perhaps not an estimate so much as a printed plan and a drawing showing the proposed improvements, and a description of what they are and what they will cost, and from an examination of the plans by Mr. Larned, who, I believe, is an officer or a professor at West Point, I am inclined to believe that everything contemplated from the standpoint of utility as well as of proper architectural effect and permanency of construction can be made for five million and a half of dollars, as the committee propose to limit it.

That includes roads, grading, and water, and heat and light—the whole thing. The object of my making this statement—and I trust if I am correct about it I will receive the assent of the Committee on Military Affairs—is that whoever expends this money may be placed upon notice that the plans and specifications and contracts shall be made so as to complete this work entirely from the beginning to end, and that next year, or two years from now, or five years hereafter, we will not have additional estimates for construction at West Point. I do this because sometimes zealous officials in expending public money use it as far as it will go, and then come to the succeeding Congress for additional appropriation. There is an amendment I want to offer a little later, unless the gentleman will offer it himself.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to delay the committee by extended remarks at the present time, but rather to avail myself of their permission to submit some considerations with reference to the enlargement of the Military Academy at West Point.

Necessities speak for themselves. The accommodations of the post are entirely insufficient for the number of cadets now provided by law. Of the 452 cadets now at the Point 192 are now actually living 3 in a room and 24 are living 4 in a room. Sixty-eight additional rooms are required in order to allow 1 room to 2 cadets for the maximum corps of 511 now provided for by law. Forty-eight additional rooms are required in the same barracks to provide orderly rooms, storerooms, and quarters for tactical officers, so that 116 more rooms are absolutely needed at the present time in the cadet barracks to provide for the force of cadets who may be at the post under the present law.

The heating and lighting plant of the post is grossly insufficient. There are not quarters for the expanded corps of instructors. The chapel will only hold about half of those who wish to attend. The riding hall is only big enough for 32 men to drill at once, out of the 500. It is greatly to be desired that a full troop of cavalry and full battery of light artillery should be stationed at this post, and quarters must be provided for them and for their officers.

Provision for these necessities will require a practical rearrangement of many of the buildings, which have been scattered over the limited area of level ground existing at the post; so that with larger numbers the replacement and consolidation of many of these buildings are needed, not only to economize space, but to save money in heating and lighting and to bring all the branches of instruction so near to one another that time shall not be wasted.

By this bill as amended the sum of $5,500,000 is appropriated for these purposes, and is a moderate appropriation. The Naval Academy at Annapolis received $8,000,000 for like purposes, and that Academy also enjoys the free use of vessels of war for instruction. The ground and buildings for artillery and cavalry drill naturally need to be larger than for the schools and foot drill of the Navy. The sum asked is certainly moderate.

Exactly what plan for this enlargement shall be adopted is left to the Secretary of War. In this the provisions of the bill follow exactly the model which was furnished in the act for the enlargement of the Naval Academy (act of June 7, 1900, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session; Stats., p. 696). It is expected that in the preparation and adoption of these plans the Secretary of War will call to his aid, not only officers of the Army and of the post, but also such architects as he may wish to consult, in order that the plan shall be in all respects worthy of the situation.

It is not intended to create any abodes of luxury. The cadets are to be two in a room, as heretofore, in plain quarters suitable for a soldier. The cadet gray of the old granite buildings now existing is to be preserved, as well as the plainness and simplicity of the architecture, which fit in so beautifully amid the green of the surrounding hills. It is not for Congress to decide upon the details of such plans. It must be left to others and to experts to determine what is most needed, how to make the most of the room, and how to build so as to be in line for further enlargement as the nation shall grow and the numbers at the Point shall increase.

We must trust the judgment of the Secretary of War as to whom he employs. We have given him full liberty to obtain the best talent that can be had in the preparation of the plans. We have added what we may regard as a most wise provision that the work of actual construction shall be supervised by the officers of the Army, whose exacting and careful oversight will give us buildings that shall last and save expense as far as may be.

We need say no more about the necessity of this appropriation for a school of which the whole nation has been proud for a hundred years. No one can visit West Point without his heart being lifted up with the thought of the deeds that have there transpired. The mind goes back of the establishment of the Academy to the time when that point protected the only communication between the New England States and those west and south of the Hudson River; to a time when Fort Clinton on the plain and

Fort Putnam on the heights and the great chain across the river to Constitution Island held back the British fleet, which dominated the city of New York, and protected a way for the patriots of the Revolution and for the carriage of their supplies.

We look across the river to the country place whence Benedict Arnold made his escape. We realize that this little fort was formerly the keystone of our new-built arch of independence, while we remember, too, that its buildings, nestling beneath the hills, have been the cradle of the Army. The civil war taught us that we could not get along without it. We began with citizen generals, and they mostly failed. It is true that during that war men were trained in the school of war who took their place with the best who came from the West Point Military School.

But our reliance, after all, was on the small corps of men who had been instructed there, and who afterwards leaped into high command. Some came from the Regular Army—almost more from civil life. But we do not forget that our great commanders, Grant and Lee, McClellan, Jackson, Meade, the two Shermans, Thomas, Sheridan, Joseph E. Johnston and Albert Sidney Johnston, Rosecrans, Bragg, Hooker, Franklin, and Gregg—but why should I prolong the list? The leaders of both sides of the greatest conflict that the world has ever seen were mostly from that little school at the fort which held the gate between the scattered States of the Revolution.

West Point has always been unique among military schools. There is none like it in the world. In other countries the instruction in a particular school is confined to one branch. Artillery, cavalry, engineering, etc., each has its own school. But Americans have always believed that the true soldier must know something of all these branches in order to be fitted for high command and to meet the emergencies that may come upon him. Sheridan leaped from an infantry company into the command of cavalry, and his familiarity with cavalry had been acquired at West Point.

It is only recently that we have learned that the same knowledge of all branches may be exacted in the Navy, so that the captain must likewise be an engineer and artillerist and a torpedo expert. Perhaps we have carried the principle further in the Navy by providing for the transfer of officers from one branch to another in the regular course of their duties throughout their professional life. It may be wise hereafter to adopt the same course in the Army, but at present we rely upon West Point alone to supply an officer with the general knowledge which will enable a general officer to fortify his camp and properly direct his artillery, cavalry, and infantry.

We demand that all this shall be learned in the short term of four years. The course of study has been crowded until it has almost become more than a boy can do. The work of the cadet is done upon the jump, from morn till night, with little or no recreation, with entire devotion to such studies, and such studies only, as will be useful in his profession; with a severity of discipline which is unexampled in the strictest military government, and with a division of classes into sections, which enables the leaders to make all the progress of which their minds are capable, while it insists that the laggard shall at least know thoroughly whatever he has gone over.

Such a system requires that those who will not or can not learn shall be got rid of, and the lowest class is sometimes double the number of the highest. By such means the Academy, in a course of four years, turns out athletes in mind and body, men who are ready for work and for any emergency; proud of their school and of their profession, knowing their abilities, but always imbued with a military sense of honor, which has never failed, and which leads them to regard the cadet uniform and their profession as things almost equally sacred. We feel no hesitation in appealing to this House for a generous provision for the enlargement of such a school.

This school has not increased proportionately to the growth of the country. The first establishment was, of course, small. A century ago the law of March 16, 1802, provided for a corps of 20 in all, including 10 cadets to be enrolled in a school of engineering simply. By the act of April 29, 1812, making a further provision for the Corps of Engineers, professors were provided for 250 cadets, who should be attached, at the discretion of the President, to the Academy and be subject to its regulations; that they should be arranged into companies of noncommissioned officers and privates, according to direction of the commandant of engineers, and officered from said corps; that they should be taught all duties of a private, noncommissioned officer, and officer, and be encamped at least three months each year and taught all the duties incident to a regular camp, and that they should be when appointed between the ages of 14 and 21, and engaged, with the consent of their parents or guardian, to serve five years, unless sooner discharged.

In 1810, two years before that act of April 29, 1812, our population was 7,239,881. In 1900, two years before this present April, our population was 76,303,387. In 1812 we had an Army of not to exceed 10,000 regular troops; now we have one of 70,000. Population has increased over tenfold, the Army sevenfold, while West Point has barely doubled. These figures seem to indicate that the Military Academy at West Point was intended to fill a different place than that of merely supplying our Regular Army with officers.

Indeed, the cadet was only required to serve five years; that is, only one year in the Army. In 1838, the enlistment was enlarged from five to eight years. We come to suspect that perhaps the wisdom of our forefathers aimed not at the mere military education of Regular Army officers, but at the military education of the nation. This suspicion is changed into certainty when we turn to their writings. It was as early as 1793 that Washington advised the establishment of such an academy, not for the benefit of the Regular Army, but for the instruction of the officers of the militia. In his fifth annual message he says:

> But it is an inquiry which can not be too solemnly pursued whether the act "more effectually to provide for the national defense by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States" has organized them so as to produce their full effect, whether your own experience in the several States has not detected some imperfections in the scheme, and whether a material feature in an improvement of it ought not to be to afford an opportunity for the study of those branches of the military art which can scarcely ever be attained by practice alone.

Let us remember that these are Washington's words—the declaration of one who had had experience of the dangers and needs which beset this country. It is he that asks, as I ask now, whether it would not be a material feature in the improvement of that citizen soldiership which constitutes our national guard to afford an opportunity for the "study of those branches of the military arts which can scarcely ever be attained by practice alone." In December, 1796, he recurs to his proposition for the establishment of a military academy, stating that its desirableness has so constantly increased with every new view he has taken of the subject that he can not omit the opportunity of recalling the attention of Congress thereto.

He insists that however pacific the general policy of the nation may be it ought never to be without an adequate stock of military knowledge for emergencies, and that in proportion as it avoids the practice of arms it should be careful to preserve and transmit by proper establishments the knowledge of the art; that this art of war is complicated and demands much previous study, and that its possession in its most perfect state is necessary to the security of the nation, and that for this purpose an academy with a regular course of instruction is an obvious means.

He says:

> The institution of a military academy is also recommended by cogent reasons. However pacific the general policy of a nation may be, it ought never to be without an adequate stock of military knowledge for emergencies. The first would impair the energy of its character, and both would hazard its safety or expose it to greater evils when war could not be avoided; besides, that war might often not depend upon its own choice. In proportion as the observance of pacific maxims might exempt a nation from the necessity of practicing the rules of the military art ought to be its care in preserving and transmitting, by proper establishments, the knowledge of that art.
> Whatever argument may be drawn from particular examples, superficially viewed, a thorough examination of the subject will evince that the art of war is at once comprehensive and complicated, that it demands much previous study, and that the possession of it in its most improved and perfect state is always of great moment to the security of a nation. This, therefore, ought to be a serious care of every government; and for this purpose an academy where a regular course of instruction is given is an obvious expedient which different nations have successfully employed.

Thomas Jefferson, on March 18, 1808, sent a special message recommending the enlargement of the Academy as being too limited to furnish the number of well-instructed subjects in the different branches of artillery and engineering, which the public service calls for.

President Madison, on December 5, 1810, recommended the restoration of the buildings and that the scope of the Academy should be enlarged by providing professorships for all the necessary branches of military instruction, saying that the means of modern warfare "render these schools of the more scientific operations an indispensable part of every adequate system."

He says that this is so even where large standing armies and frequent wars afford other opportunities of instruction, but that in governments without such opportunities—"seminaries where the elementary principles of the art of war can be taught without actual war and without the expense of extensive and standing armies—have the precious advantage of uniting an essential preparation against external danger with a scrupulous regard to internal safety. In no other way, probably, can a provision of equal efficacy for the public defense be made at so little expense or more consistently with the public liberty."

Let us apply these words to our present conditions. What we lack in time of war is officers for our volunteers or militia. One such officer is worth a hundred men. A thousand cadets at West Point might cost as much as two or three regiments, but it would furnish 5,000 cadets every twenty years, or enough to give officers to 100,000 men. Is there any other way in which like advantage can be realized?

Is it not instructive to consider the immediate effect which West Point had upon the wars of the nation? In the war of 1812, before we obtained graduates from that school, our one victory was that of Jackson at New Orleans, gained by riflemen intrenched behind cotton bales. Everywhere else our Army was in disgrace, and the Bladensburg races preceded the capture and burning of the Capitol at Washington. But in 1845, when the Academy was in full operation, our little Army became the admiration of the world and carried forward the flag against overwhelming numbers and impossible odds, storming fortifications, maintaining its communication, and placing that flag finally on the capital of Mexico. Need we increase citations? In December, 1815, Madison recommended the enlargement of the Academy, although it was, then, in proportion to our population, about five times as large as at present.

On December 3, 1822, James Monroe, in a very careful message largely devoted to the needs of the Army, states the use of the Military Academy for the instruction of the whole people. He says:

The Military Academy forms the basis, in regard to science, on which the military establishment rests. It furnishes annually, after due examination and on the report of the academic staff, many well-informed youths to fill the vacancies which occur in the several corps of the Army, while others, who retire to private life, carry with them such attainments as, under the right reserved to the several States to appoint the officers and to train the militia will enable them by affording a wider field for selection to promote the great object of the power vested in Congress of providing for the organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia.

It is, therefore, with no hesitation that we bring forward plans for the enlargement of that Academy. It has not grown proportionately to the Army or to the nation. Up to the time of the civil war it was largely a free college whose graduates were not required in the Army and could obtain no commissions there. They went into private life. A large proportion of the most successful generals of the civil war were West Point graduates, who came back from private life to serve the cause that they deemed right. It would be, therefore, only returning to the policy of our fathers if we enlarged that Academy proportionately to the growth of the country.

It once had 250 cadets with a population of 7,000,000. It would have 2,500 cadets, instead of 500, if it were enlarged proportionately to the 70,000,000 population of to-day. Is it not possible also that it is hurting the Academy, as well as the nation, to make it exclusively a training for the Regular Army? May not the officer who has had West Point training, and who comes from civil life back into the service, bring with him a broader experience than the man who knows nothing but the regulations?

This topic is a great one. I put these suggestions rather by way of question than of assertion. But I ask you to consider whether all experience does not prove that Washington and Jefferson, Madison and Monroe, were right in desiring a school fitted for the education of the nation in the art of war and in regarding this as essential to the efficiency of the militia and to our readiness for war.

And when we look at history and see how the absence of this school was felt in 1812, how we longed for instructed officers for our volunteers in 1861 and still more in 1898, and how we depleted the Regular Army to find them, may we not ask your liberal encouragement of the little school of war upon the Hudson, your generous encouragement of its numbers, and of the diffusion among the whole people of that knowledge and practice of arms which is the safety of a free country?

We do not ask this in order to enlarge our standing Army. Diminish that Army, if you will. Give the soldier and noncommissioned officer a full and fair chance for promotion. The West Point graduate has no lien upon the Army or upon its official position. He must compete with his fellows both in peace and war. It is for the military security of the nation that we may urge a return to the policy of the fathers, establishing a system of education which shall fill the whole community with men who shall be fit to officer its Army and its militia and to lead its volunteers in time of war.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that any member of the committee that desires to do so may extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that gentlemen of the committee may be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL. I only desire to say a word in reply to what my friend from Illinois has said. It will be impossible for anyone, no matter how skilled he may be, to forestall the action of Congress in the future with reference to improvements to the Military Academy. There will come a time when additional improvements will be made, when improvements will be suggested, and made by the Congress of the United States. We have no power to forestall such action. When it comes to the question of roads through the reservation, they require a good deal of money every year apparently for roads. We have had a continuing appropriation for a great many years in the past, and in my judgment there will be continuing appropriations for a good many years in the future.

This plan does not contemplate, as I understand, the construction of all these roads at this time, but there will be broken stone and gravel required in every appropriation bill, in my judgment, for years in the future as there have been for the years that have passed since I have been here. The amount, of course, will not be so great after the roads are once constructed, but there are many miles of road through there, and with the heavy rains that they have in the spring it will always require more or less to repair them. That is all I desire to say about it.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say, if the gentleman will allow me, just an additional word. Of course, after the roads there have once been constructed they have to be kept in repair.

Mr. HULL. Let me explain. There is a breast-high wall carried on by an appropriation of $500 a year or $1,000 a year, the effect of which is that as the road is extended the breast-high wall is extended, not as a complete work. It will probably be eight or ten years before that will be entirely completed. I was not at West Point at the time the committee visited there, but I went over this ground very carefully before. I want to say to the gentleman that in some of these works it is more economical to build a part of it every year than to make a large appropriation to complete it, and this scheme is not to complete this now, but to complete buildings and roads necessary to make the buildings and grounds what they should be; and the roads are extended as the buildings are erected on new plots of grounds.

Mr. CANNON. Now, let me read, because I do not want to be misunderstood, the very clause that we are talking about:

To increase the efficiency of the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., and to provide for the enlargement of buildings and for other necessary works of improvement in connection therewith, made necessary by the increased number of cadets now authorized by law, immediately available and to remain so until expended, $3,000,000: Provided, That before any part of this amount is expended, except so much as may be necessary to provide an immediate increased water supply and to complete the improvements begun on the cadet mess building, complete plans shall be prepared and approved by the Secretary of War, covering all necessary buildings and improvements at West Point, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, which plans shall involve a total expenditure of not more than $5,500,000.

Then, as I understand it, that includes the construction of all necessary buildings. It includes everything that is necessary at West Point in connection with those buildings; it includes the grading of roads that are necessary to be made on account of this new construction, and includes water. If the gentleman has not attempted to try to make such a provision, then for one I will vote against the whole provision. Of course when the gentleman says that a road deteriorates or a building needs new paint or additional paint and repairs, why, he states that which all of us know; but I for one will not vote for this provision if we are to have, after this $5,500,000 is expended, five hundred thousand, a million, a million and a half more because we have not given enough to complete this plant. If this will not complete the plant and do the work, why, I would be glad to know it. Now, then, if that is the plan to complete and do that work for that purpose, I am content.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say again that—take the one item on page 28, "For continuing the construction of breast-high wall in dangerous places, $500"—I do not want the gentleman from Illinois to think, if we come in here next year with an appropriation of $500 more in the same line, that we have violated what he understands to be an agreement in this House. It will not be. This bill carries the amount necessary to make permanent in buildings and grounds for the enlarged and improved post.

What this is proposed to do is to complete the plant so far as laying it out and completing the roads. The breast-high wall is not completed, and it will take years to complete it. It is not necessary to complete it at this time. The items I wanted to call attention to are in the character of continuing appropriations, and I do not understand that this scheme covers that. It does cover the completion of all roads made necessary by the location of new buildings by opening up new plats of ground, by developing the plan that will be necessary to drive from one barrack to another and one quarter to another.

It is a great reservation, and the Congress of the United States may decide to have additional drives. I do not believe it would be a violation of faith, if they desired to do it, to appropriate for it. The gentleman from Illinois states it so broadly, that if this went through we would never be able to do anything more except to keep up repairs, and as chairman of the committee I did not want to subscribe to that proposition, and will not.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman decreases his recommendation of the committee $1,000,000. I think he did right, but I want to know when the five millions and a half is given that it will build these buildings. For instance, here is a schoolhouse for officers which will cost $20,000; here is a different schoolhouse for the children of the enlisted men, costing some $14,000 or $15,000. Here is this and that and the other. I am not here to be hypercritical. Here is an establishment educating less than 600 cadets, and it is necessary to have in round numbers officers quarters which, as I recollect, will cost $20,000 apiece. It may be a little less, but substantially that.

Here it is necessary to have the professors of the enlisted men here to be housed and the band has to be housed, and if you have the professors it is necessary that their children should go to school, and the children of the enlisted men are to go to school, and so on, and so on. I am not complaining, I do not want to be hypercritical, but here are the drawings, a matter in detail, and for the finishing, not the permanent repair, not the extension of the river wall, but for the finishing of the proposed construction, I want to feel and know that it will be so administered that five and one-half million dollars will do it.

Mr. SIBLEY. If I understood the gentleman, he says there is a schoolhouse for the children of the officers?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; costing $20,000.

Mr. SIBLEY. And another schoolhouse for the children of the enlisted men.

Mr. CANNON. That is an extension of the schoolhouse.

Mr. SIBLEY. Is it one schoolhouse where the enlisted men's children are to be educated and another separate one where the officers' children are to be educated? If so, I want to tell you——

Mr. HULL. The officers pay their own teachers and the Government supplies the teachers for the children of the enlisted men.

Mr. SIBLEY. Let the officers use the schoolhouse of the enlisted men. The common schools of the United States are the glory and pride of the Republic, and if there is anything that tends to keep down the barrier of class distinction it is the common schools of America, and I shall vote against any proposition which will differentiate the children of enlisted men from the children of officers in schools sustained by the Government by votes which we cast as members of this body.

Mr. HULL. If the Government paid the teachers of the children of the officers, that would be correct; but when the officers are compelled by law to educate their own children, you can not very well have one school where the children of the enlisted men and officers all can go. The Government pays the teachers of the children of the enlisted men, and the children of the officers are not permitted to attend that school.

Mr. SIBLEY. Let the officers provide their own building, if they provide their own teachers.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will bring in a bill providing that the Government shall furnish tuition to the children of the officers as well as to the children of the enlisted men, the gentleman would have some right then to criticise.

Mr. SIBLEY. I would not want to discriminate against the officers.

Mr. HULL. I agree with the gentleman that the common school is the bulwark of the Republic. Every child of mine attended the common schools and graduated there before he was permitted to go to any other. I believe in the public schools, and live in a State where they are liberally maintained. But we have a class of officers at West Point who are not in reach of public schools, and they are not open to criticism, because the Government does not permit the officers' children to go to the same school as the enlisted men.

Mr. SIBLEY. Let me make a suggestion to the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. SIBLEY. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he change the bill, so that the officers may have the privilege of educating their children with those of the enlisted men.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman wants a law compelling the Government to furnish schools for the officers' children.

Mr. SIBLEY. As well as the enlisted men; I do not want to discriminate against the officers.

Mr. HULL. My impression is that such a provision as the gentleman suggests would be subject to a point of order on this bill. I think he had better introduce a separate bill, and with his ingenuity and well-known liberality I have no doubt he could frame a measure which would receive very favorable consideration. I promise that I will use whatever influence I have to secure for it a favorable report.

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania might do the Carnegie act by endowing such an institution himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania must remember that there is considerable prejudice against granting extraordinary favors to officers of the Army; and if it should be proposed to establish a public school on a reservation for the benefit of the children of officers I am sure a great many people would object, saying that as these officers receive liberal pay they ought to provide for the education of their own children.

Mr. SIBLEY. But you contemplate appropriating $20,000 for the erection of a building for a purpose of this kind.

Mr. HULL. Yes; a Government building on Government grounds. Of course you could not expect these people to pay the expenses of such a building themselves. They are there four years and then ordered away and others detailed to take their places, except certain professors who are permanent. The great majority of the officers are there only four years.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HULL, it was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 21, page 29, insert "including the sum herein appropriated."

Mr. HULL. There is no objection to that amendment, though there may be some question whether it is necessary or not. The intention is to limit the expenditure to this amount.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total buildings and grounds, $3,090,326.

Mr. HULL. I move to amend by striking out in the paragraph just read the word "three" and inserting "two."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. I move that the committee rise and report the bill, with the amendments, to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JENKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration House bill 13679 (the Military Academy appropriation bill), and had directed him to report the same back with various amendments and with the recommendation that the bill as amended be passed.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [A pause.] If no separate vote is desired the Chair will submit the amendments to the House in gross.

The question being taken, the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS] and other gentlemen of the Committee on Military Affairs may have leave to print remarks on this bill in the RECORD for the next five days.

There was no objection.

BILLS OF LADING, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The committees will now be called.

Mr. FLETCHER (when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was called). I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 9059) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to navigation of vessels, bills of lading, and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with the carriage of property."

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will understand that under this call bills must be called up by authority of the committee reporting them.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have such authority.

The bill, with the amendments of the committee, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of an act entitled "An act relating to navigation of vessels, bills of lading, and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with the carriage of property," approved February 13, 1893, be, and it is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That it shall not be lawful for the manager, agent, master, or owner of any vessel transporting merchandise or property from or between ports of the United States and foreign ports, to insert in any bill of lading or shipping document any clause, covenant, or agreement whereby it, he, or they shall be relieved from liability for loss or damage arising from negligence, fault, or failure in proper loading, stowage, custody, care, or proper delivery of any and all lawful merchandise or property committed to its or their charge, and it shall not be lawful for the manager, agent, master, or owner of any such vessel to insert in any bill of lading or shipping document any clause, covenant, or agreement whereby there is imposed on any such merchandise or property, or on the consignee or consignees thereof, the payment of any port, harbor, dock, landing, or sorting charges, or charges of any kind for the discharge or delivery thereof, the payment of which is imposed on the manager, agent, master, or owner or any persons or agencies other than the consignee or consignees thereof, by the laws, statutes, or customs of the foreign country or countries to which such merchandise or property shall be transported; or any clause, covenant, or agreement whereby are impaired the rights or privileges granted to the consignee or consignees of such merchandise or property by the laws, statutes, or customs of the foreign country or countries to which such merchandise or property shall be transported. And any and all words or clauses of such import inserted in bills of lading or shipping receipts shall be null and void and of no effect."

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after the 1st day of July, 1902.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration on this bill. It is one of the most important bills presented in Congress during the present session. I do not think it ought to be taken up in the present condition of the House.

The SPEAKER. Will the House consider the bill? On this question the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. TAWNEY. May I make a statement in regard to the bill before the vote is taken, so that the House may know the nature of the bill?

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The tellers will take their places.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 20.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point that no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors and the roll will be called, and members will vote or answer present as their names are called on the proposition, which is the consideration of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 37, answering present 24, not voting 169; as follows:

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I refrained from voting and answered "present" under the impression that I was paired with the gentleman from California [Mr. METCALF]. I understood from the reading of the pairs that the gentleman from California was announced as paired with some one else. If that be true, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to vote notwithstanding the pair if he desires to do so.

Mr. WHEELER. I am aware of that fact, but I do not choose to exercise that right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, however, is paired with the gentleman from California, and the gentleman from California has not voted. What does the gentleman wish to do?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not wish to do anything if I am paired. I understood the gentleman from California to have been announced as paired with some one else.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum having appeared, the officers will open the doors.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield my time to my colleague [Mr. TAWNEY], who will explain this bill during the time belonging to me.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill contemplates merely an amendment to what is commonly known as the "Harter Act," an act passed in the Fifty-second Congress making it unlawful for steamship companies to incorporate in contracts of shipments or bills of lading provisions exempting them from liability.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. What liability?

Mr. TAWNEY. Liability for negligence in the storage of merchandise, loading or unloading, or anything of that kind. I will read the section of the Harter Act to which this bill is proposed as an amendment:

That it shall not be lawful for the manager, agent, master, or owner of any vessel transporting merchandise or property from or between ports of the United States and foreign ports to insert in any bill of lading or shipping document any clause, covenant, or agreement whereby it, he, or they shall be relieved from liability for loss or damage arising from neglect, fault, or failure in proper loading, stowing, custody, care, or proper delivery of any or all lawful merchandise or property committed to its or their charge. Any and all words or clauses of such import inserted in bills of lading or shipping receipts shall be null and void and of no effect.

Before I read that portion of the bill which is the proposed amendment to this section, I would say that the existing law makes it unlawful for steamship companies to incorporate in a contract of shipment provisions of this kind, exonerating them from liability or the payment of damages for which at common law they would be liable. Now, the proposed amendment to this section contemplates simply that it shall be unlawful for them to incorporate in the contract of shipment charges known as landing charges, which by the law of the country to which the goods are shipped are imposed upon the shipowner or shipmaster.

In other words, in addition to making it unlawful for steamship companies to incorporate a provision in the contract of shipment exempting them from the common law liability, this proposed amendment contemplates merely making it unlawful for them to contract themselves out of a statutory liability. Now, following the language which I have read is the proposed amendment. I read now from page 2 of the bill, line 5:

And it shall not be lawful for the manager, agent, master, or owner of any such vessel to insert in any bill of lading or shipping document any clause, covenant, or agreement whereby there is imposed on any such merchandise or property, or on the consignee or consignees thereof, the payment of any port, harbor, dock, landing, or sorting charges, or charges of any kind for the discharge or delivery thereof, the payment of which is imposed on the manager, agent, master, or owner, or any persons or agencies other than the consignee or consignees thereof, by the laws, statutes, or customs of the foreign country or countries to which such merchandise or property shall be transported; or any clause, covenant, or agreement whereby are impaired the rights or privileges granted to the consignee or consignees of such merchandise or property by the laws, statutes, or customs of the foreign country or countries to which such merchandise or property shall be transported. And any and all words or clauses of such import inserted in bills of lading or shipping receipts shall be null and void and of no effect.

Mr. Speaker, in 1888, as the result of a combination between the London and India Dock Company and the steamship transportation companies entering the port of London, there was incorporated into the bill of lading a provision whereby these landing charges were to be paid by the consignee or the consignor. In other words, it was a charge imposed upon the cargo or the merchandise, why? Because under the provisions of the merchants' shipping act of Great Britain these charges, included in what is known as the "London clause," are imposed upon the shipowner or shipmaster. To evade the provisions of that law they incorporated this clause known as the "London clause" in the contract of shipment, thereby imposing this charge upon the consignee or the consignor.

This is the provision of the law of Great Britain:

If any goods are, for the purpose of convenience in assorting the same, landed at the wharf where the ship is discharged, and the owner of the goods at the time of that landing has made entry and is ready and offers to take delivery thereof, and to convey the same to some other wharf or warehouse, the goods shall be assorted at landing, and shall, if demanded, be delivered to the owner thereof within twenty-four hours after assortment—

Now, mark you—and the expense of and consequent upon that landing and assortment shall be borne by the shipowner.

That is the language of the merchants' shipping act of Great Britain, and the expense of landing and assorting the goods under this law must be paid by the shipowners.

This London clause A, which they insert in every contract of shipment from North Atlantic ports, is lengthy. I will read only a part of it.

(A) The steamer owners shall, at their option, be entitled to land the goods within mentioned on the quays, or to discharge them in craft hired by them, immediately on arrival, and at consignee's risk and expense, the steamer owners being entitled to collect the same charges on goods entered for landing at the docks as on goods entered for delivery to lighters. Consignees desirous of conveying their goods elsewhere shall, on making application to the steamer's agents or to the dock company within seventy-two hours after the steamer shall have been reported, be entitled to delivery into consignee's lighters at the following rates, to be paid with the freight to the steamer's agents against release, or to the dock company, if so directed by the steamer's agents, viz:

Following wooden goods in packages: Clothes pegs, spade handles, blind rollers, hubs, spokes, wheels, and oars, 1s. 3d. per ton measurement; hoops, 2s. 9d. per ton weight; lumber and logs, 2s. per ton measurement, or 2s. 6d. per ton weight at ship's option. All other general cargo, except slates, 1s. 9d. per ton weight or measurement, at steamer's option; minimum charge, 1 ton. Slates to pay 2s. per ton weight. Cheese may also be removed by consignee's vans within one week after ship shall have reported, subject to a like payment of 3s. 3d. per ton weight, such sum to include loading up and wharfage, any single article weighing over 1 ton to be subject to extra expenses for handling, if incurred.

All measurement freight to be on the intake calliper measurement, as stated in the margin. Freights by weight (grain excepted) to be paid upon the weight stated in margin or at steamer's option upon landing weight. If weight has been understated, the cost of weighing to be a charge upon the goods. All shipments of lumber and logs which are sent forward on a weight rate will pay freight on the railroad rates furnished at the port of shipment. No alteration will be permitted in any weight or freights included in this bill of lading except at steamer's option.

These are the rates which the consignee must pay in order to have his goods landed from the ship that has carried them from the North Atlantic ports to the port of London.

This bill is general in its terms. In one sense it would apply to every port in the world. In fact it will only apply to a single port, and that is the port of London, for the reason that in no other country, and at no other port in Great Britain, are these charges imposed by the laws of the country upon the shipowner or shipmaster.

Another fact I wish to call the attention of the House to is this, that this London clause is a discrimination against the export products of the United States entering the port of London; for this London clause, imposing these charges upon the shipper, is not included in the contract of shipment for the carrying of goods from any other port in the world except the North Atlantic ports, which includes the ports of the United States and ports of Canada. All goods entering the port of London from any other port in the world are exempt from this charge. Now, let me give you an illustration of how it operates upon the item of flour alone.

I want to say right here that we have in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce petitions and resolutions from almost every chamber of commerce and board of trade in the United States, asking for the passage of this very bill, because it proposes to remove an unjust discrimination against the commerce of the United States entering the port of London.

In the matter of flour, for example, the charge for unloading that flour from vessels onto the quay or dock is 1s. 9d. It has been steadily increased from 1s. 2d. in 1888 to 1s. 9d. at the present time, and that amounts to 3½ cents a barrel which the American flour shipper must pay in addition to paying the freight, and what is that charge made for? It is made to defray the expenses of unloading the ship and delivering the goods on the quay or on the dock at the port of London.

I maintain, and I think every lawyer of this House will agree with me, that when a carrier undertakes to carry a certain quantity of freight for me from one point to another point that the carrier is bound by his contract of carrying to deliver the goods at the point of destination where I can get them. I maintain that this charge, as I have stated by way of an illustration, upon flour is a necessary part of the freight charge. It is a portion of the expense incident to the carrying and the delivering of the goods which the steamships are to carry for the American shippers to the port of London, and it should therefore be included in the freight. It should be included in the freight, because freight rates fluctuate, varying according to the laws of supply and demand for space and for freight, and this charge would necessarily be absorbed a greater part of the time in the freight charge.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this matter has been a subject of complaint on the part of American shippers and on the part of London consignees for a number of years. This London clause, as I stated before, was first included in the contract of shipment in 1888, as a result of a combination between the London and India Dock Company and the steamship carriers. It has been changed frequently since that time. The conditions of the contract are made more onerous from year to year, and these charges are increased arbitrarily from time to time by the steamship companies.

Now, they have simply segregated a part of the legitimate freight charge, making it a fixed charge and a charge, too, that is absolutely at their sweet will. I say that this has been a matter of great concern to the American shippers and to the London consignees for a number of years. Last year our State Department, at the instance of the American shippers, brought this London clause to the attention of our ambassador, who was instructed to make an investigation and to report to the State Department the facts and his conclusions and such recommendations as he saw fit to make.

Mr. Choate, in this report, says:

There is undoubtedly a discrimination as against flour from the United States and Canada in favor of flour coming to London from all other ports of the world. Flour is brought to London from many other ports of the world, and is landed and delivered from large steamers in much the same way, and whatever cost attaches to this mode of delivery is paid by the shipowner out of the freight, no such a clause as the London clause having been adopted.

Now, the discrimination growing out of this London clause exists not only to flour, it applies to lumber, it applies to grain, it applies to all classes of merchandise exported from the United States to the port of London, but, as Mr. Choate calls attention in his report, the fact is that this charge is not made against the products of any other country in the world shipped into the port of London, except the products of the United States and the products of Canada.

Again Mr. Choate says:

Whether the charge of 1 shilling 9 pence now made on flour for the cost of handling it until actual delivery to the consignee's barge is a proper one does not, in my judgment, depend upon the actual cost of the labor so incurred being more or less than the charge so made. It depends upon an ulterior inquiry of much broader scope than any which I have power to make, viz, whether, taking the freight and charges in the bill of lading together, the North Atlantic lines running to London by their combined action by means of this London clause—which shippers and consignees can neither resist nor control—are exacting from them more than a reasonable profit for the carriage and delivery of their goods.

The shippers and the consignees, as testified here by Ambassador Choate, are absolutely at the mercy of the steamship companies in regard to this provision in contract of shipment. They must either accept this bill of lading contained in the London clause or not ship their goods to the port of London.

Then Mr. Choate goes on to say:

The mere ascertainment and exposure, under the authority of Congress, of such an unjust exaction, if it exists, would probably go far toward a cure of the evil.

If this ulterior question should be decided in the negative and it should be found that these great steamship lines are not using their united power to exact more from the shippers and consignees for the carriage and delivery of their goods than is fair and just, the only question that would remain for Congress to determine is one of method—whether the convenience of commerce requires that by an amendment to the Harter law, or other suitable enactment, all shipowners should be forbidden to insert in the bill of lading any charge in addition to freight for the discharge and delivery of the goods. Of course, such an enactment would in all probability be immediately followed by an increase of the freight to London by the 1s. 9d. now charged for this item, or a greater amount.

There are obvious advantages in the old rule that the freight named in the bill of lading should cover all charges for the carriage and delivery of the goods. The shippers and consignees have added to their protests against the extra charge the request, from time to time made to the shipowners, to include it in the freight, but this the steamship companies have steadily refused. They appeal to the long continuance of the present system of charging since 1888, and to their belief that such an amendment of the Harter Act would be a serious blow to the trade with London, affecting not only the shipowners, but also the American shippers and London receivers.

It might well be that in the event of its being found that the shipowners, by their combined action, are exacting from shippers and consignees by means of the London clause more than a fair and reasonable profit for the carriage and delivery of their goods, such an amendment of the Harter Act would have a wholesome effect in restraining the combined companies from imposing an extravagant freight, made up of the total freight and charges, and thereby themselves inviting a competition which now seems inevitable.

Competition by reason of the London clause being incorporated in the contract of shipment, Mr. Choate tells us, is impossible. Now, let me call attention to another fact on the ulterior question to which Mr. Choate refers in his report. He says it is for Congress to investigate as to whether or not these charges are exorbitant. That investigation has taken place before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. And in the report in favor of this bill I find the following, taken from the New York Produce Exchange for 1901, giving the freight rates from New York to London, Liverpool, and Glasgow during 1900.

How can we ascertain whether or not the charges added to the freight constitute an exorbitant charge for the carrying of merchandise from the North Atlantic ports to the port of London? I find that the general average freight for the year 1900 from New York to London was $4.16¼ a ton, and to Liverpool $3.21¼ per ton, and to Glasgow $3.40 a ton. Now, with the London charge on flour of 1 shilling and 9 pence added, or 42 cents per ton added to the freight on the flour, the rate per ton to London during 1900 was $4.58, or $1.27 per ton more than to Liverpool and $1.18¼ per ton more than to Glasgow, and the freight charge to Liverpool and Glasgow includes the expense incident to the unloading of the cargoes at those ports on the quay.

Mr. WACHTER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. Just one moment, and I will yield to the gentleman. Now, it also appears that some of these vessels sailing between New York and London carried freight of twelve to fourteen thousand tons; so that a vessel carrying 14,000 tons from New York to London receives $19,180 more on its cargo than if it delivered the cargo at Liverpool and $16,220 more that if the cargo is delivered at Glasgow.

The difference in distance is practically the only additional expense incurred by the shipper as between New York and the three points named. The difference in distance is as follows: From New York to London, 3,740 miles; from New York to Liverpool, 3,540 miles; from New York to Glasgow, 3,375 miles. In one case the difference is 200 miles; in the other 365 miles; and for this difference in distance they receive $19,000 for carrying the cargo.

Mr. WACHTER. Allow me to ask the gentleman this question. Is there any difference in this respect between the flour shipped to London and the flour shipped to these other points? Does not the shipper receive a greater amount for that shipped to London than for that shipped to other ports?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am unable to answer the gentleman's question as to what the flour sells for after delivery in the port of London.

Mr. WACHTER. I did not mean to ask what the flour sells for but what the cargo charges are—that the shipper on this side receives from the consignee.

Mr. TAWNEY. The difference in freight rates is 1 shilling 9 pence (42 cents) a ton.

Mr. WACHTER. What I want to know is whether that additional charge is not added to the cost of the flour when the flour is sold?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not; and it can not be as long as other countries are permitted to make their shipments into the port of London without the payment of these charges. Take a shipment of flour from France to Great Britain or London. Wheat is imported into France from the United States. There it is ground into flour and shipped to London; but the London landing charge incorporated in the contract of shipment from the United States to London is not paid on the flour coming from France to London.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to see whether I understand this proposition or not. As I understand, there are certain charges imposed by law or custom in the port of London in connection with the delivery of goods; and those charges are payable by the shipowner or the vessel carrying the goods. Is that so?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is made so by the law of Great Britain.

Mr. DALZELL. So that this bill is an attempt to prevent the shipowner from relieving himself from charges which by law he must pay, and making the party who ships the goods pay those charges. That is the purpose of the bill, as I understand. Now, does the gentleman think it is competent by legislation to limit the right of contract to that extent?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not correctly stated the proposition.

Mr. DALZELL. I asked the gentleman whether that was the correct construction of the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. The law of Great Britain requires these steamship companies to pay all the expense incident to the unloading of their vessels—incident to the shipment of the cargo and the delivery of the same on the quay, the dock, or over side to the lighter. By the law of Great Britain this expense is imposed upon him.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman give us the date of that law?

Mr. TAWNEY. The amendment was in 1894.

Mr. HEPBURN. What I want to know is the date of the English statute that you speak of. It is over three hundred years old, is it not?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is very old, I know.

Mr. HEPBURN. And it was adapted to the conditions existing when a vessel of 200 tons was an immense ship.

Mr. TAWNEY. I call the attention of the gentleman to the further fact that the law was amended in 1894, and this provision in regard to the payment of these charges was included in the amendatory act. So that it is not an antiquated law by any means.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me still further? Was not that amendment necessary because of certain prescriptive rights which had been enjoyed by lightermen for more than three hundred years, and because the English Parliament could not change the statute so as to alter those rights under it?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know whether the amendatory act was made necessary by reason of the prescriptive rights of these lighter owners, but I do know that since this London clause was incorporated into the contract of shipment—which has been only since 1888, since the custom of doing business at the port of London has changed—this law was amended and the provision which I have read was incorporated into the amendatory act imposing upon the shipowner or the shipmaster the payment of those charges which are incident to the unloading of the vessel. I have read that provision of the act.

Mr. DALZELL. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Is there anything in this bill that would prevent the shipowner from adding these charges to the freight charges?

Mr. TAWNEY. Nothing whatever. There is nothing in this bill that would prevent his charging or adding these charges, and they properly belong to the freight charge. The reason that the steamship companies are so vigorously protesting against the passage of this bill is the fact that they know that if this charge, which applies to the freight charge, is incorporated as a part of the freight rate, a great deal of it at times—all of it at other times—will be absolutely absorbed by the competition between the carriers of freight from the North Atlantic ports to the port of London.

That is why they are resisting the passage of this bill. Under this London landing clause they extract a part of the charge incident to the expense of carrying and delivering the cargo and put that in as a fixed charge in the contract of shipment. That part of the freight charge, therefore, does not enter into competition between carriers; that part of the charge is under the absolute control of the shipowner. He can make it whatever he chooses, and it is a fixed charge, inflexible, whereas if it was included in and constituted a part of the first charge, you gentlemen all can readily understand that at times all of it would be absorbed, at other times part of it would be absorbed, and perhaps at other times none of it would be absorbed in the competition for the carrying of goods from the North Atlantic ports to the port of London, and that is all we ask.

I say that this under common law is an expense which the carrier is bound to meet, and when he undertakes to carry my goods from one point to another, he necessarily undertakes to deliver those goods, and he also includes in the contract of carrying all of the expense incident, not only to the carrying, but to the delivery. In this case we contract on this side of the Atlantic for the carrying of freight to the port of London at a certain sum per ton. Our goods are carried to the port of London, but when they reach that port we have got to pay an additional charge to the shipowner in order to get that cargo out of the ships, notwithstanding the common-law rights of delivery, notwithstanding the statutory right of delivery in Great Britain. Every one of these steamships are incorporated under the laws of Great Britain.

They sail under the English flag. And when the representative of the steamship companies was asked by a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce why he did that, why they incorporated in England, why they sailed under the English flag, he replied: "Because it is more profitable for us to do that than it is to sail under the American flag." But, having incorporated under the laws of Great Britain, reaping the advantages that inure to them by reason of those laws, whereby their business is more profitable, then they come back onto the American shipper and seek to throw upon him burdens which, by the laws of the country under which they are incorporated, are imposed upon themselves. This, Mr. Speaker, is rank injustice, and it is a discrimination, I say, against the articles of the United States intended for shipment to the port of London, and should be prohibited by law.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman allow me a question for information? If a bill under consideration provides no method of preventing the shipowner from adding new charges to the freight charges of the shipper, by what method, then, does it propose to relieve the shipper?

Mr. TAWNEY. By the simple law of competition in the carrying of freight from the North Atlantic ports to the port of London. That is the only way it can be regulated.

Mr. VANDIVER. How is that competition secured by the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. It simply requires them to include this charge as a part of the freight for carrying. Well, that of course, if it is added, will necessarily increase the carrying price of freight from New York and other North Atlantic ports to the port of London. That of itself will invite competition, and in that competition the American shipper knows that these charges the greater part of the time will be absorbed in the freight.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me? I understood the gentleman to say there was a discrimination against American shippers. Does not this London clause and the law in London apply to shipments from all the world?

Mr. TAWNEY. The law does.

Mr. PAYNE. Requiring that this 1s. 9d. shall be paid by the shipowner from Russia or anywhere else?

Mr. TAWNEY. The law applies to goods shipped into London from any port in the world, but the London clause which is incorporated in the contract of shipment is only in the contracts for the carrying of goods from North Atlantic ports to the port of London.

Mr. PAYNE. Do not confuse the question.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not confused it. I have answered your question.

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the Russian shipowner have to pay this charge?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Choate says not.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I do not believe Mr. Choate does say so. Mr. Choate says it is not put in the Russian shipowner's contract, but that it may appear in the freight. He does not say whether it does or not.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me read what he says:

There is undoubtedly a discrimination against flour from the United States and Canada in favor of flour coming to London from other ports of the world.

Mr. PAYNE. I heard the gentleman read that and some other sentences.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is from Mr. Choate.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I heard the gentleman read something else from Mr. Choate in that connection. I am not able to get hold of the report. I have just got hold of the minority report. The views of the majority do not seem to be obtainable.

Mr. TAWNEY. I suppose the gentleman can find the views of the majority.

Mr. PAYNE. I say that I have the minority, but I have not been able to get the majority.

Mr. PEARRE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to read the balance of this, because it has been intimated that I was not fair in reading only a part of it.

Mr. PAYNE. What page is it on?

Mr. TAWNEY. Page 73.

Mr. PAYNE. Is that a hearing?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; it is Mr. Choate's report, printed in the hearings of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. PAYNE. I still am unable to get that.

Mr. TAWNEY (reading):

Flour is brought to London from many other ports of the world, and is landed and delivered from large steamers in much the same way, and whatever cost attaches to this mode of delivery is paid by the shipowners out of the freight, no such clause as the London clause having been adopted.

Now, if the charge is paid by the shipper from Russia or any other part of the world it is paid as a part of the freight, and it is open to competition in the carriage.

Mr. PAYNE. I am not making any dispute about that, but my point is that the vessel owner has to pay these charges.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course, the gentleman does not suppose that the vessel owners from Russia are so generous that they are paying these charges out of their own pockets and not recouping from the persons who pay the freight.

Mr. TAWNEY. That all depends on the amount of competition there is for the carrying of the goods from the other ports in the world to the port of London.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] filed the views of the minority upon this question. I do not know what other gentlemen there are here who desire to discuss it, whether members of that committee or not, and as this matter is now before the House and will come up the first thing whenever there is a call of committees, I would suggest that we adjourn now, so that the matter may be discussed when Mr. SHERMAN is here.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I see that among those signing the minority report are Mr. HEPBURN, Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio, and Mr. ADAMSON, all of whom are sitting in the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. There are plenty of gentlemen on the minority side of the committee who can take care of this proposition. I have no objection at all to the House adjourning, but I want to know what the parliamentary status of the bill will be on to-morrow in the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill under consideration will be the unfinished business when there is another call of committees. Each committee is entitled to two days if it has sufficient business, and this will be the unfinished business before the committee when there is another call.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I shall not consent to an adjournment, and I hope the matter can be disposed of this evening.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Minnesota reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. Before putting the motion of the gentleman from New York, the Chair will submit a request from the Senate.

RETURN OF CERTAIN BILLS TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, April 22, 1902.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4469) extending the time for the completion of a wagon-motor bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., as provided by an act approved June 3, 1896, and as extended by the act approved January 27, 1900.

Also the following:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, April 22, 1902.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 4663) to authorize the Shreveport Bridge and Terminal Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Red River, in the State of Louisiana, at or near Shreveport.

The SPEAKER. These requests will be granted, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. PATTERSON of Pennsylvania until May 1, on account of important business.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 305. An act providing for a monument to mark the site of the Fort Phil Kearny massacre; and

S. 3449. An act to establish an additional land office in the State of Montana.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 12346, known as the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, asks unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the river and harbor bill and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Chair announces the following conferees: Mr. BURTON, Mr. REEVES, and Mr. LESTER.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the conclusions reached after an investigation of the receipts and expenditures of the State of Texas on account of Greer County—to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. HOAR. A resolution comes over from yesterday, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire it to be taken up this morning?

Mr. HOAR. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HOAR, as follows:

Resolved, That when the Senate meets on Thursday, May 1, it shall be adjourned by the Presiding Officer until Monday, May 5, at 12 o'clock.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the resolution had better go to some standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. The Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALDRICH. It should be referred to either the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Rules for the purpose of ascertaining whether in view of the public business it is desirable to take an adjournment for that length of time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOAR. I spoke to a good many of the Senators who have charge of business which is about coming on, among them the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I believe that everyone to whom I spoke favored this resolution. I do not believe that it will result in prolonging the session one particle or in delaying one particle the coming to a vote of any pending measure. It was the universal practice to adjourn for half a week at about this time in the session until a very recent date, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] doubtless will remember.

I shall not press the resolution, of course, if any Senator who has important matters in his charge thinks it is unwise, but I think the Senate can vote upon it now.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the resolution had better go to some standing committee. I have been in the Senate not quite as long as the Senator from Massachusetts, but I have been here for twenty-two years, and such an adjournment as the Senator speaks of has never been taken since I have been in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I had not intended to take any special part in this debate, but there were some statements made yesterday which attracted my attention, and the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. PATTERSON] seems to me to be so proper that I would really like to know from the Senator who has the bill in charge what objection there can be to the amendment. It simply provides that if any railroad company other than those that are already provided for desires to use this depot and these tracks it may do it by making a proper arrangement with the railroad company, or, failing to make such arrangement, it may go into court.

I do not think any railroad company has any right to object to that provision; and if the Senator who has the bill in charge has any grounds for objection I wish he would state them. I myself can conceive of none unless it shall be admitted that we are preparing here to create a monopoly and give to these railroad companies or to this railroad company, more properly speaking, there being two in one, the absolute right to exclude and keep out of the city of Washington any other railroad which may desire in the future to come in.

I supposed it was one of those things which had escaped the notice of the committee, and that when the suggestion was made it would be accepted. I have heard up to the present time no reason why the amendment should not be accepted, and I understand that the committee are against it. I wish to know from the chairman whether that is a fact?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator from Colorado desires me to make an explanation as to the reason why the committee thought it was not wise to put on this amendment?

Mr. TELLER. That is what I should like to have, for I myself can not conceive of any reason. I have not such a vivid imagination that I can think up any objection to it, and I should like to hear what the objection is.

Mr. MCMILLAN. When the legislation that was passed a year and a half ago came up before us we considered this whole matter. In the House it was discussed very freely, but in the Senate it was not discussed. The intention was to take care of all the railroads entering the District of Columbia. The three Southern railroads, as well as the Baltimore and Ohio and the Baltimore and Potomac, were taken care of on terms satisfactory to them. These Southern roads and the Baltimore and Potomac were to come into one depot, which was to be placed on the Mall. Congress provided that the Baltimore and Ohio should build a new station on Delaware avenue and C streets, near where the present station is.

Now, that legislation has been passed. It is entirely satisfactory to the two railroad companies. They have not asked for any additional legislation. They do not want any additional legislation. They want to stay just where Congress put them a year and a half ago. But your committee, believing that it would be a great benefit and a great advantage to the District of Columbia as the national capital to have but one station here instead of two, and to get rid of the railroad tracks in the Mall, had this bill prepared on the general lines suggested by the committee. The technical portions of the bill were prepared by the railroad companies after consultation with the District engineers; then the bill was referred to the District Commissioners, who made suggestions touching the grades and streets, all of which were incorporated in the bill. Next the committee made amendments to protect the property owners and the Government.

If we amend the bill by allowing other roads to come in I am frank to say that I fear the whole matter will drop, and it is just as well to understand it so. The companies are to build this station and the terminals. If we compel them to open their tracks and their depot and to spend all this money, and give rights to unknown companies, I do not think they will be willing to do it. That is my judgment.

Now, that is the situation. We have asked the two railroad companies, the Baltimore and Ohio and the Baltimore and Potomac, which furnish the money, to do something which we think is to be of great benefit to the District of Columbia. They have agreed to do it. We had to work on them for three or four months to get them to consent to do this thing. Now we have accomplished it; but this amendment which, of course, seems on its face very fair, is not one that the railroad companies care to accept because they are to spend $10,000,000, and some new company could be started in New York or somewhere else and get up a prospectus stating that they have depot facilities in the city of Washington, and thus encourage an enterprise which might have no real foundation.

We all know that railroads do not want opposition. The fact is they are all getting together now, and I suppose the time will come when the Government will have to own all these railroads and then we can handle them just as we please; but now the railroad companies are getting into the hands of but one corporation; the whole trend is to consolidation; and this plan of ours is to have one railroad station which will take in every railroad now entering the District—the three roads from the South, the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Baltimore and Potomac. Now, that is the whole thing. They are not asking anything. We are asking it for them. That is the only explanation.

Mr. TELLER. It is a rather frank statement, I think, to say that the railroads will insist upon a monopoly, that they will insist upon allowing such railroads to come in as they have already suggested, and beyond that they will not go.

I am not myself willing to vote for a bill under those circumstances. I think the bill itself is an improper measure; but I would allow the matter, as far as I am concerned, to rest if there was a proposition that any railroad coming in here in the future might have the benefit of what we are giving to these railroad companies, because I think the public might be better served in some respects with this new scheme than with the old. But when we are told distinctly that this is to be a close corporation, and that there will be no power here in the Government of the United States or in the courts to provide for the use of this depot and these tracks that are crossing our streets, and for which the District government and the United States are paying a large amount of money, I am not willing to say that it shall not be done unless the railroad companies see fit to allow it to be done.

Mr. President, I do not know what the legislation was a year and a half ago. My attention was not called to it; but I do know that if it proceeded upon the basis that the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company own any interest in the Mall, which they cross in getting to their present Sixth Street depot, it was a fraud upon the Senate and a fraud upon the country, because they never have owned any title to it. They have never, that I ever heard of, until recently asserted any title or suggested that they had any title.

I have heard this matter discussed here, more or less, for twenty-five years. I recall very distinctly a discussion which came up here very early in my Senatorial service, in which it was admitted by everyone that they were there by sufferance and that we could move them off whenever we saw fit, and there was a strong feeling to make them retire and go back on the other side of the Mall and secure their own depot ground by purchase, like railroad companies usually do. During that debate no one ever suggested that they were entitled to hold the Mall against the will of Congress, or that they had anything but the right to occupy it during the pleasure of the Government of the United States.

The Senator from Michigan speaks as if the railroad company were being asked in this amendment to give to a new railroad company something. It is nothing of the kind. That is not proposed. It is proposed that they shall allow them to come in if they can agree; and if not, the court of justice here shall determine what compensation shall be rendered by the new road. I know not what new roads may want to come in. It can not be assumed, I think, that we have quit building railroads to the national capital. There will probably be some other railroads built here, and if they are built they ought to have the same privileges that we are now granting to these people, upon paying, of course, a proper compensation, and there can be no fairer way of determining that than by allowing the supreme court of the District to determine it.

If this amendment is not sufficiently guarded, if anyone thinks there ought to be some provision for the safety of the roads that is not in it, an amendment might be made to it. But I can see nothing myself in it that needs any amendment. No one has suggested that there is any defect in the text of the amendment, but we are simply told that the railroad companies do not want any competition and the railroad companies do not want to divide, not simply as to railroads that are to be hereafter built, but as to a railroad that is already built here and that would like to get in. If we have tied ourselves up, as the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia seems to indicate we have in his opinion done, to such an extent that we ought to get rid of it by some such law as this, it is quite within our power to repeal the act of a year and a half ago.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I was about to make an inquiry as to whether or not anything has been done under the act of a year and a half ago that gives this railroad such a vested right that we can not any longer act by legislation with respect to the matter.

Mr. TELLER. I guarantee that there has not been any, for there has not been anything done under the act, I understand.

Mr. FORAKER. That is my own understanding, and I do not know of any reason, therefore, why we are not at liberty to enforce a union depot, if we want it.

Mr. TELLER. We are proposing, of course, to repeal that act by this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I think it is proper I should say that the roads have not proceeded under that act for the reason that the Committee on the District of Columbia requested them to withhold action pending the consideration of a union station.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, when that act was passed these two railroads were not consolidated. The Baltimore and Ohio was then a distinct corporation, as it is to-day; but it is now the property of the Pennsylvania Railroad, which is the owner, and has been for many years, of the Baltimore and Potomac road.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me again to interrupt him, I will call his attention to the fact that section 17, which is the last section of the act of February 12, 1901, provides that "Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act." That would be a right reserved by Congress which we could legitimately exercise, although they had proceeded to make improvements under the act as was then contemplated.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is always reserved.

Mr. FORAKER. I know it is always reserved. It is not different in this case, but it is well enough, in view of the statement made by the Senator having the bill in charge, to draw attention to the fact that we are not powerless to deal with this matter.

Mr. TELLER. There is not any question but that we have ample power to deal with the matter. I should like to discuss the subject further, but I have difficulty with my throat this morning, which prevents me from saying more. I can not continue the discussion, but I hope the Senate will not allow the bill to be passed without taking proper steps to see that in the future the interest of the Government and the interest of the public are fully protected. That can not be done as the bill now stands, unless a general clause in the bill that Congress may modify or repeal the act, which I suppose is in, might allow it to be done. Now is the time to do it. I suppose the railroad companies will do what Congress declares they have got to do, because if they do not their tracks might be removed and they might be compelled to select a place for a station and to pay all the expenses themselves. I do not think the railroad companies have the Government of the United States by the throat, by any means. When this matter is presented properly to the railroad company or to the leading men of that great corporation, one of the greatest in the United States, I should doubt very much whether they would be so unwise as to object to the provision which has been offered as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I thought yesterday, when this bill came up, of proposing such an amendment as has been proposed by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], but on reflection it seemed to me that it was of no practical importance whatever, and that it was hardly worth while to put it in the bill. The principle of the amendment is undoubtedly a sound and wise principle. It is the principle which prevails in my own State, and I suppose in most other States, that when any railroad has the right of eminent domain either to lay a track or to build a station, the legislative power may compel it to allow other roads, where the public interest requires, to enter upon the track and use it under a proper regulation, to have their cars conveyed, or to enter and use the station. Now, that is all right.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. PATTERSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the bill provides that the occupant railroad company may allow other railroad companies to enter on these approaches to this depot by agreeing with them. It is a right or a privilege that is conferred practically upon the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to allow other railroads to enter.

Mr. HOAR. That is the Senator's speech. I was making mine.

Mr. PATTERSON. I simply wanted to make that clear to the Senator, in order that he might direct his attention to this proposition, that having expressly conferred upon the Pennsylvania Railroad Company the right to allow other railroads to enter, and only in that method, is it not a very grave question whether any subsequent legislation could modify that right conferred by this bill?

Mr. HOAR. That is precisely what I was about to state. I had not overlooked the Senator's suggestion. I was making the preliminary statement of what I supposed to be the general policy in such cases in this country, and a just and wise policy.

Mr. President, it does not seem to me to be necessary or worth while to put anything in this bill which is not in it now, as I think it secures everything that ought to be secured. These railroad companies have got certain rights by the legislation of two years ago, and they are satisfied. That legislation of two years ago provides just what this bill does, that Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act. That is in the new bill as it is in the old act.

This new bill is one which had its origin in a suggestion from the Committee on the District of Columbia, that although the railroad companies may be satisfied with the bill of two years ago, it will be a great deal better for the public to have one station instead of two, and to have this great and magnificent building which is to be of greater length, I think, than the Capitol, built by the joint action of the railroad companies, for the ornamentation and convenience of this capital.

The only difference between the bill if amended as the Senator from Colorado proposes and without the amendment is that under the amendment any railroad company that wants to go in may go to the supreme court of the District of Columbia and get leave as of right, while without it Congress has the right, under this repeal clause and under its power of eminent domain, when it passes a law authorizing a new railroad to go where it does not go now, to give permission to such a railroad to enter that depot, and the courts or some public officer shall assess the damages. In other words, the only question is whether this shall be an absolute right to be enforced by the courts in all cases without the further assent of Congress or whether it is a right which Congress has the power to confer hereafter under its general power of eminent domain or under special authority reserved in the final sections of both bills.

Whenever a railroad goes to that depot or goes through the streets of Washington to get there, it will be necessary to get an act of Congress to do it. There is no power to do it now. When Congress grants the power to do it in the future, it must then determine whether the railroad shall be authorized to go into this depot, the damages to the other railroads to be assessed and the details arranged by the court or by some board of public officers. I do not think the courts are a very good tribunal to attend to such matters. If we had a board of railroad commissioners, that would be a better tribunal to determine the convenience of the public in the matter of depots and the occupation of streets; but as we do not have a board of railroad commissioners, the Commissioners of the District are a better tribunal than the courts. If it is not thought proper to confer the authority on the District Commissioners, the Department of the Interior, through such agencies as it shall select—practical railroad experts—is a better tribunal than the courts; but at any rate you will have to get an act of Congress on the subject. If this bill passes with the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, we tie up Congress by having a jurisdiction in the District supreme court; and if the amendment does not pass, Congress may then do what it thinks reasonable. So I have surrendered and abandoned my purpose to support the amendment for that reason.

Mr. TILLMAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. As I understand the reading of the act of February 12, 1901, there are no vested rights in these railroad companies that Congress can not amend or alter.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly not.

Mr. TILLMAN. In other words, the railroads have nothing——

Mr. HOAR. And they have not in this bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, I know; but the Senator, as I understood him, said that the railroad companies already possessed all they wanted.

Mr. HOAR. I did not say any such thing. I beg the Senator's pardon, if I spoke too earnestly. So far as I am aware, I did not say any such thing as that.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will call the Senator's attention, if he will permit me, to the rule which he called down on the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] yesterday. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. What is that?

Mr. TILLMAN. I was just going to remark that the Senator had introduced a certain rule and called the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] to it yesterday, and I was about to suggest that the Senator had better be careful or he would break the rule himself.

Mr. HOAR. In what respect?

Mr. TILLMAN. In what you just said to me.

Mr. HOAR. What did I say to the Senator?

Mr. TILLMAN. You contradicted me flatly, which I think was conduct "unbecoming a Senator."

Mr. HOAR. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. TILLMAN. I grant it. I do not intend to get into an unnecessary wrangle about it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I will agree that the Senator from South Carolina is an expert in the particular matter of which he is talking, but I do not understand that when a Senator says to me that I have said something, and I reply that I did not say any such thing, and before the sentence was over I added "and I beg the Senator's pardon; perhaps I stated that too emphatically," that that statement of mine should be compared with a statement that Senators had skulked and slunk out of the Chamber. If the Senator from South Carolina thinks it should, I will yield to his authority and go on with my statement.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me a word right there?

Mr. HOAR. I think I would rather have the Senator wait until I get through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts declines to be interrupted.

Mr. HOAR. I do not care about entering into a discussion of my own propriety of speech.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts declines to yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOAR. I have done my best.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to say again whenever any railroad wants to go into that depot or cross the streets of the city or share in the advantages which the depot will afford, it has got to get an act of Congress; and when that act of Congress shall pass, it will undoubtedly be within the power of Congress, first, because the present proposed statute affirms the power to alter, amend, or repeal the law, and next, without any legislation they have the right to do that under their power of eminent domain.

The only question is, therefore, when we are asking these railroad companies to give up something we have undertaken to give them and consent to something at our request, we had better settle now the question whether the supreme court of the District shall be the tribunal to fix all the arrangements to be made in that complicated transaction or whether we had better leave the enabling act to provide that or some other tribunal of the kind. That is all there is of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am sorry the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] should be so sensitive. I did not intend a moment ago in calling attention to his rather emphatic and, under certain circumstances, more or less insulting rejoinder to my utterance, to imply that the Senator intended anything discourteous. I had no desire to get into a wrangle with him or to raise any issue with him. It occurred, though, to my mind that as he is a stickler for good order and decorous language and Senatorial courtesy and dignity and all that kind of thing, he ought to set us youngsters a very high example. Ordinarily, I will say, the Senator does set us an example, which all of us might imitate with profit if we were able to do so, but I have noticed that the Senator habitually, I might say, breaks certain rules of this body—habitually—almost every time he gets on his feet, and while he does not do it in any undignified way or with any desire to show discourtesy or to obstruct discussion in the Senate, he ought to make allowances for the rest of us who have our foibles and shortcomings. That was all I desired to direct attention to, and I was not intending in any way to offend the Senator or to give him any cause for anger or to shut me off arbitrarily, as he did, or anything of that kind.

There is in regard to this matter which we have under discussion this phase—either the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] or some one in that neighborhood—possibly it might have been the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] who was gyrating out of his orbit a moment ago—said something of that kind. But possibly I had better withdraw that language as being "unworthy of a Senator" or undignified.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from South Carolina ought at least to specify which Senator from Ohio was "gyrating out of his orbit." I do not know what he means by that very unusual expression—"gyrating out of his orbit."

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, your orbit is over here on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh!

Mr. TILLMAN. And being on that side of the Chamber—not that the Senator does not frequently go there during the discussions in this body—if I remember aright, either the Senator from Massachusetts said there were certain rights already vested in these two railroad companies and that they had already what they wanted—but the Senator from Colorado now suggests to me that it was not the Senator from Ohio who made the remark to which I have referred, but some one in his neighborhood——

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from South Carolina was so occupied in watching the gyrations of the Senator from Ohio, who was outside of his orbit, that he did not notice what the Senator from Ohio said. If the Senator referred to any remarks made by me, they were practically directly the opposite of what he has indicated.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do I understand the Senator, then, supposing that I have located it wrongly or misunderstood it, to contend that these railroads have no right now that Congress can not take away or alter or change? In other words, am I to understand that there is nothing vested; that they have done nothing which would leave us as a body and as a Congress subject to the rules of equity to do justice to these people should we change the law of 1901?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the remark I made was more in the nature of an inquiry than an assertion. The inquiry I made was directed to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I was endeavoring to ascertain whether or not anything had been done under the act of 1901 that had given to these railroads such vested rights that we could not equitably and in good conscience repeal, alter, or amend the law that was then enacted. It is my opinion that we ought, if possible, to enforce a union depot. We do not want as many stations as there may be railroads desiring to come into Washington. I favored the legislation of 1901, because we were consolidating into two depots all the terminal facilities of this city, and I was gratified when there seemed an opportunity to consolidate the two into one, as this bill provides.

I shall regret exceedingly if there is anything standing in the way of such legislation as will enforce the entrance into that union depot of all the railroads that may come into this city. I simply wanted to know, interrupting the Senator from Colorado, who I thought was informed on the subject, whether or not anything had been done under that act to give a vested right which would stand in the way of our so legislating as proposed by the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], which amendment seemed to me to be equitable and just.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then, Mr. President, I must have misunderstood the language of some one in the neighborhood of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will allow me to repeat what I said.

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure, always.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I said that Congress had the perfect control over this subject for two reasons, and will have it after this bill shall have been passed: The first is the power of eminent domain and the second is because we reserve the power to alter, amend, or repeal both laws.

I said that the railroad companies had got what legislation they wanted two years ago, and this bill proposes to change it for the public benefit, without any regard to the desires or interests of the railroad companies, not that they have got such rights as they wanted or that they have vested rights that could not be enforced.

The Senator from South Carolina rose and said, as I understood him, that I had said that the railroads had got vested rights which we could not take from them. To that I replied, "I did not say any such thing," but immediately added when I made that statement, "Perhaps I stated that too emphatically."

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator makes that assertion or apology, or whatever he may term it, it is perfectly satisfactory to me. I have no desire to get into any contention with him, other than one that is pleasant and respectful, and his disclaimer is therefore entirely satisfactory.

The thing that I do not understand is, why it is that we should defer action in doing a desirable thing. I do not think anybody here will contend seriously that in legislating for a union depot and final settlement of the question of railroad entrance into this city we ought not to safeguard the interests and the rights of any railroad built in the future which may want to have the benefit of this entrance. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado only provides for something that is a very remote contingency, something that is not at all likely to happen, because, as the Senator from Massachusetts well said, no railroad can even get into the District without a charter from Congress; and Congress, when it grants such charter, would necessarily designate the streets and the lines that the railroad should take.

I want to call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the fact that the passing through this body of a charter of that character will be much more difficult in the future, when this monopoly which is created by this bill shall once get its grasp upon the transportation facilities here, than it will be if we put into this bill a general provision looking to a possibility or a contingency which may arise, and which when it arises will be met, if we are asked for a new charter, by the united opposition of all these corporations which now have this proposed scheme under way. Therefore, I do not understand why the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia and the members of that committee and the Senate in general should object, and, in fact, should not enforce this general provision, which, as I said, is a remote contingency, resting solely upon the possibility, not the probability, that in the future, in the next twenty, fifty, or hundred years, there may be such a condition that it will be desirable that some other railroad should enter the city and enjoy the facilities of this union depot.

We know perfectly well we are never going to have any other union depot in this city but the one now proposed, and I confess that I do not see why Congress should stand here and be called to a halt or be held up, so to speak, by this proposed monopoly with the threat, which was uttered by the chairman of the committee who presented this bill, that if we did not let this bill stay just as it is and not amend it with these great donations of money and of rights of way and other things which, in the language of the Senator from Colorado, amount to several million dollars—I say I do not understand why we should not now fix this general law, dealing with terminal facilities in this District in a way that will safeguard the interests of any future railroads that may want to enter.

With the rapid consolidation now going on in railroading, the absorption of the little roads by the big ones, the constant Morganizing, I may say, of our transportation facilities, it is not probable that there will be a body of capitalists who will have the temerity to undertake to enter into competition with this combination; but if it should come to pass, why should not such a railroad as may be seeking to get into the city, instead of having to come here to get a special act passed for its benefit, be allowed, under the general law, to go to the courts—to the Supreme Court of the United States, if you please, as the Senator found fault with the supreme court of the District, and specified several other bodies that were more desirable in that view as arbitrators of this matter, to settle finally what should be the conditions upon this new putative or expected or anticipated road should enter? I do not see, if it is objectionable to give the jurisdiction to the supreme court of the District, why we should not give it to the Supreme Court of the United States direct, without any intermediary step. Therefore, it appears to me, Mr. President, this amendment is so eminently proper and wise that I can not see for the life of me why any man should object to it.

I hope I have been guilty of no discourtesy to my fellow-Senators who do not agree with me in that. I do not want to tread on anybody's toes here.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, when this bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia the statement was made in the public prints that the Committee on the District of Columbia was unanimous in favor of it. I think I may call on the chairman of the committee to confirm me in the statement I make to the effect that there was at least one member of that committee who was not in favor of the bill, and that member was myself. I speak only for myself.

Mr. President, I am against this bill for reasons entirely apart and altogether different from those stated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] yesterday. I am for the amendment presented by the Senator from Colorado for the reasons which he then stated.

If the Pennsylvania Railroad were a young, struggling enterprise and needed the assistance of the Government of the United States, I would willingly give my vote toward a subsidy for the enterprise which is proposed in this bill; but it is a well-known fact that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is one of the richest corporations in this country. It is also a well-known fact, I believe, that it recently absorbed the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and that the purpose of this union depot here is simply to fix the railroad facilities for Washington hereafter so that there will be but one road running into the city of Washington, the capital of the United States.

I have said that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is not a pauper company; that it is not a young and struggling company, or enterprise, or corporation. It is strong and vigorous and wealthy. Its stock to-day on the market is worth $150 for a full share.

Mr. President, my idea of a Government subsidy—and when I speak of a subsidy in connection with this bill I refer to the fact that we are here appropriating practically about $5,000,000 toward this enterprise—my idea of a Government subsidy is that when it is given it should be for the benefit of some struggling enterprise, some enterprise which is going to be beneficial to the country and which needs the subsidy, which needs the help proposed; but in this case the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is far better able to construct this depot and build the approaches to it and build a tunnel through this Capitol Hill to reach it than the Government of the United States is able to give the company $5,000,000, because the securities of this railroad company in proportion are worth more than the securities of the Government of the United States. So that it is not a pauper institution; it is not an institutiou which requires the aid of the Government or of the States. It is far beyond that period and is able to stand alone.

There was something said here yesterday about what other States do in cases of this kind. I do not know what the State of New Hampshire does particularly or what the State of New York does, but we should draw a line, it seems to me, between the city of New York and the city of Washington. Washington is not a commercial city; it is an official city. There is no competition here as there is in New York. The business enterprise of New York and the business men of New York can very well afford doubtless to give great sums of money for additional railway facilities, but why should the city of Washington do it—a city that is almost wholly dependent upon Government appropriations for its support.

In my own section of country in the Northwest I never knew of a railroad company asking the State to build a depot for its purpose. In the city of St. Paul and in the city of Minneapolis the railroad companies, as I understand, have built their own depots.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from North Dakota permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am sure the Senator, Mr. President, does not want to misrepresent that matter.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Of course I do not.

Mr. GALLINGER. When he talks about cities building railroad depots, by inference asserting that there is a proposition in the pending bill that the United States Government and the District of Columbia shall contribute something for that purpose, I wish to say that there is absolutely nothing in the bill which authorizes a statement of that kind. The United States Government and the District of Columbia, under the laws passed last year, made donations of $5,000,000 for the purpose of eliminating grade crossings in the city of Washington. That amount is included in this bill. In addition to that there is an appropriation to build a plaza in front of the station for the ornamentation of the city of Washington. Not a single cent is donated for the purpose of constructing the station.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I am aware of the fact which the Senator states, that there is no specific appropriation in this bill for a depot. We are all aware of that fact, but it is true, nevertheless, that under the legislation of two years ago, which is confirmed by this proposed act, and under the additional sums appropriated by this bill, the railroad company—and I speak now of one company, because there is but one company in Washington—will in the end receive about $5,000,000 from the Government, and from the District a much larger sum—but from the Government of the United States about $5,000,000.

Mr. President, it matters not whether that money is spent for a depot or for grade crossings, or for a tunnel through Capitol Hill. It goes into the coffers of the company, whose stock is much above par. There ought to be enough patriotism in that company, which has fared well at the hands of the American Congress, which has done well in coming to Washington and in now controlling the railroad business of Washington, to build a depot itself and to put in these improvements. I do not hesitate to say that if any other enterprise in this country whose stock is worth a hundred and fifty-one or a hundred and fifty-two dollars a share had the opportunity to come here and receive the benefits which the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is receiving at the hands of the people of Washington and at the hands of the Government of the United States it would gladly put in these improvements.

In the report of the committee I observe an array of figures which it is very difficult to comprehend. The Senator from Michigan, the chairman of the committee, stated this morning that the bill was first submitted to the railroad company. I doubt if any lawyer here can read this bill through and thoroughly understand it. We might find the traditional Philadelphia lawyer able to do it. Indeed, I have no doubt that the bill was drawn by that traditional Philadelphia lawyer. But in the report I see some figures to the effect that the railroad company itself is going to expend about $14,000,000. That might be considered an inducement for the Government of the United States to put its hands in its pocket and give $5,000,000, but who will know whether this railroad company expends that amount of money or not? Who will know anything about it? Only the railroad company, of course.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLAN. I will say to the Senator from North Dakota that the railroad company in every case has presented the figures to the engineer of the District of Columbia, and every one of those figures has been gone over with very great care; and, while they may not be perfectly accurate, I have no doubt the figures are correct to a very close fraction.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. We are obliged to take the statements of the company, as we have been obliged to take the bill which has been presented to or drawn by them.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think I stated very clearly this morning that the bill was drawn and first presented to the railroad company because it is a technical bill. It is a bill which could not be drawn by anybody unless he understood the streets and alleys and avenues of the city. It had to be drawn by engineers. It was then submitted to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. It was gone over with great care by the Commissioners and by the engineers and then gone over by the committee. It certainly has had the greatest care and attention. We have been at it for months. There was a subcommittee which went over it and gave hearings. Certainly the bill has been drawn with great care.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I understand that the Senator has given a good deal of attention to this bill. In fact, he has devoted a very large part of this session to it. I give him credit for his industry. So far as I am concerned, I have not had the opportunity to go over the bill as I should like to, but I have read enough of it to warrant me in saying, after an examination of the report and from my knowledge of the general situation in Washington, that I would not be justified in giving my vote to the bill. I so stated in the committee. I so state now. I think I know sufficient of the situation to warrant me in saying that I will vote for the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON], for the reason that while we are now legislating on the subject I do not believe it is proper for us for all time to say that no other line shall be built to this city; and if we are building a union depot, and if the Government of the United States is putting its hand into its pocket to pay for it, I maintain that any company which has the enterprise and the money to put into a railroad to come to Washington ought to be allowed to enter the union depot, which is practically built by the Government. For that reason I will vote for the amendment, and I think if the amendment is adopted I shall then vote against the bill.

I started to say something about the railroads in the Northwestern States when I was interrupted. I referred to the fact that when the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern and the Soo road want facilities of this kind in any of the Northwestern cities they build them themselves out of their own pockets. I referred to the fact that in Minneapolis and St. Paul the three railroad companies which come in there have put up their own depots. All they asked was the ground to put them on. In the capital of my own State, the Northern Pacific road recently constructed a magnificent depot. They did not ask a dollar from the city or the State. They themselves put in the money. Over on the Pacific coast, in the city of Seattle, where two great railroads have their termini, all they ask is sufficient water front for right of way and a depot. They are not asking the city of Seattle, which is a most enterprising place, for a single dollar to help them to build a depot.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from North Dakota allow me?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to say to the Senator from North Dakota, that neither the Pennsylvania Railroad Company nor the Baltimore and Ohio is asking for one cent to build the depot. The depot is to be paid for out of the pockets of the railroads. The union depot, costing $5,000,000, is to be paid for entirely by the railroad companies. Not one cent will be paid or contributed toward it by the Government.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. As I said a moment ago, it makes no difference where go our $5,000,000, which is given toward the enterprise, whether they put it into the depot or into the grade crossings or into the tunnel. I say the company itself is amply able to put in this improvement, instead of coming here as if it were in dire need and asking the Government of the United States to help it out. That is my point. Whether the railroad puts it into a depot or wherever it goes, it is a bonus, it is a subsidy, an appropriation by the Government of the United States, and it is that to which I object. I say that the business of the city of Washington, which has been enjoyed by this railroad company, is sufficient to warrant it, and it ought to have patriotism enough to induce it, it seems to me, to put in this improvement. That is the only point I care to make, and this is all I have to say on the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] surprises me very much in the statements he has just made. He says that if the Pennsylvania Railroad were a poor road he might give his vote for the subsidy proposed in this bill. The Senator did give his vote a little over one year ago for every dollar of subsidy proposed in this bill to the Pennsylvania Railroad and to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The Senator must have seen new light since then, which I can not quite understand. The amount proposed to be given to the consolidated road under this bill for the elimination of grade crossings in Washington is identical with the amount in the two bills that were passed a year and a half ago. The only additional item is for the building of a plaza in front of the station, an improvement belonging to the Government and the District of Columbia which the railroad company has not asked to have made, and I take it the railroad does not care much whether it is made or not.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the Senator allow me to correct him if I am correctly informed?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. The figures I used yesterday were those I took from the Saturday Evening Star, which contained nearly a page purporting to give the figures by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. In addition to the money, $3,000,000, and $1,800,000 to be expended by the Government of the United States for other purposes, the article then gave the value of the real estate that was given to each of the roads in the bills in the last Congress. Let me read what it says:

To summarize the above, the value of public property in addition to present occupation with deductions for such as is restored to the public use, is as follows (the prices per square foot being either those used in previous reports and estimates or, where such are not found, being arrived at by careful analogous determination):

Under the act of February 12, 1901, in relation to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, $1,374,000; in relation to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, $1,138,610; total, $2,512,610.

Under pending bill there is an occupation in common by both railroads of portions of public space, giving a total of $1,454,521.

It shows that by this bill a million and a half of real estate is given to the joint company that was not given to either of the independent companies by the act of the last Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not agree with the Senator in the figures he has given. The fact is that under the legislation of two years ago we made a grant of land to these companies. I do not know whether or not the present site, whereon stands the Baltimore and Potomac station, was absolutely granted to that company by the legislation of last year, but it is certain we did not give them a grant to construct an entirely new station on it, and it is not at all probable that we are going to dispossess them, if we have the power to do so, in the near future.

We gave a grant of land to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. I do not know to what extent. But now, under the present bill, the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company are going to vacate the land we gave them, if we did give it to them. We certainly gave them the occupancy of it, which they now propose to vacate, and they agree to construct a union station on land that certainly will not cost more than was granted to them under the law of a year and a half ago.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator says they are going to vacate the land we gave them last year, but he neglects to state that we are going to give them one million and a half of dollars for the land.

Mr. GALLINGER. I stated that two or three times yesterday, and it is not necessary for me to restate it, and I said yesterday that the land will be approximately worth $3,000,000 the moment it is given back to the Government, and there is no question about it.

The Senator from North Dakota inquired why Washington should make a contribution for the elimination of grade crossings. For ten years the press and the people of Washington have been thundering their anathemas against Congress for not getting rid of the dangerous grade crossings that are in this city, and I know of no reason why the city of Washington should not make a contribution as well as the other cities of this country to the elimination of grade crossings.

Washington is not a poor city. Washington receives an enormous amount of money which goes into ready circulation by the army of those in official employment in the city, and Washington pays less in taxes than any other city in the United States. Some Senator may say that the Star, which has been quoted here to-day, controverts that statement, but the fact is that the people of Washington pay practically nothing by way of a personal tax, and the property holders here pay a rate of one and a half per cent on their real estate, which is valued for taxation purposes at 65 per cent of its real value. There is no other city in the United States which pays so small a tax as that, and I know of no reason why the District of Columbia should not make a contribution to this most important public improvement.

The Senator from North Dakota says he does not know what has been done in other States. I will tell him what has been done in some American cities and by some States to get rid of grade crossings. The city of Philadelphia paid $1,020,000 for the elimination of the grade crossings on the Philadelphia and Trenton Railroad alone, by five separate ordinances which were passed by the city government of Philadelphia—$1,020,000 for the elimination of grade crossings on an inconsequential railroad entering the city of Philadelphia.

The city of New Haven paid one-half of the cost of carrying the steam railroad tracks over East Chapel street.

By special act of the legislature of Massachusetts, providing for a change of grades, etc., on the Providence division of the Pennsylvania Railroad in the city of Boston, 55 per cent was paid by the railroad company and 45 per cent by the Commonwealth, the city of Boston being required to refund the State 30 per cent of the whole cost.

For similar changes in Brockton, Mass., including new stations, yards, tracks, etc., the railroad company paid 65 per cent, the State 25 per cent, and Brockton 10 per cent.

Brockton is a small city in the State of Massachusetts.

The law of the State of Massachusetts now provides that no matter from which side an application is made to abolish grade crossings 65 per cent shall be paid by the railroad company, 25 per cent by the State, and 10 per cent by the municipality.

A recent law of the State of New York divides the cost of abolishing grade crossings as follows: Fifty per cent by the railroad company, 25 per cent by the State, and 25 per cent by the municipality.

In a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, dated October 16, 1899, Mr. William Jackson, city engineer of Boston, states that in a special case involving an expenditure of $4,000,000, the State and the city of Boston paid 45 per cent (of which the city assumed 13.5 per cent) and the railroad company paid 55 per cent.

In a letter dated October 17, 1899, Mr. G. S. Webster, chief engineer of Philadelphia, states that in the construction of the Pennsylvania avenue subway, whereby 16 grade crossings were abolished, involving an expenditure of $3,000,000, the city paid one-half and the Philadelphia and Reading Railway Company paid the other one-half.

These are sample cases, and many others might be cited.

The Senator from North Dakota says that is not the custom in the West. I do not know how that may be, and yet the Senator gave away his argument when he said that in St. Paul all the railroad company demanded was a site on which to construct its station. I do not know the difference between a contribution of land and a contribution in money. He says that in the city of Seattle, a small city, as we all know, and a city that has not been very prosperous of late years, all the railroad demanded was the privilege of the water front. That may be an enormous privilege. It may be a privilege almost beyond computation. I do not know how valuable it is. But the Senator's illustrations show that in both the city of St. Paul and the city of Seattle subsidies have been given to corporations for making improvements, and those improvements seem to be the construction of stations and not the elimination of grade crossings, and for that reason much less defensible than the provisions of the bill under consideration.

Mr. President, I do not care to detain the Senate more than a few moments longer in discussing this matter.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator ought not to put that interpretation on what I said. I did not say that the roads had received contributions for the construction of depots. I said just the contrary. They have received no contributions for the construction of depots. The railroad companies themselves built the depots. So far as I know, all they ever have asked is simply a site, and in the capital of my own State they furnished the site themselves. The Senator ought not to say the city of Seattle is not a prosperous city. It is one of the most prosperous cities in the United States. It is one of the most vigorous and go-ahead places I ever visited, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no disposition to misrepresent the Senator or to underestimate the importance of the city of Seattle, and I am glad to know that that city is prosperous. It is a mere matter of splitting words, if not hairs, when the Senator claims that the contribution of a site to a railroad company on which it shall construct a station is not a gift to the railroad company for constructing that station. It must be so patent to every other Senator that it is a contribution of that kind that I will not stop to discuss it.

The chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia has given ten years of valuable study to the question of railroad terminal facilities in the city of Washington, and the committee itself has given days, weeks, and months to an investigation of this subject. It has been a long and tedious process. The citizens have demanded that certain improvements shall be made; the press has demanded it; and the committee responded to that demand and thought it a very desirable thing to accomplish, if it was possible of accomplishment.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire, for information only, to be informed by the Senator what ojection has the committee to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say in reply to the interrogatory of the honorable Senator from Alabama that the committee has never had an opportunity to consider it.

Mr. PETTUS. Then, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I will ask the Senator what objection he has to the amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will get to that, and possibly I may not state any objection to it before I get through.

Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia stated the matter accurately when he said that the railroads, or the railroad, if you choose to call it one corporation, had made no request and had asked for no favors at the hands of Congress at this session. We did have two bills before us during the last Congress dealing with the question of terminal facilities for the two roads, which were enacted into law. As I understand the matter, the railroads are quite content to let it rest where it is. The committee asked the railroads not to proceed under those acts until an attempt was made to secure a union station, which they kindly consented to do, and for that reason no work has been done under the legislation of a year and a half ago.

In reference to the amendment to which the Senator from Alabama kindly called my attention, I will say that no man or corporation appeared before the Committee on the District of Columbia advocating an amendment of that kind. It never was considered by the committee, and the committee were unaware of the fact that any such privilege was desired. The bill under consideration follows the lines of previous legislation. It follows the lines of the legislation of a year and a half ago, against which no protest was uttered, and for which Senators who are now protesting against this bill voted. The committee supposed they were doing their full duty in reporting the bill in the form in which it is.

Mr. President, I confess I was very much surprised yesterday when the amendment was offered in the Senate by the junior Senator from Colorado, and especially was it a matter of surprise to me that he made such an impassioned speech in which he, I thought, by insinuation at least, attacked the committee, charging that the bill which the committee reported created a monopoly, and making certain suggestions as to fraud committed in other cities in the matter of franchise rights.

I will also venture to say that the Senator from Colorado, doubtless laboring under a misapprehension, gave very extravagant figures as to the appropriations that are made under this bill on the part of the Government and the District of Columbia for securing this very desirable improvement in the city of Washington.

Of course the Senator from Colorado did not impute improper motives to the committee or to Congress in the matter of granting franchise rights. He could not have done that, because the corporations with which we are dealing secured their franchise rights a great many years ago—the Baltimore and Potomac thirty-one years ago and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at a time antedating that period. So, of course, no suggestion could be made that there was any danger of anything happening here in the matter of this legislation which would not be proper and honorable and honest.

Mr. President, I wish to devote a few moments of time to a consideration of the rights that the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company have to their present site. I said yesterday that, as I understood the matter, they had rights there which were undoubted. I am not so sure, after looking the matter over more carefully, that they have rights which they could assert and maintain in a court. Yet it is a fact that in 1871 Congress did grant them the right to build on the site where their station now is, ratifying an act of the municipal government which gave them that right at a preceding period. It ought to be remembered that prior to granting this company the right in 1871 it had been given a grant to build a station south of Virginia avenue, and that when the grant was made in 1872 the former grant was repealed. A proviso in the law of May 21, 1872, is as follows:

Provided further, That the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, granting a site for a passenger depot to said railroad company upon Virginia avenue is hereby repealed, to take effect when said company obtains possession of the depot property on Sixth street, as described in this act; and no passenger or other depot shall be constructed by said company on said site.

So, thirty-one years ago Congress did grant the right to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to construct a depot on Sixth street, where they are now in possession. I do not suppose any Senator will contend that Congress would undertake to dispossess the company if it continues to occupy that site under the statute of March 21, 1872. It has made very heavy outlays of money, including the construction of a station. Congress gave the company the privilege of doing that, and, simply because Congress reserved the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act—which is the usual provision in all acts of this kind—is no valid reason for the belief that Congress would seriously attempt to dispossess that company from the property which it now holds.

But however that may be, Mr. President, in 1901 we gave that company further rights. Under the act which was passed February 12, 1901, we gave the further right to the company to construct a new station on that site. Section 3 provides:

That in order to accommodate the increasing passenger, mail, express, and other traffic in the city of Washington the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall have and be possessed of the right, which is hereby granted and conferred, to occupy and use, on the condition hereinafter mentioned, that portion of the Mall lying between B street southwest and B street northwest, etc.

It will thus be seen that only a year and a half ago we granted to that company the right to occupy the Mall and to construct a new station on the site which is now occupied by the old station. So I think the contention that Congress can dispossess that company at will, while it may be technically right in law, has very little potency as a matter of good business judgment. I do not believe Congress would ever seriously think of doing anything of the kind.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator does not understand those of us who are objecting to some features of this bill, or rather trying to incorporate this amendment into it, as being opposed to the proper improvement of the railroad facilities of this city. We are anxious for a union depot. We are anxious for one that will be respectable and decent and even beautiful. We are not opposing this improvement. We are simply trying to guard against a possible contingency which may arise in the future, and we, as wise legislators, ought to take care to see that the provision is placed in the bill. In the development of railroads in the future it may be necessary for some other line to enter this city, and we should provide that it shall have the right to enter the city on the tracks and to use the terminal facilities herein provided; and if such imaginary or putative corporation can not agree with those now in charge or in possession that they shall have the right to appeal to the courts of the District of Columbia. That is all we are asking for. We are not opposing this improvement. We want to see it carried through.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think, Mr. President, I do not misunderstand the position of the Senator from South Carolina at all, and I would not have troubled the Senate by the observations I have made were it not that on yesterday the junior Senator from Colorado made a much broader attack, if I may so call it, upon this bill than the simple proposition involved in his amendment. The Senator from Colorado charged that this bill proposes the creation of a great monopoly. Well, Mr. President, it creates no greater monopoly than exists to-day under the statutes.

The Senator descanted on the value of franchise rights. Why, Mr. President, this does not grant any franchise rights. As a matter of fact, it surrenders franchise rights. We have now two railroads having franchise rights in the District of Columbia by legislative sanction, and we simply propose to put those two railroads in one station instead of two stations, which, under existing laws, they have a right to occupy. That is all there is to that.

There was no suggestion made to the committee that the proposed legislation would create a monopoly, and I feel that I can speak for every member of the committee when I say that there was no thought on their part that they were creating a monopoly that would work to the disadvantage of the people of the District of Columbia or the people of the country.

Now, Mr. President, one or two further observations and I am done. The junior Senator from Colorado, in his earnest and eloquent way, criticised the proposed expenditure of money provided for in this bill by the Government and the District of Columbia for the construction of a plaza in front of the proposed station. The railroad company, I take it, cares very little whether a plaza is constructed or not. If we grant to these corporations the right to build a union station on the site that is proposed in the bill, which is sometimes designated as "Swampoodle," I presume they will build a station there, and the people of the District and of the country will have to get to that station whether there is a beautiful plaza in front of it or not. The railroad company will have just as much business if their patrons are compelled to wend their way through narrow streets and avenues and alleys to get to the road as they will if there is a plaza in front of it.

The only thought the committee had in this respect was that when we are planning to beautify Washington this magnificent monumental railroad station, which will cost four or five million dollars, the finest railroad station in all the world, should have beautiful approaches, and it seems to me that the Government and the District of Columbia can well afford to build agreeable approaches to it. That is all that the bill contemplates. I know that we could not enforce that upon the railroads, and I have very little idea that any railroad corporation would conceive it to be its duty to invest a very considerable sum of money in beautifying the approaches to a railroad station.

Now, Mr. President, the committee has done the best it could in the matter of this proposed legislation, having given a great deal of time to the consideration of the subject, and it rests with the Senate to determine whether in its judgment the work has been wisely done.

As to the proposed amendment, I am not prepared at this moment to say whether I shall vote for it or against it. I hope that some agreement will be reached on the part of the chairman of the committee and those who think that the bill ought to be amended in that particular upon some proposition that will command the votes of the entire Senate. I am not hidebound about it at all. This great public improvement I have at heart very much, because I have chanced to be a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia having in charge the project to make Washington the most beautiful city in the world. Perhaps I have been indulging in a dream about that, but I have this matter very much at heart, and I do dread to contemplate the possibility of losing this legislation by incorporating anything in it that will result disastrously to the bill. The construction of this magnificent railroad station will be an object lesson, and will have great influence on the character of the public buildings that are in contemplation in this city.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to say that so far as I and my colleague are concerned, we will cooperate heartily and fully with the Committee on the District of Columbia in its very praiseworthy object of making the capital of the United States the most beautiful capital in the world. But I wish to say to the Senator that, actuated by such a motive and hoping that the dream will be realized, I would rather see it all sink into hopeless loss forever than to be a party to giving what I contend is a monopoly, pure and simple, for all practical purposes, to the travel and the freight coming to and going from the capital of the country. I heartily meet the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire that those of us who do not desire this monopoly to exist may be able to reach a satisfactory solution of the difficulty that seems to exist now. I and those of us who think as I do will be very happy indeed to cooperate for that purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I suggested in the beginning, it is unfortunate that this proposition had not been brought to the committee. I understand that there is one particular corporation in which the people of Colorado are greatly interested financially.

Mr. PATTERSON. No; it is two or three of our citizens.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. PATTERSON. And I want to say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. So far as the Senators from Colorado are concerned, we have no more interest in that road, directly or indirectly, except friendship for those who are interested, than the honorable Senator has in the Pennsylvania road. Further, I was told that the amendment, or something similar to it, had been suggested to some members of the committee—which of them I do not know—and it was received with no favor. In any event, after it was introduced I had a conversation with the chairman of the committee; and the chairman, for reasons that he gave, said that he could not consent to it. That was before it was brought up upon yesterday. Certainly there was no desire on my part to bring this matter before the Senate without having given the committee ample and full opportunity to consider it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course I know the Senator has no interest in the road for which he pleads. He says that the amendment will benefit two or three citizens of his State. He represents his people, and that is proper. The Senator has the same relation to that road that I have to the Pennsylvania Railroad. I never have spoken a word in my life to any official connected with the Pennsylvania Railroad. I do not know Mr. Cassatt, the president. He has never done me the honor to call on me or even to write me a note concerning this or any other legislation. He certainly has not been troublesome to me as a member of the committee, and I think he has not been troublesome to the committee. On the contrary, I have reason to know—I get it from the chairman of the committee—that the corporation is entirely content with the legislation that is on the statute books to-day.

I do not join, Mr. President, with the suggestion made by the junior Senator from Colorado that he would rather see this legislation fail than not to have an amendment in the line suggested by himself incorporated in the bill. If I can be brought to believe that the legislation will fail in the event of an amendment of that kind being adopted I shall feel compelled to vote against the amendment, because I want very much to have this legislation become a reality.

But as I said a moment ago, I hope some common ground may be found, and before we get through with the consideration of the bill, which is not to be to-day, I infer, from the fact that the clock has almost reached the hour when the unfinished business will come up for consideration, that some agreement may be reached whereby every Senator will support this legislation, which to my mind is of the utmost importance not only to the District of Columbia, but to the entire country.

This is all, Mr. President, that I care to say concerning the matter.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, the morning hour has about expired, and I simply wish to be recognized. I want to say something on the bill to-morrow.

REPORT ON BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, covering a report on the progress of the beet-sugar industry in the United States during the year 1901.

Your attention is invited to the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture that 10,000 copies of the report be printed for the use of the Department, in addition to such number as may be desired for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, April 23, 1902.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS OF ROSEBUD RESERVATION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Before 2 o'clock arrives, I desire to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement, if I may do so at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The friends of the bill for opening the Rosebud Reservation are very anxious to have consideration of that bill. It has been objected to because it could not be discussed under the five-minute rule. I desire to move an amendment and to discuss the bill. I therefore ask unanimous consent that after the matter which was under consideration this morning shall be disposed of, that bill may be taken up after the routine business in the morning hour, and discussed without limitation as to time.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Connecticut ask that it be considered to-morrow, or at some later time than to-morrow?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Whenever the matter which is now under discussion in the morning hour shall have been concluded.

Mr. WARREN. I merely call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is an agreement to go into executive session to-morrow immediately after the morning business.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Well, whenever the opportunity shall occur after the consideration of the matter which has been under discussion this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the bill to which he refers may be taken up for consideration in the morning hour after the final disposition of the bill now under consideration in the morning hour, and that there shall be no limitation of the five-minute rule in the debate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What is the bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is the bill relative to the opening of the Rosebud Reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The number and title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Order of Business 675, a bill (S. 2992) to ratify an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT ST. CHARLES, MO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 4469) extending the time for the completion of a wagon-motor bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., as provided by an act approved June 3, 1896, and as extended by the act approved January 27, 1900, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was engrossed, read the third time and finally passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RED RIVER BRIDGE AT SHREVEPORT, LA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 4663) to authorize the Shreveport Bridge and Terminal Company to construct and maintain a bridge across Red River, in the State of Louisiana, at or near Shreveport, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. I ask that the same order be made in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was engrossed and read the third time and finally passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 2494) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department;

A bill (H. R. 2974) for the relief of J. V. Worley; and

A bill (H. R. 8769) for the relief of S. J. Bayard Schindel.

The bill (H. R. 13676) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8587) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known at the Bowman Act, and asking a conference with the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Housee thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. WARREN, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. MASON were appointed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12346) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House. I make this motion in the absence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN].

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. ELKINS, and Mr. BERRY were appointed.

REPORT OF GOVERNOR OF OKLAHOMA FOR 1901.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print 5,000 additional copies of the report of the governor of Oklahoma for 1901, and to deliver the same to the Department of the Interior.

BILLIARD AND POOL TABLES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3439) to amend an act entitled "An act to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;" which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, there are a good many features which have intimate relation to this legislation, and the importance of it, I think, justifies us in an effort to present the facts which will enable those who care to deal with this subject intelligently to do so. That is my justification for detaining the Senate in the remarks which I make.

Last evening I was inviting attention to some considerations relating to the acquisition of lands held by corporations under the authority of the so-called Philippine government and the disposition of such lands to be made after their acquisition. This is, in my judgment, a very important matter relating to the future welfare of the islands, and I intend now to advert still further to that subject by calling attention to the specific language of the bill bearing upon that point.

Section 64 provides:

That the government of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized to acquire, receive, hold, maintain, and convey title to real and personal property, and may acquire real estate for public uses by the exercise of the right of eminent domain.

Section 65 provides:

That the powers hereinbefore conferred in section 63 may also be exercised in respect of any lands, easements, appurtenances, and hereditaments which, on the 13th of August, 1898, were owned or held by associations, corporations, communities, religious orders, or private individuals in such large tracts or parcels as in the opinion of the Commission injuriously affect the welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands.

The Senate will note that there is no fixed limitation as to the quantity of land which will be a sufficient justification for action on the part of the Philippine government under the clause "such large tracts or parcels as in the opinion of the Commission injuriously affect the welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands."

That may mean 100 acres or 100,000 acres. There is, of course, no limitation whatever, but it leaves the authority to be employed by the Commission in its own discretion without limit in respect to any real or personal property, whether held by corporations or individuals, and gives to the government the right to appropriate it in the exercise of the power of eminent domain. To what end, Mr. President, are they thus authorized to appropriate these lands and this property in this manner? After providing for raising the funds with which to pay for the lands we pass to section 66.

That all lands acquired by virtue of section 65 of this act—

That is the section to which I have just alluded—shall constitute a part and portion of the public property of the government of the Philippine Islands—

Note the language, "the public property of the government of the Philippine Islands," not the public property of the United States—and may be leased, let, sold, and conveyed by the government of the islands on such terms and conditions as it may prescribe.

That is a very extended authority. Can anyone see the limit upon it?

Provided, That the price to be paid by a purchaser shall in no case be less than the appraised value fixed thereon at the time of acquisition thereof by said government of the Philippines.

That is a possible and very insignificant limitation. Then follows a provision as to the payment of interest upon the bonds.

Thus this authority is to be exercised, not by the Government of the United States, but by the government of the Philippine Islands; the land is to be acquired in exercise of the power of eminent domain, provided that in the opinion of the government of the Philippine Islands it is held in such large quantities as may come within the purview of the power or may justify its exercise.

MAY MORTGAGE THE FUTURE.

Mr. President, as to the method of payment the government of the Philippine Islands does not pay for this land which is to become its property. The government of the Philippine Islands is composed of such "person and persons," who are vested with all civil, judicial, and military power, to be exercised under the direction of the President of the United States without limitation or qualification, even the qualification which originally pertained to the Spooner amendment, which conferred absolute power.

And for the purpose of providing funds to acquire the lands mentioned in this section said government of the Philippines is hereby empowered to incur indebtedness, to borrow money, and to issue and to sell at not less than par value, in gold coin of the United States of the present standard value or the equivalent in value in money of the Philippine Islands, upon such terms and conditions as it may deem best, registered or coupon bonds of the government of the Philippine Islands for such amount as may be necessary, said bonds to be in denominations of $50 or any multiple thereof.

And to charge certain rates of interest, to be payable within certain times, without limitation upon the amount of indebtedness which may be so incurred.

Thus the Philippine government is given power, not only to appropriate all the funds which may now be in the islands and all the moneys which they may derive from taxation of every conceivable description, but to mortgage the entire future of those islands by the issuance of bonds to the ends specified in these sections.

In justification or excuse for conferring these most extraordinary powers it is claimed that there are certain religious orders in the islands who have been or were in possession of large tracts of land and sums of money, and that the possession of such land and money by those orders constituted a disturbance of the peace of the islands and prevented the pacification and continuance of peace throughout the archipelago.

I want to invite attention to the fact that, in the first place, it was claimed that the amount that would be necessary to raise to secure these lands would be $5,000,000, but the limitation, it will be observed, is nowhere noted in this bill which the Senate is now called upon to pass.

The following, from a letter written by Buencomino, gives a general outline of these holdings:

The friars, my dear sir, have at their disposal here 36 religious centers, including churches and chapels, where they have 200 confessionals and 36 pulpits, which are constantly visited by deputies, both male and female.

They are also owners of 14 convents, which are enormous buildings, occupied by some 400 Spanish friars, including Jesuits, Benedictines, Dominicans, Augustines, Franciscans, Recolets, Paulines, and Capuchins of both sexes; and they support a great number of shoemakers, sculptors silversmiths, embroiderers, and other tradespeople.

The friars are bankers, shipowners, merchants, and proprietors of three-fourths of the buildings of the city.

The friars administer the funds of the so-called pious works, which amount to some $18,000,000 Mexican, and the funds, so called, of the miter, which amount to some $6,000,000 Mexican.

The friars manage eight schools founded by private parties, with large endowments, and, lastly, they maintain for the direction, administration, and representation of so many interests, 10 American lawyers and 20 Spanish lawyers, some of whom have recently brought out from Spain five Spanish and two English newspapers, from which are excluded the very important questions of the ownership of wealthy haciendas and administration of wealthy parishes, and, I repeat, they are very important questions because they affect the public order.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF SPECULATORS.

Passing from that question, Mr. President, the lands, which are distributed throughout the archipelago, held by these religious orders, in some thirty different localities, amounting to more than a half million acres, if we are to believe the testimony of Governor Taft, are no longer held by the religious orders referred to. He says in his testimony that they have been transferred, but that, in his opinion, the transactions are only colorable; that in reality these lands remain the property of the religious orders in question. They are not the property of the apostolic authorities of the Catholic Church. They were the property of the different corporations constituting the five religious orders, and the property was supposed to be dedicated to certain specific charities in the islands; but I alluded to the fact that it was at one time thought that $5,000,000 would be sufficient to cover the purchase price of these lands. More recently the figures have been raised to $17,000,000.

It happens to have been disclosed in regard to some of these tracts, notably one in Mindoro, referred to in the testimony of Governor Taft, amounting to about 60,000 acres of land, that it has been disposed of at least under option to a man, who attained some notoriety as having been indicted for corrupting certain officers and people in the Philippine Islands. Having obtained an option upon this large tract of land at the figures therein mentioned, he was interested in disposing of the tract at a profit to himself and his associates. I have no doubt that the designation of the condition of that tract of land, which is to be appropriated under the authority to which I have referred, will be found to be true with respect to every other of these tracts claimed to belong to religious orders in the Philippine Islands.

The urgency or pressure is brought to bear to confer unusual and unlimited power upon the government of the Philippine Islands is in order that such government will issue bonds, raise the money, and appropriate these lands on terms which will prove profitable to the speculators who have obtained options upon them. • It is, of course, to the interest of these so-called religious orders in the islands to dispose of these lands. The orders have become so obnoxious to the inhabitants throughout the islands that they can not safely remain; they can not operate those large estates with profit; and, as disclosed in the testimony in the case which has been laid before us, they are at present unprofitable, owing partly to the disturbed state of the country; and these orders have been only too willing to make some arrangement, I have no doubt, with speculators to dispose of these lands; and the speculators, of course, have no other interest in this question than to obtain the profit upon the conditional investment made by them. The statement of Governor Taft that these transactions are colorable, when explained, will be found to mean nothing more than that the parties have obtained preferential rights of purchase, and hold those rights subject to the condition that they can dispose of these so-called friar lands to the government of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, ought we to confer authority like this to this end? If these lands were to be taken from the friars, who held them, if there was a necessity for this action in order that the people of the islands who want to make and maintain their homes there and are interested in its future and permanent welfare and we might thereby restore peace to that stricken land, I would join with any others in doing what I could to bring about such a desirable result.

It is a most vicious policy, in my opinion, to commit in any country large tracts of God's footstool, designed to be devoted to the use of His creatures, to the monopoly of any sort of corporation, whether it be religious or secular.

As I have pointed out, the authority under this bill given to the Philippine government is to acquire any land, whether belonging to religious orders, corporations, or individuals. That language is industriously employed for a purpose. It would not do to limit it to religious corporations or organizations or to these five orders, because then it could not be employed in the interests of speculators who have obtained options on this land. It would not do to limit it to corporations holding in such large quantities as might be injurious to the welfare of that people, for the individuals who hold these options in some instances are not incorporated.

So we have the designation broad enough to cover the individual, who, without expense to himself, has gone to these religious orders and obtained the option, with the sole purpose of turning over the lands, at a profit to himself, to the government of the Philippine Islands. Hence it is natural that our friends upon the other side do not care to have a discussion of this bill. No explanation of the reasons for these provisions, to which I have now alluded, in relation to the friars' lands, has been vouchsafed to us. Senators whose votes are expected to pass the bill are not interested in the discussion, and they do not care to be advised as to these pernicious features of this measure. When they vote for it they will not know, and do not want to know, the significance of their votes; and those Senators who now claim that nothing which can be said in this debate will change the vote of a single Senator upon this question doubtless would not be able to answer as to the meaning of any one of the most unusual powers conferred under this bill or as to the uses or ends to which these powers are to be employed.

I doubt very much if the Senator who said last night, "We care not what you say; it will not affect our votes upon this measure," could come into this Chamber and give an intelligent explanation of a single feature of this bill, not that he is not capable of doing so, but that he is indifferent as to its provisions or the effect of them. There are features of this bill which no Senator loving his country and fully appreciating their significance can, in my opinion, reasonably vote for, having a due regard to the interests of the people of the islands or of the people of the United States.

I want to refer to a statement in the testimony of Governor Taft. On page 184 of the Hearings before the Committee on the Philippines Governor Taft says:

> What we want to do is to develop the islands; and certainly the attraction of capital, by offering what will return a reasonable profit, is our policy; and the sale of lands in tracts sufficiently large to attract capital is an essential part of that plan.

That is the policy which is to be pursued by the government of the Philippine Islands after the passage of this bill. Its general significance is manifest in other parts of Governor Taft's testimony, when he says that 5,000 acres to a single individual or corporation has not been recommended by the Commission; that 10,000 acres may be inadequate; that one gentleman, desiring to embark in an enterprise in Mindanao, wanted at least 20,000 acres, and the Governor did not seem to be at all of the opinion that that quantity would be excessive. So we may have any number of acres that this government in the Philippine Islands may deem a sufficient inducement to foreign syndicates and capital to come to the islands for purposes of exploitation. That is to be the confirmed and established policy of the government of the Philippine Islands.

PERIL OF EXPLOITATION.

There have been some people in the islands who have not taken the view thus made manifest in the testimony of Governor Taft. Dealing with the question of Chinese immigration, which he deems would be disastrous in the extreme, General MacArthur, on page 111 of his report, says:

> In this connection it may not be improper to state that one of the greatest difficulties attending military efforts to tranquilize the people of the archipelago arises from their dread of sudden and excessive exploitation, which they fear would defraud them of their natural patrimony and at the same time relegate them to a status of social and political inferiority.

We have General MacArthur on one side and the government of the Philippine Islands on the other, and the Senate is now called upon to decide which horn of these two dilemmas it will take. And yet it seems that some of our friends do not care to hear any discussion of that important question. I do not say "all of our friends on the other side of the Chamber," because I can not make that imputation concerning men feeling the responsibilities which pertain to members of this branch of Congress, and I might say of both branches of Congress. We are thus warned by General MacArthur—and in this view he is corroborated by others—of the danger of entering upon a policy of exploitation. General MacArthur testified in still more emphatic terms upon this very question that the greatest evil that could happen to the islands would be to embark upon a policy of exploitation such as is announced by Governor Taft as the predetermined policy of the government of the Philippines, which we are proposing to institute by this bill. Well may every student of history, every lover of his kind, every man who prefers humanity to the demands of avarice, join in the opinion which is thus expressed by the general of our armies in the Philippines.

This whole Philippine government bill clusters about 76,000,000 acres of so-called public lands, constituting the archipelago, and the wealth and the resources which may be derived therefrom. It is not proposed to dispose of these lands for the benefit of the people most interested, the inhabitants of the islands, those people who are indigenous to that soil, and to whom, according to every principle of right and justice, they belong, but the benefit is to go to foreigners seeking enrichment. They are the people who look to this measure; and it matters not to them whether the passage of this bill and the putting of it into operation will inure to the peace of the islands, or to the welfare of their people, or to the interest of the United States, or to save and preserve the lives of our soldiers, so long as through its operation they can replenish their coffers with ill-gotten gains.

We have had within a few days a beautiful illustration of the very thing to which I now invite the attention of the Senate. In the course of our investigation in the Philippine Committee Governor Taft referred to the fact that a gentleman from Chicago had proposed to embark in an industry in the island of Mindanao. It furthermore appeared that he had made an exploration of that island, and it was ascertained there that by the acquisition of a large tract of land it could be devoted to the culture of the rubber tree, to the great profit of those who might engage in the enterprise. Of course, the inhabitants of Mindanao are non-Christian tribes; they are Moros. There are down there about 300,000 slaves, more or less. They are a brave people; they are a fanatic people.

But it is necessary to subdue those people; it may be necessary to exterminate those people, because probably they can only be subdued by extermination or annihilation. A syndicate of nonresident stockholders can not make a profit out of the enterprise so long as that menace, that cloud, overhangs their operations in the island of Mindanao. What pernicious influence has been brought to bear upon the general commanding our Army or the subordinate commanders in the immediate vicinity of this field of contemplated exploitation I know not. I do not intend to do any injustice to anyone; but, seemingly, if we are to believe the messages emanating from the Administration responsible for this government, we are to understand that these are, substantially, the facts.

Those tribes of Moros never submitted to Spain, never acknowledged allegiance to her, except in a qualified way. At most Spain had but a suzerainty over them. In all their past they have been pursuing their own lines and their own methods of government, subject to their own traditions and forms of religion. Since the date of the Paris treaty there has been little or no disturbance there, and they have been proceeding in peace and quietude until the disturbing hand of the syndicator has thrust itself into their midst, and then what happened? A subordinate officer sends out a message to those people that now they must submit, that now they must submit to exploration, with the incidental and resultant exploitation. They must yield up their guns and ammunition and submit to the dictates of the representatives of the American Government. They must no longer stand as a menace to those who seek to take possession of their lands and devote them to their own uses and carry their wealth away to a foreign country. We invite you to do this in all kindness and benevolence. We do not want to have any bloodshed; but if you will thus submit and thus surrender all that is dear to you, you may have peace, else we will present the other alternative.

So he sends out his expedition, his criers in advance, calling upon the people to acknowledge the beneficence of the edict that he issued for their subjugation. They resist. Thereupon, without consulting Congress—which under the Constitution is supposed alone to have the power to declare war—seemingly without consulting the President of the United States, who, although he has no such power, is at least or ought to be the commander of the armies of the United States (whether he consulted the general commanding the armies in the Philippines we have no very definite information), the Army was sent out and the war was begun. A new declaration of war against between one and two million people, covering an island amounting to something like 30,000,000 acres!

WHAT CARES THE EXPLOITER?

It is said this island is as large as the island of Luzon. It was a large undertaking against a brave people, a fanatic people, ready to fight for what they conceived to be right. It was the beginning of a war which will involve the sacrifice of how many thousands of American soldiers we can only conjecture; involving the expenditure of moneys wrung from the American people by taxation to the extent of how many millions we can only estimate in the roughest possible way; involving all the brutalities and cruelties which seem to be necessarily incident to the waging of war in the Tropics.

What is that to one of these exploiters? What is that to a military satrap? What is that to the governor-general of the Philippine Archipelago? What care they for the welfare of the people in the distant islands? What care they for the welfare of the people of the United States? They (the exploiters) can see within their reach a few paltry dollars to enrich their coffers. What care they how many millions may be extracted from the Treasury of the United States or what treasures of blood are wasted?

The attention of the country will be called to these things, though the other side may remain vacant and silent, and I believe that ultimately the people of the United States will be aroused to the situation and will listen with attentive ears, and that they will be heard in a manner which will be surprising to those who now treat this question with indifference.

Then, we are informed, the President of the United States yesterday advised a suspension, and the word comes back that that will never do. Stop a war? Never. Stop a war never declared by Congress? What is Congress? Stop a war that the American people do not want? What are the American people? Stop a war and prevent the shedding of human blood and the sacrifice and slaughter of people who have given no offense? What care we for them? General Chaffee says it is necessary to do all this in order that we may have the respect of the Moros. Will we have their respect after we have slaughtered their people?

Mr. President, who would have thought, who could have dreamed, that scarcely more than a hundred years from the time our fathers laid the foundation of this Republic a bill like this could have been brought into the legislative body of this nation with any prospect of meeting with favorable consideration? The government of the Philippine Islands is to have all civil, judicial, and military power which it may, in its sweet judgment, believe necessary to govern 10,000,000 people and 76,000,000 acres of territory, coupled with a provision that the land, 76,000,000 acres, for which the American people paid, at least to Spain, the sum of $20,000,000, made as a donation to this oligarchy of absolutism, is to be disposed of for their own benefit and not for the benefit of any man, woman, or child in the United States or, I might add, in the land which is to be oppressed by them.

Are there any limitations upon the power of the government of the Philippine Islands? I should like anyone upon the other side to answer that question. [A pause.] There is no response. Is there any independent judiciary to safeguard the rights of all the people or any of the people or the property of anyone in the archipelago or elsewhere? Is it not absolutely dependent upon the will of the oligarchy known as the Philippine Commission? If anyone thinks there is, I would be glad now to have him make response to the interrogatory I propound. [A pause.] No; there is no independent judiciary. The judges are dependent for the tenure of their office and the amount of their salaries on this oligarchy. The judges are dependent for the jurisdiction they may exercise absolutely upon the will of this oligarchy. The judges are dependent for their existence in any given district upon the caprice and will of this oligarchy.

Any judge who may presume to exercise any jurisdiction derogatory to the wishes of the oligarchy may be supplanted the moment he undertakes to render his decision. When he has decided the question, and it is favorable to them, they may make it final and cut off the right of appeal to any superior tribunal, and if it is unfavorable they can remove him and put in a new judge who will grant to them what they wish.

ARMY NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR USE TO WHICH IT HAS BEEN PUT.

But, Mr. President, I am going to pass now from the questions relating immediately to the provisions of this bill to another subject, and I desire to premise what I say in relation to that by the statement that our Army originally sent to the Philippine Islands did not undertake the service which they have since been compelled to perform. Without undertaking to go into the history of our relation fully, I may state two or three things connected with it.

Men volunteered to achieve a given result in the island of Cuba in a war with Spain. That was achieved to the fullest possible degree. It was perfectly and in every regard finally accomplished on the 12th day of August, 1898, when the protocol with Spain was signed. Torture and cruelty and reconcentration and desolation we supposed had been put an end to, until on the 13th day of August—we did not know it, but it was true—the hand of avarice showed itself and a cablegram was sent to Dewey, "What are the islands worth to the United States if we retain them as colonies? What is their commerce, and what are their mineral resources, etc.?"

That was the question. Then a new policy was outlined. When we had completed the benign purpose which had brought the American people up to the point of making the declaration of war against Spain, we then entered upon a repetition of the history of the very cruelty and barbarism, of torture and oppression, of killing and extermination of which Spain had been guilty; and we did it deliberately, willfully, maliciously, with malice aforethought.

Every nation is endowed with the power of rational volition and must suffer the consequences for the failure to exercise it, and I am not willing to concede that the Executive Mansion is but a madhouse and that its occupant is not responsible for his acts, or that they are the result of incompetence and incapacity for government.

General Otis told us what happened. The Senators can read it in record of the investigation. General Merritt had agreed that while Aguinaldo and the so-called insurgents against Spain, who had cooperated with Anderson, should be shut out from their own city (Manila) and its gates should be barred to them, they might occupy up to a given line, and the Americans inside would occupy the territory inclosed by that line. That will be found in a letter of General Merritt bearing date the 20th day of August. The protocol of the 12th of August gave the United States the right to occupy the city, the bay, and the harbor of Manila, and nothing more. That protocol was communicated to our military commanders in the island and they were, of course, in duty bound to observe its stipulations.

Merritt was recalled. Otis succeeded to the control of the islands. He at once wrote a letter to Aguinaldo commanding him to retire from the lines which it had been agreed on with Merritt should be occupied, under penalty of employing force, and Aguinaldo, to maintain peace, withdrew in accordance with the command. On the 21st day of December, while there was peace in the archipelago, while you could travel from one end to the other with safety to life and property—if we are to believe the reports of our commanders who visited the archipelago—the President himself issued an order to the Secretary of War, and through him to General Otis, before the treaty of peace with Spain was ratified, to extend the military authority immediately to every part of the islands. That was a declaration of war against the people in all of the islands outside of the city of Manila. But the Filipinos, greatly outraged by what they conceived to be acts of bad faith on the part of the Government of the United States, which had invited them at the beginning of the Spanish war to come to our assistance in waging war against a common enemy, refrained from hostilities.

HOW THE WAR BEGAN.

The investigation of this case shows that on the 4th day of February, just prior to the ratification of the treaty, from blockhouse No. 7, a Filipino patrol at a crossroads were told to halt by an American sentry but twice, while the ordinary rule was to call three times. But when the second call was made upon these men, who probably did not know a word of English, the firing began, and two of the patrol were shot dead upon the spot. The others returned to the blockhouse, and then there was great noise along the whole line, the firing of guns and of cannon. General MacArthur testified that the firing was so tremendous that he heard it in the city of Manila, beginning, as he stated in his testimony, at half past 10 at night, although the reports coming from the War Department fix the hour as at half past 8 in the evening. The next morning they were unable to report that a single soldier of the United States had been killed in that terrific battle. Not a single American officer or soldier was killed or wounded during the continuance of the firing throughout the whole of that night.

The message to the people of the United States announcing the beginning of hostilities, the Senate of the United States then having under consideration the question of the ratification of the Paris treaty, is said to have been put upon the wires two hours and a half before even the American sentries killed the Filipino patrol coming from blockhouse No. 7. In order to get time for the message to arrive here it was necessary to have the hostilities begin at half past 8, whereas according to the testimony of General MacArthur they did not actually begin until half past 10 on Saturday night, the 4th of February.

There was the overwhelming political necessity. There was the war that Congress did not declare. There was the war for which the American people are not responsible. There was the war begun not by any recognized authority emanating from the people of the United States. There was the war either begun by General Otis or begun by the President of the United States without the sanction of the sole repository of that power under the Constitution.

Not only that, but the next day, when the Filipinos had scarcely fired a gun, or at least had fired no effective shots, and they appealed for a suspension of hostilities, the substantial fact is that the message sent back to them was that the war having begun it must continue. General Otis said that those people did not expect that the hostilities would begin so soon and acted upon the defensive.

We have been charged with grave responsibilities in connection with this tragedy. I am going to let the facts speak and let them carry their necessary weight of responsibility and let that weight rest where such facts legitimately place it. It will add nothing to the strength of any argument to impugn motives or to charge consequences growing from facts the responsibility for which is fixed beyond the shadow of a question.

SPANISH GOVERNMENTAL MACHINERY.

Mr. President, what has happened since then? We have here a bill creating departments, subordinate bureaus, officials with perquisites and salaries without limitation, and school-teachers ad libitum, and governors-general, and vice-governors, and viceroyalties, and military satraps—a complication of Spanish machinery the like of which no American ever dreamed of in his life, and which to him, in view of our experiences, is utterly incomprehensible. How vast and how intricate this machinery of extortion and plunder will be when this law shall be passed no human being can adequately make prophecy.

Read the report of the Commission in regard to the character and variety of the taxation which is to be extorted from those people. There are the land tax, the cedula tax, the poll tax, the excise tax, the tariff tax. Who will pay those taxes? They all go into the coffers of the United States Philippine government—a parasite, but a parasite of gigantic proportions, feeding itself and feeding nobody else, feeding upon the body politic and eating out its substance like some slimy worm rioting amid the wreck of the fortunes of the Filipino people. What a benevolent despotism of greed is this! Upon what is this exploitation to operate? Upon a hopeless, despairing people, stricken victims of a policy as cruel as ever history depicted or the tyranny of man could devise and perpetrate.

CHARACTER OF PEOPLE.

We know now, although it has been repeatedly, time and time and time again, officially denied by the Secretary of War, that this war has embraced features of barbarism and cruelty and torture equal to any in the history of the most barbarous peoples in the blackest ages. I am going to tell some of the things that have happened. It is all here in these books. If anyone denies any statement I make, I will take the time to put the conclusive proof in the RECORD. General MacArthur says that these people are a hospitable people, and Governor Taft says the same—that when they invite you into their homes and say it is yours they mean it. They are a sensitive people. Filial affection and parental care are developed as among the most prominent traits.

The parents love their children, and the children respect their parents. Under tremendous difficulties they have made great progress in the mechanic arts. They are artists to the manner born, and they are musicians of a high order of ability. In their households they maintain cleanliness and sobriety, and practice many virtues which are not practiced even by some more civilized people. Such is the testimony of those who have recorded the character of these people before the war and since the war, and it comes from the very people who have been the authors of many of the misfortunes of the Filipinos.

Mr. President, that country was inhabited originally by the Negritos, afterwards by the Malays and Moros, who dwelt there from time immemorial. The Spaniards found them there, and when three hundred years ago the Spaniards went there they found in Luzon a people who had an alphabet and a written language. Those who have more recently gone there declare that almost without exception every person above the requisite age is capable of reading and writing in some language, either in the Spanish or in the native dialect. These are not a barbarous nor a savage people. I refer to the masses of the inhabitants. Of course, like every other people, there will be found among them men of the criminal and degraded and brutal class, the robber and the thief, and the murderer, and the like, but those are sporadic cases. Judging the people by the general character which has been given to them by disinterested and impartial observers who have dwelt among them, they are people who have attained, under the most extraordinary difficulties, a pretty high degree of civilization compared with the races and peoples in that latitude.

BARBARISM AND CRUELTY.

Mr. President, the war was begun in the manner which I have pointed out. Those who came in conflict with the American troops were slaughtered. It finally developed that no wounded were left upon the field. I say no wounded because the official reports of the wounded among the Filipinos do not disclose any wounded to speak of. Whether the marksmanship of the American troops was so unerring that in every instance they struck the fatal spot—a theory which was propounded in the testimony of General MacArthur—I must leave the Senate or those interested in this question to determine. Whether the Filipinos, shot down by hundreds and thousands, were enabled under the pressure and speed of the American troops to carry away their wounded, according to an alternative theory propounded in the testimony of General MacArthur, I submit to the fair consideration of the judgment of those who are to pass upon this question.

Certain it is, Mr. President, that our troops swept those people from the face of the earth in hundreds and in thousands. I commend the official reports of General MacArthur and other generals as to the relative proportion of killed and wounded on the American side, which is normal, to the killed and wounded on the Filipino side, which discloses practically no wounded at all.

That is one phase of this war. As it progressed the policy of those who had control of it, according to the testimony of General Hughes, became stiffer and stiffer, to use his exact language. It became progressively more severe, and when you look back at the earliest stages of that war you wonder what that signifies. But we find out what it signifies.

First, the war was waged against men in arms, and they were slaughtered. Next it became stiffer by waging it against men and women and little children. Next it became stiffer by the burning of the villages and, irrespective of age, sex, or condition, sweeping the land of every vestige of shelter and of food. Next it became still stiffer, following precedents of the Dark Ages, when tyrants resorted to excruciating torture to compel information and inflict punishment against people struggling to be free—tortures devised under the supervision of a Torquemada and the Inquisition; tortures employed by a Phillip the Second in the Netherlands; the water torture, and other hideous tortures so infamous that modern language fails to furnish terms in which to adequately and properly characterize them were applied to the racking of the nerves of a sensitive people, loving justice, music, and the higher arts of civilization.

But the Secretary of War has denied this, and General Funston, coming back from the midst of its very universal practice, said, "It is an atrocious lie," and proceeded to describe it in a manner which showed his familiarity with the practice as it prevailed in his presence. These denials have been so impudent that it has really been astonishing that they could be made in the face of the overwhelming testimony of the universal and systematic practice of these brutalities everywhere where our soldiers penetrated in the Philippine Islands.

Why, Governor Taft knew about them, sitting as he did in the city of Manila, not out upon the field, not out where they were practiced. What does he say? On page 75 he said:

What I am trying to do is to state what seemed to us to be the explanation of these cruelties——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Whose statement is that?

Mr. RAWLINS. Governor Taft in his testimony before the Philippine Committee. He said:

What I am trying to do is to state what seemed to us to be the explanation of these cruelties. That cruelties have been inflicted; that people have been shot when they ought not to have been; that there have been individual instances of water cure, that torture which I believe involves pouring water down the throat so that the man swells and gets the impression that he is going to be suffocated and then tells what he knows, which was a frequent treatment under the Spaniards, I am told—all these things are true. There are some rather amusing instances of Filipinos who came in and said they would not say anything until they were tortured; that they must have an excuse for saying what they proposed to say.

That is Governor Taft. That testimony was given February 4, 1902, when Governor Taft was in attendance before the Philippine Committee. General Hughes testified that they burned the towns, and he testified that the shacks which they burned were not of much consequence. In answer to this question:

If these shacks were of no consequence what was the utility of their destruction?

General Hughes said:

The destruction was as a punishment. They permitted these people to come in there and conceal themselves and they gave no sign. It is always——

Senator RAWLINS. The punishment in that case would fall, not upon the men, who could go elsewhere, but mainly upon the women and little children.

General HUGHES. The women and children are part of the family, and where you wish to inflict a punishment you can punish the man probably worse in that way than in any other.

Senator RAWLINS. But is that within the ordinary rules of civilized warfare? Of course you could exterminate the family, which would be still worse punishment.

General HUGHES. These people are not civilized.

General MacArthur, Governor Taft, Mr. Foreman, superintendent of schools; Mr. Barrows, and a multitude of witnesses who have lived and been associated with those people say that they have attained quite a high degree of civilization, and in any event they are a sensitive, high-strung people, who maintain the ways of civilized life, and that almost all of them can read and write, and all of them can sing and play upon musical instruments in a manner that stirs the æsthetic soul to delight. General Hughes gives the excuse that they were not civilized.

Senator RAWLINS. Then I understand you to say it is not civilized warfare?

General HUGHES. No; I think it is not.

This warfare, then, was not civilized warfare. We have the testimony of General Hughes given under oath, not a willing or favorable witness, on the theory of questioning the policy of the Administration of the dominant party, as given on page 481 of his testimony:

Senator RAWLINS. You think it is not?

Then somebody suggested that "in order to carry on civilized warfare both sides have to engage in such warfare."

Yes, sir; certainly. That is the point—

General Hughes said, after this suggestion of assistance to him.

That is not all. Farther on he said that he had heard while in the islands more than three years of one case. You will find it in the final report of his testimony. General Hughes during all his experience in the islands had heard of one case of the infliction of the water cure, and General Hughes said that the people who inflicted it were not punished, but they promised never to do so any more.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will permit me to make an inquiry before he passes from that part of his argument, I desire to ask him, moved thereto by the passage he has just read from the testimony, whether the officer who testified, or any member of the committee thought that self-respect and decency and the honor of this nation were not involved in violating the rules of warfare, even against savages, especially the use of tortures, inhuman cruelties, toward inoffensive children and the burning of homes in order that men might be punished?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, this Philippine policy shows what strange and incredulous things will happen. People who in 1898 would have been shocked beyond measure and would have been moved to tragic indignation have become so familiar with these scenes of blood and torture practiced under the authority of our Government, beneath the shadowy folds of the Stars and Stripes, that some of them seem to have become utterly indifferent to the inflictions of tortures which are so hideous that they would then have moved the Senate to wage war against the most powerful nation on the earth rather than to tolerate their infliction.

The Senator from Mississippi asks me if I am moved. I can say that as I have seen these things developed, and as I have considered them day by day I have been overwhelmed until I have scarcely believed that I could be able to talk about them with patience. I can only speak for myself, and I commend the Senator from Mississippi to read the palliating questions and excuses offered by others upon the committee for the most infamous thing that anyone can conceive of in the way of torture and perfidy.

Why, Mr. President, I have been surprised, and I disclose nothing which is secret, that those who care to do so may read this testimony and find how difficult it was from unwilling witnesses to gain shreds of truth in fragments, dragged out as if it were an act of treason to propound the question, and the constant interruptions interjected, and the interference of members of the committee to prevent the disclosure of the truth and conceal this hideous iniquity from the knowledge of the American people.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will again permit me, answering me fully now, I hope I may be permitted to express the hope that if there is a single member of the committee who entertains the idea that this civilized nation is permitted to practice cruelties and barbarities and to violate the rules of civilized warfare in fight even with savages, he will make an explanation on this floor and give his opinion in full, and I shall ask the privilege of replying to that gentleman.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, most all of you have read the Commentaries of Cæsar, as he dealt with barbaric peoples in Gaul and in Germany, and in the course of those commentaries we have read how severe he waged that war, sometimes in open battle, wiping out nations of people; but, Mr. President, you will search the lids of that work in vain to find an account of any such cruelties as have been practiced, according to the admitted testimony of our soldiers and our armies, in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, there was torture in old Rome. After Cæsar was assassinated and some tyrants seized possession of the reins of government, overthrowing the republic, a conscription list was issued, under which Cicero, the great orator, philosopher, and statesman, was beheaded, as according to some modern suggestions some other people ought to be beheaded or hanged. When they sought to carry out their proscription in one instance Quintus Cicero, who had fought bravely in the armies of Rome and upheld the standard of the Roman Republic, was also one of those designated to death. As they were seeking to find him in the city of Rome they seized his son and inflicted upon him this torture, until by his screams reaching the ears of his father he came forth and both were put to the torture and to death. But every one who has read that instance in history has been horrified at it and wondered how in a civilized country such things could possibly be.

Mr. President, we have taken the sovereignty of Spain, it is said, over the Philippine Archipelago, and our friends on the other side have maintained that it is such a rightful sovereignty that when it passed to us under general grant and general cession we possessed it also as inviolably as did Spain, and that we did not acquire it to be administered according to the precepts of our Constitution and the traditions of our history, but that we have acquired it to rule with an iron hand and by the methods of Spanish cruelty and despotism.

Ah, Mr. President, what an awful thing this is! I commend it to the conscience and to the considerations of humanity, if such thing may happen to lurk still in the breast of the American people. But, I have not told all. I am not charging the American soldier in the ranks, sent hither to fight an unhonored battle, to engage in a war which would not and could not commend itself to his sense of propriety and justice. I am making no indictment of the men who have thus, under the commands of superiors, been led against a people struggling to be free. I am making no charges of isolated cruelty for the purpose of arraigning any man who has volunteered in the service of his country.

Mr. President, I would be guilty of arrant cowardice if I should undertake to break my shafts of criticism against those men who have been but the tools of an iniquitous policy, because the evidence has developed until it is overwhelming and incontrovertible that these practices in the islands have been widespread and systematic, and approved by the military superiors, not by the subordinate commanders. I invite Senators to look over one of these reports, a list of about forty charges made against American soldiers for misconduct in the Philippine Islands. The testimony is now uncontroverted and incontrovertible, from Governor Taft and from witnesses whose credibility is beyond dispute, to which

I shall call attention later. In a report of the governor of Tayabas, Major Gardener, who served in the volunteer forces, he reported that in his province American soldiers and officers had so repeatedly inflicted the torture that it rendered it impossible for him to maintain peace under the civil government.

Mr. President, of those 40 charges made in the manner which I have stated you will not find a single instance of a man arraigned upon the charge of inflicting the torture known as the water cure. We find that certain methods of torture there, mild in their character, were not approved—for instance, for hanging a Filipino by the neck for a few minutes. A soldier was convicted upon the trial, and his punishment was a reprimand.

Mr. CARMACK. An officer.
Mr. RAWLINS. An officer.
Mr. CARMACK. Two officers.
Mr. RAWLINS. Two officers.
Mr. CARMACK. Two different cases.

Mr. RAWLINS. Two different cases, and they were subjected to the severe penalty of a reprimand. In the Army (those on the other side who are more familiar with military law than myself can correct me if I am wrong) there is an officer known as the judge-advocate, and I want to know if it be not true that the judge-advocate in the Army is something like the attorney-general or a district attorney or a prosecuting attorney in the practice of civil government, whose duty it is to prosecute persons charged with crime and who has to a very large extent the fate of any man who is arraigned in his own hand, who can present testimony against him and appeal in good earnest for his conviction, or if he chooses can set him free.

General Hughes had a judge-advocate, a prosecuting attorney by the name of Glenn. He was first a captain. Then he was, as the official records show, promoted for faithful and diligent service in the cause of his country. This is a sample piece. Of course they might be multiplied indefinitely.

I want to call attention to one case. We had a report, No. 11, upon this case from the War Department. Before reading it I want to invite the attention of the Senate to what the Secretary of War said a few days ago. He has said it officially in a letter to the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines, dated February 17, 1902. He said:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 17, 1902.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of Saturday, the 15th instant, received yesterday, asking information regarding the reports and charges in the public press of cruelty and oppression exercised by our soldiers toward natives of the Philippines, I send you a number of documents, which I think will furnish the information you wish. Every report or charge of this description which has at any time been brought to the notice of the War Department has been made the subject of prompt investigation; and among the inclosed papers you will find the records of 13 such inquiries in which the results have been reported.

You will perceive that in substantially every case the report has proved to be either unfounded or grossly exaggerated. The particular report which was called to the attention of the Senate last week, viz, that the "water cure" is the favorite torture of the American, and especially of the Macabebe scouts, to force the natives to give information, and that a soldier who was with General Funston had stated that he had helped to administer the "water cure" to 160 natives, all but 26 of whom died, was already under investigation, which is still in progress.

Then he alludes to the fact that General Funston, in a letter which accompanies this document, had branded these insinuations as atrocious lies. Among the cases which the Secretary of War gives us in this report No. 11 is the following, found on page 20:

No. 11.

In a letter written by Sergt. Charles S. Riley, Company M, Twenty-sixth United States Volunteer Infantry, which was published in the Northampton, Mass., Herald, about March 8, 1901, in which letter the soldier related various crimes of violence against natives, it was stated that the "water cure" was administered to extort information, and that the town of Igbaras, Panay, was burned to the ground. This publication called forth a number of letters to the Department protesting against such outrages. One letter, from Isaac Bridgeman, dated Northampton, Mass., March 13, 1901, was on March 19, 1901, referred to the commanding general Department of California, for reference to the commanding officer Twenty-sixth United States Volunteer Infantry, upon its arrival in the United States, for report. This letter was returned by indorsement of the commanding officer of the Twenty-sixth United States Volunteer Infantry, dated April 24, 1901, with his report, as follows:

[Fourth indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-SIXTH INFANTRY,
UNITED STATES VOLUNTEERS,
Presidio of California, ——— —, —.

Respectfully returned.

Sergeant Riley, Company M, Twenty-sixth Infantry, United States Volunteers, states that the publication inclosed was of a private letter and without any authority whatever. The tendency of enlisted men to draw the long bow in such cases is well known. Major Cook, Captain McDonald, and Sergeant Riley state that no officers or soldiers of this regiment took part in any so-called water-cure proceedings or other threats against the natives on the occasion stated.

Undoubtedly there were violations of the rule and custom of war; and as the complainants may have overlooked notice thereof, I shall state a few cases within my personal knowledge. In November, 1899, at Jaro, a large flag of truce was used to entice officers into ambush. By order of the commander all persons displayed white flags in the country where our troops operated. This was not for protection, but to give warning to insurgents to hide their guns and disguise themselves. Privates Dugan, Hayes, and Tracy, of Company F, were murdered by the town authorities at Calinog. Private Nolan, at Dingle, was tied up by the ladies while in a stupor; the insurgents were sent for and cut his throat with a sangut. The body of Corporal Donehy, of Company D, was dug up, burned, and mutilated at Dumangas. Private O'Hearn, captured by apparently friendly people near Leon, was tied to a tree, burned for four hours with a slow fire, and finally slashed up.

Lieut. Max Wagner was assassinated on the road to Pototan, October 1, by insurgents disguised in American uniforms. These are only a few instances confined to this regiment. Atrocities committed by Sandatajanes or Pulajanes are too numerous to mention. Details can be furnished of the butcheries at Leganes and Mina and of burial alive near Barotac Nueva. The conduct of the American troops in the Philippines has been so humane as to be a continued source of surprise to all foreigners and to the natives. Although General Orders, No. 100, has not been revoked, its provisions against treachery, according to the law and custom of war of all civilized nations, have never been applied to my knowledge.

J. T. WICKMAN,
Lieutenant-Colonel Twenty-sixth Infantry,
U. S. Volunteers, Commanding.

Mr. President, I have here in my possession a letter written by the Assistant Adjutant-General of the War Department to a private citizen, which reiterates the statement that this charge, claimed to have been made by Sergeant Riley, had been thoroughly investigated; that it was absolutely untrue, and that Sergeant Riley had denied it. That is a sample of a book full of similar investigations. How much reliance can be put on any one of these will be disclosed by the facts which I shall now lay before the Senate. for I think I am justified in taking sufficient time to lay them before the Senate. Before I refer to the testimony I took before I had this witness summoned I will say that I did not want to do any injustice to the Army of the United States or to any individual associated with that Army, and I caused inquiry to be made as to the credibility and responsibility of the men whom we summoned as witnesses. In regard to Sergeant Riley himself, I read this letter:

132 NORTH ELM STREET, NORTHAMPTON, MASS.,
April 3, 1902.

Mr. HERBERT WELSH.

MY DEAR SIR: Mrs. John Storer Cobb, of Northampton, has requested me to write to you as to the character of Sergt. Charles Riley, of Florence, Mass., for truthfulness. I have known Mr. Riley all his life, and am happy and confident in saying that I should regard his testimony on any matter on which he has had opportunity to inform himself entirely reliable and conclusive.

If you wish other witnesses to his integrity you may write to Mr. George H. Ray, treasurer Nonotuck Silk Company; Mr. Frank N. Look, treasurer of Florence Manufacturing Company, and Mr. George H. Bliss, postmaster, all of Florence, Mass. You may write to all the people in Florence and will get for him (Mr. Riley) substantially the indorsement I have given.

Truly, yours,

E. G. COBB,
(For thirty-five years pastor of Florence Congregational Church).

That is one of the witnesses who is charged particularly by the War Department with having "drawn the long bow," as circulating atrocious lies, to screen culprits in the island, creating the impression that this man was slandering and lying about his fellow-soldiers who were rendering service in the Philippine Islands. What is the story of Sergeant Riley told here? I am not going to read all of it, though I ought to put it all into the RECORD. I shall, however, read a portion of the testimony found on page 1527.

Q. You have given your place of residence, I believe.
A. Northampton, Mass.
Q. When did you arrive in the Philippine Islands?
A. October 30, 1899. That is, we arrived in the harbor of Manila on the 25th ,and we arrived at outstation October 30.
Q. When did you leave?
A. I went aboard the vessel March 4, 1901, and we sailed the next day.
Q. And when did you arrive in San Francisco?
A. April 20, 1901.
Q. During your service in the Philippine Islands, what position in the Army did you hold?
A. I held all the positions from private to first sergeant. I was discharged as the first sergeant of the company.
Q. During your service there did you witness what is generally known as the water cure?
A. I did.
Q. When and where?
A. On November 27, 1900, in the town of Igbaras, Iloilo Province, Panay Island.
Q. You may state, Mr. Riley, what you saw in that regard.
A. The first thing I saw that I thought was anything out of the ordinary, in going into the quarters from downstairs——
Q. Let me premise that, perhaps. Was your company stationed at Igbaras?
A. One detachment of 15 men garrisoned the town.
Q. And what building did you occupy?
A. It was known as the convent—the convent in connection with the church. It was a convent or a school.
Q. Did you occupy the first floor or the second floor?
A. We occupied the entire building.
Q. The entire building?
A. The entire building.
Q. You may state whether there was an upper floor.
A. There was. Downstairs it was a stone building, with stone floors, and then there was a second story; it was two stories, and we occupied the upstairs with our quarters.
Q. How was the second story reached?
A. By stone steps.
Q. You may state whether or not there was a corridor at the head of the stairway.
A. There was a corridor on the right, and then we went through another corridor into the room we called our squad room, known as the quarters of the soldiers.
Q. Did you arrive there the morning of the 27th?
A. Yes, sir; at daylight.
Q. Who were with you at the time you arrived there?
A. There were from 12 to 14 men of Company M, Twenty-sixth Infantry and about 40 men of the Eighteenth United States Infantry, a mounted detachment, known as the Gordon Scouts.

Q. Did you pass into the upper story of this building?
A. What is that, sir?
Q. Did you pass that morning into the upper floor of this building?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What soldiers and officers were there?
A. Taking all the men, there must have been about 40 of the Twenty-sixth and about an equal number of the Eighteenth Infantry, regulars, about 40 of each.
Q. About 80 men in all?
A. Yes.
Q. Who commanded your company?
A. Captain McDonald, of the Twenty-sixth Infantry—Capt. Fred McDonald.
Q. What other officers connected with the regulars?
A. Captain Glenn, captain, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, judge-advocate Department Visayas, commanded the forces, consisting of detachments of Eighteenth United States Infantry and the Twenty-sixth United States Infantry Volunteers.

The judge-advocate, the prosecuting officer upon the staff of General Hughes, the department commander.

Q. Was he judge-advocate under General Hughes?
A. Yes; that was General Hughes's department. Then there was Lieutenant Conger, commanding the scouts, and the contract surgeon, Lyons.
Q. Did you pass up the stairway into the corridor above that morning, into the main hall?
A. Yes.
Q. And as you passed up, you may state what you saw.
A. I saw the presidente standing in the——
Q. Whom do you mean by the presidente?
A. The head official of the town.
Q. The town of Igbarras?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. A Filipino?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How old was he?
A. I should judge that he was a man of about 40 or 45 years.
Q. When you saw him, what was his condition?
A. He was stripped to the waist; he had nothing on but a pair of white trousers, and his hands were tied behind him.
Q. Do you remember who had charge of him?
A. Captain Glenn stood there beside him and one or two men were tying him.
Q. You may state whether or not there was a water tank in the upper corridor.
A. Just at the head of the stairs on the right there was a large galvanized-iron tank, holding probably 100 gallons, about 2 barrels. That was on a raised platform, about 10 or 12 inches, I should think, and there was a faucet on the tank. It was the tank we used for catching rainwater for drinking purposes.
Q. As you passed up, did you pass through the corridor into the hall?
A. Yes; directly through the hall into the squad room.
Q. Into the squad room?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you may state whether or not soldiers were passing up and down.
A. Yes, sir; men were congregated around the door, and they were passing back and forth from downstairs upstairs and from upstairs downstairs.
Q. You first saw the presidente under the condition you describe, with his hands being tied behind him?
A. Yes.
Q. What else did you observe being done with him?
A. He was then taken and placed under the tank, and the faucet was opened and a stream of water was forced down or allowed to run down his throat; his throat was held so he could not prevent swallowing the water, so that he had to allow the water to run into his stomach.
Q. What connection was there between the faucet and his mouth?
A. There was no connection; he was directly under the faucet.
Q. Directly under the faucet?
A. Directly under the faucet and with his mouth held wide open.
Q. Was anything done besides forcing his mouth open and allowing the water to run down?
A. When he was filled with water it was forced out of him by pressing a foot on his stomach or else with their hands.
Q. How was his mouth held open?
A. That I could not state exactly, whether it was by pressing the cheek or throat. Some say that it was the throat, but I could not state positively as to that, as to exactly how they held his mouth open.
Q. About how long was that continued?
A. I should say from five to fifteen minutes.
Q. During the process what officers were present, if anybody?
A. Lieutenant Conger was present practically all the time. Captain Glenn walked back and forth from one room to the other, and went in there two or three times. Lieutenant Conger was in command of water detail—

They had a regular water detail—

it was under his supervision.
Q. You may state whether or not there was any Filipino interpreter present.
A. There was a native interpreter that stood directly over this man—the presidente—as he lay on the floor.
Q. Did you observe whether the interpreter communicated with this presidente?
A. He did, at different times. He practically kept talking to him all the time, kept saying some one word which I should judge meant "confess" or "answer."
Q. Could you understand what was said?
A. No, sir; I could not understand the native tongue at all.
Q. At the conclusion, what then was done?
A. After he was willing to answer he was allowed to partly sit up, and kind of rolled on his side, and then he answered the questions put to him by the officer through the interpreter.
Q. You say they pushed the water out of him. How was that done; what was the process?
A. I did not see the water forced from him. Some said it was forced by the hand, and others by placing the foot on the stomach; I didn't see the water forced from him.
Q. You did not see that?
A. No, sir.
Q. After he got up what did you next see?
A. It was after he gave all the desired information. He was then untied and allowed to dress, and taken downstairs in front of the quarters.
Q. Where did they take him?
A. They took him downstairs outside the building, and he stood in front of the building, waiting for his horse. He was to guide the expedition up into the mountains.
Q. While standing on the sidewalk what took place?
A. More information was sought for; and as he refused to answer, a second treatment was ordered.
Q. Where were you at that time?
A. I was in front of the building at the time, on the sidewalk.
Q. In front?
A. Yes; on the stone walk. They started to take him inside the building and Captain Glenn said, "Don't take him inside. Right here is good enough." One of the men of the Eighteenth Infantry went to his saddle and took a syringe from the saddlebag, and another man was sent for a can of water, what we call a kerosene can, holding about 5 gallons. He brought this can of water down from upstairs, and then a syringe was inserted, one end in the water and the other end in his mouth. This time he was not bound, but he was held by four or five men and the water was forced into his mouth from the can, through the syringe.

By Senator BURROWS:

Q. Was this another party?
A. No; this was the same man. The syringe did not seem to have the desired effect, and the doctor ordered a second one. The man got a second syringe, and that was inserted in his nose. Then the doctor ordered some salt, and a handful of salt was procured and thrown into the water. Two syringes were then in operation. The interpreter stood over him in the meantime asking for this second information that was desired. Finally he gave in and gave the information that they sought, and then he was allowed to rise.
Q. May I ask the name of the doctor?
A. Dr. Lyons, the contract surgeon.
Q. An American?
A. Yes, sir.

By Senator RAWLINS:

Q. Was it Captain Glenn who said not to take him in?
A. Captain Glenn.
Q. Did he make any other command before that at that time?
A. Not that I know of.
Q. Not that you recall?
A. No.

Without taking the time to quote further, when Sergeant Riley arrived at San Francisco he testified that he was summoned before Colonel Dickman, who made the report to the Secretary of War to which I have referred; that Colonel Dickman asked him if members of his regiment or company had taken part in this water cure, and that he said they had not. Colonel Dickman asked him if he had seen the water cure inflicted, and he said that he had. Thereupon it seems that Colonel Dickman made the report to the Secretary of War, to the effect that Sergeant Riley and others had denied that the members of his regiment had taken any part in the infliction of the water cure, but made no reference to the statement which Riley made to him, to the effect that he had seen the water cure administered and that it had actually occurred.

William L. Smith, a corporal in the same company, came and testified substantially to these same facts, and in addition thereto testified to the infliction of the water cure on two policemen on the same day in question by the water detail under the direction of Captain Glenn, the judge-advocate on General Hughes's staff.

H. A. Davis, a man evidently frank and truthful, and manly in every way in his appearance, appeared and testified to these inflictions of the water cure upon the presidente or mayor of Igbarras and the infliction of it upon the policemen by the regular water detail. In addition thereto he testified, that on the same day Dr. Lyon went into the schoolhouse, and presenting a pistol at the head of the schoolmaster or school-teacher, threatened his life unless he made a certain statement which was demanded of him by Dr. Lyon. Thereupon they obtained the statement, whatever of truth there may have been in it.

We pressed this matter, and could have produced witnesses without number in support of these same facts showing that this torture was inflicted in public in the presence of numerous men, and under the direction of the judge-advocate on the staff of General Hughes, until one member of the majority of the committee arose in his place when it was proposed to make further investigation of this matter and declared that he would object to any further testimony upon a fact which was proved conclusively, and concerning which there was no dispute. So that the committee at this point have decided to call no more witnesses in support of the facts which I have now detailed to the Senate, on the ground that they are conclusively proved to be true.

This is not all that those witnesses testified to. This company of the Twenty-sixth Volunteer Infantry were at the town of Igbarras for seven months, the months prior to the 27th of November, 1900, and until the approaching March, 1901. They stated that during that time there were 15 men in that garrison. They also stated that there had been no trouble, no assault committed upon any American soldier; that that community had been peaceable. It was a town of 10,000 inhabitants and was in a district which contained about 25,000 inhabitants. These scouts—the Gordon Scouts—and Captain Glenn appear upon the scene early in the morning of the 27th of November, 1900.

Seemingly, according to this testimony, they desired to establish certain things, namely, that the mayor of the town was in reality disloyal to the United States; that the policemen of the town were not acting in good faith in maintaining the peace; that in some way or other they were rendering aid, directly or indirectly, to the insurrectos in the field. In the morning officers were sent out, who arrested the mayor of the town. He was dragged in and stripped, and Captain Glenn, the judge-advocate, decided to prove his case, and when he had proved his case he decided to inflict the penalty. How did he prove his case? He took the poor old man and stripped him, brutally laid him down upon his back under a faucet, thrust a stick in his mouth to keep it open, and let the water run in until he was filled. According to the testimony of these witnesses, his eyes became bloodshot, and he shrieked in pain and agony.

While in that situation, the interpreter, doubtless compelled to perform this infamous service, stooped over him and said, "Confess, confess." It makes us think of Copernicus when he was subjected to the torture and thrown down. They wanted him to announce that the world did not revolve upon its axis, and was promised if he would say so that they would let him go, or else they would take his life, and he, refusing to say so, they took his life. So this presidente was tortured until he was compelled to say what these men wanted him to say. If he had not said it, what would have happened to him we can only conjecture; but, being unable to endure that form of torture longer, he said what they desired he should say. He declared that he himself was a traitor and was communicating with the insurrectos in the field.

Not satisfied with that, they wanted to get corroborating testimony. They doubted the credibility of this witness, and the testimony elicited in this way, in this sort of judicial proceeding, by the judge-advocate, a prosecutor of the Army. So they wanted corroboration, and they arrested two policemen, and throwing them down and placing over them the interpreter, tortured them and wracked their nerves until they shrieked with agony and pain, and, to obtain relief, were compelled to give testimony, doubtless in corroboration of the testimony of the mayor.

Still they were not satisfied. They wanted the more credible testimony of the school-teacher of the town, and an Army contract surgeon, under the direction of Captain Glenn, visited the place where the little children were congregated, and, as an example of the beneficence of the administration of the American Government to the rising generation of the Filipinos, branished his weapon, and putting it at the head of the teacher in the presence of the pupils, said: "Confess! Confess that you are a traitor; that your people are traitors;" and under danger of death thus threatened in the presence of the little children, he doubtless confessed, whether to the truth or a falsehood I know not and care not. In that way the testimony of the presidente was corroborated by the policemen, and the policemen were corroborated by the school-teacher, and what was the penalty? They sent the old man to prison. They sent him away to Manila, and he is doubtless now in that infamons Spanish den, languishing away his days, convicted by a judge-advocate representing the authority of the American Republic, based upon testimony extorted thus and corroborated only in the same way.

What were the other penalties? There were 10,000 men, women, and little children in that town. That evening, at 8 o'clock, a most opportune hour, direction was given to the soldiers to proceed to the head of the town with an interpreter and go along the street with all speed and begin the work of destruction, burning the village, beginning at the top; and the only notice of it as they marched up the street was that the crier called out to such people as heard him that they were going to burn the town. They got to the top of the town and they began the work of destruction. The torch was applied to every house, and they were all destroyed with the exception of 15. Ten thousand people who had committed no offense whatsoever against any human being, so far as anything disclosed in this case is concerned, had their homes wiped from the face of the earth. Men, women, and children were turned out to starve; yes, their provisions destroyed, their household effects destroyed, everything except that which they had upon their person, if anything, destroyed.

These men, women, and little children were the victims of this "stiffer" policy of General Hughes, and I have read to you already the excuse General Hughes gave. He said, "Yes; we burned the town. The best way to punish the man is to punish the women and children." The most effectual method of bringing to terms a parent who loves his child is to inflict torture and punishment upon his unoffending offspring. Why? Because the War Department and Colonel Dickman tell us some cruel things had happened, mentioning three or four instances which are named in the report, and when they are made the subject of scrutiny and inquiry what do we find? The nearest one of those that happened was more than 40 miles away. The War Department said the wrong was inflicted by insurgents, but the testimony showed that the cruelty was inflicted by robbers, or common murderers and plunderers, and not by insurrectos. But nobody claims that the people in this town had the slightest connection with any of those things. Still the town was destroyed and their leading men carted away and put into prison, where they are now languishing.

They did not stop with burning the barrios. On the same night they proceeded out to a little hamlet and wiped from the face of the earth the habitation of men, women, and children. They went 12 miles away to another town of 12,000 and burned it to the ground, and not a vestige remained. They went elsewhere and continued this work of death and desolation in order to give those people a benign example of American administration! Oh, that is not all. We have it now plainly upon the official records. This was in the island of Panay, in the province of Iloilo. It was made a howling wilderness, and the people were tortured.

Then they jumped over to Samar. We find in the official reports, and I have not time to read them, but I will verify every statement I make by the official record if anyone desires me to do so, that General Smith took charge in Samar, under command of General Chaffee. We find General Chaffee declaring to him in substance, as shown by his report, "Wage this war vigilantly; yes, relentlessly; yes, wage it according to your own discretion; enjoin upon your subordinate commanders to employ the utmost severity; proceed, and use your own discretion. These are not civilized people." General Hughes said they are not. "This is no longer civilized war." The Articles of War, issued under the high authority of Mr. Lieber, of the War Department, are cast to the winds, although they are sent to us by the War Department as a proof of the humane character of the war. It is no longer civilized war, and he was commanded to do those things.

Among other subordinates was Lieutenant or Captain Waller, and after Waller had gone over the island and dispensed death and desolation General Smith in an official order recommended his promotion. General Smith issues his commands in conformity with the command of General Chaffee. He immediately issued an edict to the effect that all the people are presumed to be traitors and public enemies, and are to be dealt with as if in open arms unless they can conclusively show their loyalty; and there are three methods alone by which they can make that proof. Little children, women, and men must conclusively prove their loyalty.

There were some ladrones, or robbers—say about 200—in an island containing many hundred thousand acres, in the midst of jungles and precipitous mountains—robbers and ladrones and all sorts of people, such as might reasonably be expected to congregate there. They made forays upon the people, inflicting torture and punishment upon the Filipinos as well as the Americans. The Americans said, "Take us out and show us these villains and you will thereby prove your loyalty to the United States. Disclose to us where these people in the hills have hid their arms, and lead us thither in order that we may deprive them of the instruments of destruction, and thereby you will prove your loyalty; or else gird up your loins, take your weapons, and join our forces and do battle against your own people, destroying the lives of your own compatriots and seizing and burning your own villages and inflicting torture upon your own people," because that was the method of warfare which was to be waged. "Take part in this uncivilized warfare"—and that is the third and last method by which these people could conclusively prove their loyalty, to the satisfaction of our military commanders.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator does not mean to give the impression to the Senate that there has been any testimony as to the island of Samar with respect to what he is stating?

Mr. RAWLINS. No; I am quoting from the official records.

Mr. LODGE. But there has been no testimony at all on those points.

Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator says that the official reports and orders of General Chaffee and General Smith and the reports of Captain Waller, sent to us, and of General Bell——

Mr. LODGE. I am not questioning them. I meant that we have not examined into that as we have into the island of Panay.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have examined into it, and I am taking for the basis of every statement I make the official records.

Mr. TELLER. You had better read them.

Mr. RAWLINS. I will complete my statement, and then I will read the extracts, because I want to make a continuous statement.

Mr. President, that rule was applied, as I will show, practically not only in Samar at the command of General Smith, but by General Bell and by General Hughes during the latter part of his administration in the island. We come now to something which has not officially appeared, but concerning which we have authentic information.

Captain Waller went to the island. I am not going to discount the severity of the hardships which are ascribed to the men of his expedition. I do not want to say one word in derogation of the men who were performing this service. I would not arraign any of these subordinates. God knows they were performing the most thankless and unhonored task that ever soldiers were called upon to perform. General Smith says of Captain Waller: "I commend him for promotion because he has faithfully and relentlessly carried out the directions which I gave him."

That appears in General Smith's official report, sent to us from the War Department. It appears in the orders, if we are to believe the report, the authenticity of which is recognized in the official documents sent to the Senate Committee on the Philippines by the Secretary of War, that Waller was arraigned and tried before a court-martial, and that his defense was not that he had not been guilty of the offenses which were charged against him (and we know what those were), but that he had performed them under the command of his superior, and in that trial he not only testified himself under oath, but he was corroborated by Captains Porter and Bearas and a corporal whose name I do not recollect just now. Captain Porter and Captain Bearas, as will appear from the official reports, were both recommended by General Smith for promotion and were promoted from captains to majors upon the ground of their gallantry and efficiency in the service.

We have the official record to prove the reliability of these witnesses, who have all testified, if we are to believe the reports of the Associated Press, credit to which is given by the War Department, that these things occurred. The order to Waller and his expedition was to make the island of Samar a howling wilderness, to encumber themselves with no prisoners, to kill everyone over the age of 10, and that they proceeded relentlessly to carry those orders into effect. The records show that men who had submitted to our forces as prisoners, and who were helpless and unarmed, crossing the island and enduring the pain and hardship that at least the men endured during the progress of the journey, finally reaching their destination, were charged with having failed to satisfy the hunger of their captors or with having failed to disclose to the men in whose custody they were the kind of roots that might be beneficial for food.

This was the offense that was charged against them. They were taken out by lot and shot to death. Not only that, but they were tied to trees and under this general authority to spare not, either to end the war or to inflict suffering relentlessly and in cold blood, they shot off an arm or a leg, and they continued the process for hours, if we are to believe the reports, until finally in agony the man perished. This man, upon that charge deliberately made by the officials in Manila and arraigned for trial, seemingly was acquitted because of the command given to him by his superiors, which covered the acts themselves.

But we pass from Samar to Batangas, and what do we find there? The governor of Batangas officially reported in December of last year that of the inhabitants of that province, of whom there were more than 300,000, but 200,000 remained; that the others had perished. We have it in an unofficial statement of General MacArthur that one-sixth of the inhabitants of Luzon had also perished.

But, Mr. President, I do not care to enter into the discussion of this particular phase of the matter this evening, because, in order that I may do no injustice to any man in the presentation of this statement, I desire to be entirely accurate, and I may collate the official documents which bear upon it in a more consistent manner, and make greater progress in the course of this discussion if I am permitted to delay its further continuance until to-morrow.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Utah is evidently wearied.

Mr. LODGE. I have no desire to press the Senator from Utah, of course, and if he desires to continue to-morrow I will either move an executive session, if any Senator desires one, or I will move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. RAWLINS. That is agreeable to me.

CENTRAL ARIZONA RAILWAY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 4363, entitled "An act granting the Central Arizona Railway Company a right of way for railroad purposes through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve."

The Secretary of the Interior writes me as follows concerning the attached bill:

"I inclose a copy of the report on the bill by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated the 5th instant, for your full information.

"He states therein that it is questionable whether or not this company could be required to supply a bond to protect the Government from damage by reason of occupancy of the right of way provided for by this bill, should it become a law.

"He also states that this company could acquire the right of way under existing laws, as other companies have done, by complying with the usual requirements, one of which is the filing of a bond for the purpose mentioned, and that he knows of no reason why this company should be exempted from such requirements."

In addition thereto I have had the Commissioner of the Land Office before me. He informs me that in its present form it would be impossible to exact the guaranty from the railroad that would insure its making good damages resulting from fire or any carelessness on the part of the railroad company in the forest reserve through which this railroad is to pass. He further informs me that there is at present a law which will permit the railroad, if it chooses to take advantage of it, to go across forest reservations under proper safeguards, and that there is no reason why this railroad should be singled out to be favored beyond all other railroads by being excepted from the necessity of complying with the departmental regulations with which all other railrcads are forced to comply.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, April 23, 1902.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. LODGE. I move that the message and bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 24, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 23, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. CREAMER. Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Journal is not approved yet. Without objection, the Journal will be considered as approved.

There was no objection, and the Journal was approved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. CREAMER. An article appears this morning in a metropolitan journal referring to the post-office at New York City, which is located in the district I have the honor to represent, charging the delegation from that city with being "dummies" and derelict in their duties here. I ask the Clerk to read the following article:

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK'S NEW POST-OFFICE.

The House Committee on Public Buildings yesterday agreed upon its omnibus bill calling for appropriations aggregating $30,000,000.

What about the sorely needed uptown post-office for New York?

New York is graciously awarded a commission to come on here and select a site.

Senator PLATT'S bill, which passed the Senate, providing for a commission on which representatives of the great commercial organizations should be members, and appropriating two and one-half millions for the land and building—that bill is ignored.

Three members of the Cabinet are alone authorized to select and contract for the land, and as for an appropriation and the construction of the building, our kind friends in Washington may take the matter under consideration at some future session.

It is not at all surprising to learn from our special Washington dispatch this morning that "the New York members of the House were not consulted." If New York had real Representatives instead of more than a dozen dummies in the House they would not wait to be invited by the committee. They would have to be consulted.

Unless a strenuous effort is made to have the Senate bill taken up and passed our "Representatives" are liable to learn something to their disadvantage.

The SPEAKER. This presents no question of personal privilege.

Mr. CREAMER. It is a question involving the reputation of the Representatives of that city.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman wants to ask unanimous consent for a personal explanation, the Chair will be glad to submit the request.

Mr. CREAMER. I would like to have about two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent——

Mr. PAYNE. Is there any limit of time? How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. CREAMER. A few minutes.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. CREAMER. Not over five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CREAMER. The bill referred to in that paper was passed by the Senate in the last week of January. The following week I called at the room of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and informed the chairman of the committee as to the condition of affairs concerning the post-office facilities in the city of New York and urged him to report the bill. No doubt a majority of the members of this House are familiar with the condition of things there; no doubt you are familiar with the fact that an enormous surplus of revenue is received there which contributes largely toward the postal facilities of other parts of the country. Subsequently there appeared an article in a newspaper interviewing the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER], where he stated that if there was any evidence that the New York delegates were united he would report the bill.

Whether that was a genuine interview or not, of course, I am not able to state; but it was never contradicted. The New York delegation then met in a room here in the Capitol, and with our dear friend [Mr. CUMMINGS], now stricken down, at our head, we called upon the chairman of the committee at his room, and asked for a report of the bill. Mr. CUMMINGS urged us subsequently to be patient. This was the latter part of February. He urged us to be patient; that the chairman had assured him that action would be taken in reference to the measure, and that a separate bill would be reported. We acquiesced. While Mr. CUMMINGS was on his feet in this House there was no voice or echo from that committee but that we were to have a separate bill. Now, it seems, when we are bereft of the services of that member, we are informed, true indirectly, that a new commission is to be created, and that the bill will not include an appropriation.

I insist, Mr. Speaker, that the New York delegation, so far as I know, have performed their duty; and this reflection on their want of interest in this public question is not justified. I will not deny, however, that, judging from what I have read in the newspapers concerning what has transpired here, that this editorial printed in the New York Herald is perfectly justified.

Mr. LESSLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be recognized for five minutes in the line of the gentleman's remarks on the subject of the post-office at New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may have five minutes to address the House on the subject which has been discussed by the gentleman preceding him. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and that gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LESSLER. Mr. Speaker, very soon after I came into the House, in January, the matter of the New York post-office was brought to my attention; and while I had not intended to say so before, and have not spoken of it, the meeting that took place with the entire New York City delegation was brought about at my instigation. All of us met, and the new members said to Mr. CUMMINGS and the other older members that their judgment was best as to the method of obtaining what we desired, and that we would follow them and go to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. At their instigation we visited the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and requested that, with minor changes, the Cummings bill be reported to the House. Since that time I have personally been at that committee all the time, and yesterday afternoon I learned that we were to have in the omnibus bill a commission to investigate the subject, and that our request as a delegation, as a united delegation, irrespective of political lines, knowing what our people needed and wanted, was to be ignored by that committee and they were to bring in their own measure.

However, my judgment of the situation was and is that when that bill comes on the floor of this House we are sufficient in number, knowing what our people want and what they must have for the benefit of the rest of the United States, and not of New York alone, to present to this House sufficient reasons why this Congress should legislate to give us an appropriation so that we can commence at once to build the New York post-office. The delegation, Republicans and Democrats, have not been derelict, but have done the full measure of their duty toward getting what New York needs and what the United States ought to have—an additional and a great post-office in the city of New York.

PRINTING OF NAUTICAL ALMANAC.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Printing to call up House joint resolution 177, providing for the printing of the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That hereafter the "usual number" of copies of the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac shall not be printed. In lieu thereof there shall be printed and bound 1,100 copies of the same, uniform with the editions printed for the Navy Department, as provided in section 73, paragraph 5, of an act approved January 12, 1895, providing for the public printing, binding, and distribution of public documents, 100 copies for the Senate, 400 for the House, and 600 for the Superintendent of Documents for distribution to State and Territorial libraries and designated depositories.

The SPEAKER. This will require unanimous consent. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING REPORT OF GOVERNOR OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I am also directed by the committee to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of concurrent resolution No. 30.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print 5,000 additional copies of the report of the governor of Oklahoma for 1901, and to deliver the same to the Department of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEATWOLE, a motion to reconsider the two votes by which the two foregoing resolutions were agreed to was laid on the table.

HARRY C. MIX.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4446) for the relief of Harry C. Mix.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Harry C. Mix, of Bibb County, Ga., be, and he is hereby, relieved from any and all liability to pay a certain recognizance given by A. F. Holt and the said Harry C. Mix as security for the said A. F. Holt on the 23d day of January, 1895, in the penal sum of $1,500, by which recognizance they acknowledged themselves to be held and firmly bound to the United States of America that the said A. F. Holt should personally appear at the then next term of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Georgia, to be held at Savannah, Ga., in said district, on the first Monday in January, 1895, and at the succeeding term or terms, should the case be continued, the said A. F. Holt being charged with the embezzlement of postal funds: Provided, however, That the said Harry C. Mix shall first pay to the Government of the United States all costs that may have accrued upon any proceeding instituted for the purpose of forfeiting such recognizance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to line 5, on page 2. The word "court" has been inserted before the word "cost." Is it the intention of the gentleman to move an amendment?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I move an amendment in that particular.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves to amend by adding the word "court," after the word "all," in line 5, page 2; so that it will read "all court costs."

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTLETT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 698, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3153) to amend section 698 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 698 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 698. Upon the appeal of any cause in equity or of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, or of prize or no prize, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court below, upon payment to him of a sum not to exceed $5 as his fees, by the appellant, together with the actual cost of transmitting the same, as hereinafter mentioned, either by mail or express, to attach together the original bill, libel, process, answer, replication, and all other pleadings, processes, motions, notices, orders, and decrees which shall have been filed in said cause, together with all the original minutes of all testimony in the cause, whether taken in open court by commissioner or settled by the court, and also copy of all journal and calendar entries, and all other proceedings of record in the cause not embraced in the original papers hereinbefore mentioned, and transmit the same, together with his certificate of the genuineness of the said original and the correctness of said copies of such journal and calendar entries and records, to the Supreme Court or to the circuit court of appeals, as the case may be, within fifteen days after such appeals shall be perfected; and if an appellant shall neglect to pay to such clerk the fee above provided for making such returns for thirty days after such repeal has been perfected, he shall be deemed to have waived his appeal, and the appellee may at once proceed to enforce his decree the same as if no appeal had been taken; and when an appeal shall have been so heard and determined the records and files sent from the court below, together with the proceedings and decree or order of the Supreme Court or of the circuit court of appeals therein, and all things concerning the same, shall be remitted to the court below from which the appeal was taken, when such further proceedings shall be thereupon had as may be necessary to carry into effect the decree or order of the appellate court. And be it further enacted, That whenever by the rules and practice of the Supreme Court or of the circuit court of appeals the record in the cause is required to be printed, the appellant may cause the same to be printed, subject only to the rules of the appellate court as to the style, manner, and time of such printing."

With the following amendments recommended by the committee:

(1) By striking out the word "copy" in line 3, on page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "upon payment to him of 15 cents per 100 words therefor, copies;"

(2) By striking out the word "fee" in line 12, on page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fees;"

(3) By inserting immediately after the word "returns" in line 12, on page 2, the words "and copies," and

(4) By striking out the word "repeal" in line 13, on page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "appeal," and that when so amended the bill be passed.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, under existing law when a case is taken to an appellate court by appeal or writ of error, it is necessary in carrying the case up to have a transcript of all the files in the case, including the testimony which may be in writing, made and certified by the clerk of the trial court. This often imposes a great expense upon the parties. In some cases it has been known to be as great as $2,000. This bill simply provides that instead of the clerk certifying up a transcript of the files and written evidence, he shall attach together all the original files and testimony and certify to them on the payment to him of $5 and the cost of transmitting the papers to the appellate court.

In addition to that, he is allowed 15 cents for each 100 words for making a transcript of all that part of the record, the originals of which can not be sent up, like the journal and the minutes on the judge's docket, etc. That is the whole effect of the bill, to allow the parties to have the original files certified up, and when the case is finally decided by the appellate court the original files and transcript of the record are sent back to the trial court and remain on file there. It is to expedite the case and to save expense to the litigants and to simplify the whole proceedings. This is the method of proceeding followed in several States of the Union; and it is found to operate very beneficially. It has met with approval wherever it has been tried in our State courts.

Mr. CLAYTON rose.

Mr. WARNER. I will only add that this is a unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I rose for the purpose of supplementing the statement of the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. WARNER] by the further statement that this is the unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee, made after full consideration; and the bill ought to pass.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WARNER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DONATION OF SPARS OF CAPTURED BATTLE SHIPS.

Mr. WILEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 10144) to donate to the State of Alabama the spars of the captured battle ships Don Juan d'Austria and Almirante Oquendo was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the lower mast taken by Capt. Richmond P. Hobson, of the United States Navy, from the captured Spanish battle ship Don Juan d'Austria, at Manila, and the topmast from the Almirante Oquendo, at Santiago de Cuba, be, and the same are hereby, donated by the United States to the State of Alabama, to be used in the erection of a flagstaff on the capitol grounds of said State as a perpetual memorial to the value of the American Navy.

SEC. 2. That the State of Alabama be reimbursed the expense of transporting said masts from the navy-yard at Brooklyn and Norfolk, respectively, to Montgomery, Ala., out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs were read, as follows:

In lines 3 and 4 strike out the words "by Capt. Richard P. Hobson, of the United States Navy."

Strike out all of section 2.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by me at an early day of the present session, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to donate to the State of Alabama the Spanish masts taken from the sunken battle ships Oquendo at Santiago and the Don Juan d'Austria at Manila, and brought to the United States through the instrumentality of Naval Constructor Capt. Richmond Pearson Hobson, the hero of the Merrimac, and by him presented to the people of Alabama, to be erected on the grounds of the State capitol at Montgomery, from which to display the first American flag hoisted in Cuba—said masts and flag to be the property of the State, and to be kept on exhibition as a perpetual memorial of the valor of the American Navy in the two greatest sea battles of the world and fought more than 8,000 miles apart.

This matter was first brought to my attention last October, at which time I was requested by prominent citizens of Montgomery, my home town, to take the matter in hand as the Representative in Congress from that district. I promptly wrote to the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, stating, in substance, that these masts had been brought to the United States through the efforts of Captain Hobson and presented by him to the State of Alabama; that Gen. Joseph Wheeler, a hero in two wars and under two flags, had given to the State the above-mentioned flag; that said relics were of no military value; that several of the other cities of the State possessed various kinds of mementos of the war, in which both the North and South participated, and in which they bravely vied with one another in generous rivalry in upholding the honor of the old flag.

Under date of October 14, 1901, I received a reply from Hon. John D. Long, Secretary of the Navy, in which he stated that he had authorized the commandants of the navy-yards, New York and Norfolk, to loan to the municipal authorities of the city of Montgomery the articles in question, upon application therefor by the mayor of Montgomery. Under date of October 21, 1901, the authorities at Montgomery received a letter from Capt. W. W. Reisinger, commandant of the navy-yard at Pensacola, Fla., in which he stated that he had been ordered by the honorable Secretary of the Navy to furnish three seamen, with a warrant officer in charge, to report to the mayor of Montgomery for temporary duty in connection with the erection of the above spars.

After some difficulty in the matter of transportation of said masts, on account of their great length, etc., they were finally transported to Montgomery.

The history of the donation of these masts to Alabama by Captain Hobson is familiar to the reading public. He advised the governor of the State that he had shipped the same to America and had arranged to donate them to the State. Upon their arrival in this country it was thought that they, technically speaking, were the property of the Government and could not be donated for any purpose to any particular State or section of the country without a special act of Congress authorizing the same. Finally the Navy Department decided that the masts could be shipped to Alabama and a bill afterwards passed by Congress confirming title in the State to the same.

These masts are now at Montgomery. The Navy Department does not want them. They have absolutely no military value, and to put the matter finally and forever at rest I ask that this bill may become a law.

The report from the Committee on Naval Affairs, accompanying the bill to this House, contains the following words:

These masts of the vessels heretofore mentioned are of no military value, and are now loaned by the Navy Department to the city of Montgomery, which desires to use said masts on the grounds of the State capitol at Montgomery for flag poles to display the first American flag hoisted in Cuba during the Spanish-American war and presented by Gen. Joseph Wheeler to the State of Alabama. The masts are of historic value only, and this bill simply vests the title to the same in the State of Alabama.

I have complied with my promise in introducing this bill. That it meets the approval of the Navy Department is made further manifest by the following communication from Secretary Long to the Speaker of this House, which he has kindly submitted to me and which I will read:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 16, 1902.

SIR: Your letter of the 10th instant, inclosing a copy of the bill (H. R. 10144) to donate to the State of Alabama the spars of the captured battle ships Don Juan d'Austria and Almirante Oquendo, has been received, and in reply to your request for an expression of the Department's views on the subject I have the honor to state that no objection is perceived to the donation to the State of Alabama of the spars of said vessels, as provided in the bill.

In compliance with the request contained in your communication above mentioned, I return herewith the bill in question with the report thereon.

Very respectfully,

JNO. D. LONG, Secretary.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

I desire to state briefly that it is peculiarly appropriate that these masts be permanently erected in the city of Montgomery, not only the capital of Alabama, but also the first capital of the Southern Confederacy. They are to be utilized as flagstaffs from which to display the starry banner of the Union—the standard of a reunited country—as an emblem of the blended patriotism of the men, and the sons of the men, who wore both the blue and the gray in fratricidal conflict in the long ago between the two great sections of our grand and glorious Republic. It will furnish another evidence of the truth that all sectional lines have been obliterated and that we are banded together once more and forever in the common bonds of union, loyalty, fraternal love, and civil liberty. [Applause.]

The question being taken, the amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INDIGENT CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, with amendments which I will offer at the proper time.

The bill (H. R. 13819) for the relief of certain indigent Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior, to deposit in the United States subtreasury at St. Louis, Mo., to the credit of the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, the sum of $30,000 of the fund now in the United States Treasury to the credit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, derived from the sale of town lots under an act approved June 28, 1898, being "An act for the protection of the people of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," the said sum to be used for certain destitute Choctaw Indians in the manner hereinafter provided, and charged against the proportionate share of said fund belonging to the Choctaws.

SEC. 2. That Gilbert W. Dukes, principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, George W. Scott, treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, and Green McCurtain, ex-principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, are hereby constituted a commission, with authority to investigate and determine what Choctaw citizens are destitute and in absolute need of help; and they are hereby authorized and empowered to supply to said destitute Choctaws such food as may be necessary for their maintenance as they may determine to be right and proper, the same to be paid for out of the aforesaid $20,000.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior, to deposit in the United States subtreasury at St. Louis, Mo., to the credit of the treasurer of the Chickasaw Nation, the sum of $20,000, $10,000 of which shall be taken from the balance of the arrears of interest of $558,520.54 appropriated by the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stat., 495), and $10,000 out of the Chickasaw national fund of $60,000 placed upon the books of the Treasury of the United States by the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1901, to the credit of the Chickasaw tribe.

SEC. 4. That D. H. Johnson, governor of the Chickasaw Nation, W. T. Ward, treasurer of said nation, and P. S. Mosly, ex-governor of said nation, are hereby constituted a commission with authority to investigate and determine what Chickasaw citizens are destitute and in absolute need of help, and they are hereby authorized and empowered to supply said destitute Chickasaws with such food as may be necessary for their maintenance as they may determine to be right and proper. Said commission is also authorized to reimburse the governor of the Chickasaw Nation for the actual expenses heretofore incurred by him in supplying indigent Chickasaws with necessary food and raiment, payment to be made from said fund: Provided, That the members of said Choctaw and Chickasaw commission shall not be allowed any compensation for their services except the actual necessary expenses while engaged in said work.

The Clerk read the following proposed amendments:

In line 7, page 1, strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty."

In line 14, page 1, strike out "belonging to the Choctaws" and insert "due to each Choctaw Indian receiving relief under the provisions hereof."

At the end of section 2, insert the following:

"But not exceeding to any beneficiary the amount he is entitled to receive from said fund as his distributive share."

Insert in line 19, page 2, after the words "Five hundred and fifty-eight thousand five hundred and twenty dollars and fifty-four cents" the words "excluding the incompetent fund."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, there are two other amendments which have been suggested by the Department.

The SPEAKER. Committee amendments? None of the amendments just read are in the bill as sent to the desk.

Mr. CURTIS. They are amendments suggested in a letter from the Department——

The SPEAKER. And subsequently adopted by the committee?

Mr. CURTIS. No, sir; but I was authorized to offer amendments suggested by the Department.

The SPEAKER. These amendments can be sent up afterwards.

Mr. CANNON. I think it is probably material that the amendments should be read now. I have had a conversation with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] about this bill, but I want to ask this question: Whether, after conference with the Department, he is satisfied that under the provisions of this bill no Indian who is relieved will be relieved except from his own funds; in other words, that this relief can not in any event be a charge against the United States Treasury, but will be charged against the funds to which the individual Indian is entitled?

Mr. CURTIS. I am satisfied that that will be the effect of the bill with the adoption of the amendments which I send to the desk. In this connection, I would like to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Department in reference to this measure.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, April 21, 1902.

HON. CHARLES CURTIS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In accordance with your verbal request for the views of the Department upon H. R. 13819, entitled "A bill for the relief of certain indigent Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," I beg leave to submit the following:

The first section of said bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior, to deposit in the United States subtreasury at St. Louis, Mo., to the credit of the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, the sum of $30,000 of the fund now in the United States Treasury to the credit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations derived from the sale of town lots under an act approved June 28, 1898, commonly called the "Curtis Act," said sum to be used for the relief of certain destitute Choctaw Indians in the manner hereinafter provided in the following section and charged against the proportionate share of said fund belonging to the Choctaws.

The first amendment suggested is a change of the amount from $30,000 to $20,000, which is the same amount as that heretofore recommended by the Department in its letter dated April 18, 1902.

The second amendment is to strike out in the fourteenth line the word "belonging" and insert in lieu thereof the word "due." Also to strike out the word "the" at the end of the line and insert in lieu thereof the word "each," and change the word "Choctaws" to "Choctaw" in the fifteenth line, and add thereto the words "Indian receiving relief under the provisions hereof." These amendments meet the approval of the Department.

By section 29 of the "Curtis Act" it is provided that "the money paid into the United States Treasury for the sale of town lots shall be for the benefit of the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes (freedmen excepted), and at the end of one year from the ratification of this agreement, and at the end of each year thereafter, the funds so accumulated shall be divided and paid to the Choctaws and Chickasaws (freedmen excepted), each member of the two tribes to receive an equal portion thereof."

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs on March 25, 1902, reported to the Department that the amount derived from the sales of town lots under said provision credited to the Choctaw Nation, was $90,718.56.

It is clear that no injustice will be done if the amount advanced for the relief of the indigent Indians be charged up to the share of each Choctaw Indian receiving relief. The effect is only to anticipate the payment provided for in said section of the "Curtis Act," which, without further legislation, would have to be distributed to all the members of said nation as provided therein.

The funds arising from the sale of town lots will continue to increase as the lots of the several towns in the nations are sold and the proceeds paid into the Treasury.

The second section is proposed to be amended by adding after the word "dollars" the following: "but not exceeding to any beneficiary the amount he is entitled to receive from said fund as his distributive share." The Department has no objection to said provision. It will be a wholesome restriction upon the commission and tend to insure a proper distribution of the relief.

Section 3 authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the request of the Secretary of the Interior, to deposit in the United States subtreasury at St. Louis, Mo., to the credit of the treasurer of the Chickasaw Nation, the sum of $20,000, $10,000 of which shall be taken from the balance of arrears of interest of $558,520.54 appropriated by the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stat.. 495), and $10,000 out of the Chickasaw national fund of $60,000 placed upon the books of the Treasury of the United States by the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., 240), to the credit of the Chickasaw tribe.

Inasmuch as there were two funds to which said appropriation was to be credited, it is recommended that after the word "cents" in the nineteenth line of section 3 there be inserted the words "excluding the 'incompetent fund.'" The report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shows that there is $55,572.75 of the fund not included in the "incompetent fund," which is still to the credit of the Chickasaw Nation, and which is not required by law to be paid out per capita. The "incompetent fund" is required by law to be paid out per capita to the members of the Chickasaw Nation under the provisions of said Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1901. There is no requirement that the second $10,000 shall be distributed per capita, and hence there does not appear to be any good reason why Congress may not authorize the relief for the Chickasaws as herein indicated.

In section 4, sixteenth line, the word "commission" should be "commissions," there being one for each nation; and it is recommended that there should be a second proviso, as follows: "Provided further, That each commission shall make full report to the legislative body of its respective nation, giving the names of the persons receiving aid and the amount expended for each person, together with an itemized account of the expenses incurred by each commission."

The Department again urges that the relief requested be furnished as speedily as possible and that the bill do pass.

Respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, this bill was drawn by the Department and sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the committee authorized me to report it. The Department urges its passage because the Indians are destitute, and this money is in the Treasury to the credit of the tribes. The bill makes no appropriation whatever. It simply allows these Indians to use the money now standing to their credit. Under the bill, if amended as suggested by the Department, I am satisfied the members of the Choctaw tribe will simply get their pro rata share of the money now in the Treasury derived from the sale of town lots, and so far as the Chickasaws are concerned they have two funds which may be used for this purpose if Congress so directs.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the other amendments sent to the desk by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] will be read for information.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Before those amendments are read allow me a word. I could not catch what the gentleman said in respect to these amendments. I understand that they have not been considered in the committee. Is that correct?

Mr. CURTIS. The amendments were not considered by the committee, but the committee by a unanimous vote authorized me to report the bill prepared by the Department. The Department prepared this bill, and afterwards suggested the amendments. So there can be no question about the funds to be used.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The amendments have not been printed at all, as I understand.

Mr. CURTIS. The amendments were offered just now and are embodied in the letter from the Department to simply make the bill plainer, so that the purpose of the bill will be thoroughly understood.

Mr. LITTLE. The amendments are simply to identify the fund?

Mr. CURTIS. To identify the fund.

Mr. LITTLE. And to make certain the purposes of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. That is the object of the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the additional amendments for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 19, page 2, after the word "cents," the following: "excluding the incompetent fund."

In line 16, page 3, change the word "commission" to "commissions."

Insert after the word "work," in line 18, page 3, the following:

"Provided further, That each commission shall make full report to the legislative body of its respective nation, giving the names of the persons receiving aid and the amount expended for each person, together with an itemized account of the expenses incurred by each commission."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the difficulty, I may say, is that it is impossible when amendments are not printed for us to understand exactly their purport and effect. Now, I understand the gentleman to say that he has offered the amendments to carry out the recommendations of the Indian Office?

Mr. CURTIS. Of the Department—the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, I am assured by the gentlemen of the minority of that committee that these amendments do that, and if so, why it is all right.

Mr. CURTIS. There is no question about that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But we are compelled to act purely upon faith, upon the representations made by these gentlemen, because we can not see the amendments and they are not printed, but with these assurances I shall not object.

Mr. CANNON. I am content to take the judgment and word of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], that when the bill passes with the amendments that each Indian relieved gets that to which he is entitled, and there can be in no event hereafter a charge upon the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill and the proposed amendments? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS TENNESSEE RIVER IN MARION COUNTY, TENN.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13288) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River in Marion County, Tenn., which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill at length, together with the amendments recommended by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question now is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MOON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

STATISTICS OF TRADE BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND NONCONTIGUOUS TERRITORY.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2479) to facilitate the procurement of statistics of trade between the United States and its noncontiguous territory.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of sections 4197 to 4200, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, requiring statements of quantity and value of goods carried by vessels clearing from the United States to foreign ports, shall be extended to and govern, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, in the trade between the United States and Hawaii, Porto Rico, Alaska, the Philippine Islands, Guam, and its other noncontiguous territory, and shall also govern in the trade conducted between said islands and territory, and in shipments from said islands or territory to other parts of the United States: Provided, That this law shall not apply in the Philippine Islands during such time as the collectors of customs of those islands are under the jurisdiction of the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

GRANTING LANDS TO COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4148) to grant certain lands to the city of Colorado Springs, Colo., and that the similar House bill lie on the table.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described tracts of land, situate in the county of El Paso and State of Colorado, described as follows: All of south half of south half of section 28; all of south half of section 29 not included in the grant made to the city of Colorado Springs under the act of Congress approved April 24, 1896; all of northeast quarter of section 31 not included in the grant to the city of Colorado Springs under the act of Congress approved April 24, 1896; all of southeast quarter of section 31; all of northwest quarter of section 32 not included in the grant made to the city of Colorado Springs under the act of Congress approved April 24, 1896; all of northeast quarter, all of southwest quarter, and all of north half of southeast quarter of section 32; all of north half, all of north half of southwest quarter, all of southwest quarter of southwest quarter, all of north half of southeast quarter, and all of southeast quarter of southeast quarter of section 33.

All of the above-described land is in township 14 south, range 68 west, of sixth principal meridian. Also, all of east half of northeast quarter and all of north half of south half of section 4, township 15 south, range 68 west, of sixth principal meridian; all of north half of southeast quarter, all of west half of northeast quarter, and all of northwest quarter of section 5, township 15 south, range 68 west, containing 2,181.5 acres, more or less, be, and the same are hereby, granted and conveyed to the city of Colorado Springs, in the county of El Paso and State of Colorado, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre by said city to the United States, to have and to hold said lands to its use and behoof forever for purposes of water storage and supply of its waterworks; and for said purposes said city shall forever have the right, in its discretion, to control and use any and all parts of the premises herein conveyed, and in the construction of reservoirs, laying such pipes and mains, and in making such improvements as may be necessary to utilize the water contained in any natural or constructed reservoirs upon said premises: Provided, however, That the grant hereby made is, and the patent issued hereunder shall be, subject to all legal rights heretofore acquired by any person or persons in or to the above-described premises or any part thereof and now existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the similar bill, H. R. 11985, will lie on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS CHATTAHOOCHEE RIVER, COLUMBUS, GA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 13246) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Chattahoochee River between Columbus, Ga., and Eufaula, Ala., or in the city of Columbus, Ga., with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama obtained leave of absence indefinitely, on account of important business.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania presents the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886; and said motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the said bill shall continue privileged until the bill and amendments shall have been disposed of.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the effect of this rule is to make the Senate amendments to the oleomargarine bill a continuing order until disposed of.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield about fifteen minutes to me.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the rule that brings this bill before the House simply provides that it shall be a continuing order of the House until disposed of. It makes the matter privileged, and I should have no objection to this form of rule if it was not for the fact that I consider it inapplicable to this question.

In my judgment the oleomargarine bill is of no more importance than hundreds of other bills on the Calendar demanding relief at this time, demanding the right of way at this time, that are ignored, and that will continue on that Calendar until they die, because they can not be reached. Now, this bill has not the unanimous report of either party.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not a party bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is not a party bill. It has the strong opposition of a large portion of the country. It is purely in the interest of one set of people, and against the interest of another set of people. It is not of universal benefit to the country, and for that reason I do not believe that two rules should be given to put this legislation before the House.

There has been no change in the principle since the bill went to the Senate. It is true that changes have been made. I think there are some beneficial changes in the bill, but as far as the principle is concerned the bill remains exactly as it did before it went to the Senate.

When the question originally came up before the Rules Committee, the two minority members of that committee opposed the reporting of this rule. The minority members of the committee still oppose the reporting of this rule as unnecessary for this legislation. For that reason, for the reason that we are taking up time that could be better disposed of and better used in the transaction of the great public business that the whole country is interested in, I think this rule should be voted down.

Now, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I do not rise to oppose the particular provisions of this rule, but I do rise to oppose the adoption of any rule for the consideration of the oleomargarine bill at this time. I find, upon looking at the Calendar, that this bill is preceded by 104 or 105 other bills on the Union Calendar. I find upon that Calendar such important measures as the one providing for the civil government of the Philippine Islands, a bill that we all hope will remove what is now a blotch upon the honor of the American people, and in some measure benefit that open sore that we are maintaining in the southern seas.

Yet that great measure must sleep in what the gentleman from Washington has well termed the cemetery of legislation while the Committee on Rules leads the brindle cow again to the bars and lets them down that she may enter into the richness of the Congressional pastures. I find on this Calendar two measures providing for the erection of national homes for the benefit of the disabled veterans of the civil and Spanish wars. I find on this Calendar a bill for the irrigation of arid lands, recommended by the President of the United States and indorsed by every labor organization of the Union, approved by nearly every commercial body in every city in every State in the Union. Yet that bill must sleep upon the shelf while the right of way is given to this measure, that has only one purpose, and that is to destroy one American industry for the benefit of another. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, what is the reason that this peculiar measure should for the second time at this session of Congress find such great power and influence in that most influential of all committees, the Committee on Rules, that everything else can be thrown aside and the right of way given to the bill that affects the oleomargarine industry? Why, sir, it has been but two days since I read in the local papers where the poor people of the District of Columbia were fighting for an approach to the stalls in the market that had advertised meat at a reduced price. With meat so high that the poor are almost unable to obtain it for their tables, with all kinds of food products higher probably than they ever were in time of peace, you come here with a special rule to tax a necessary article of diet, the only one of that nature that the poor man is able to place upon his table. Last week, sir, we had a measure up before this House to give relief to the starving people of Cuba. You follow it this week with a measure to tax the poor people of America. Tears and sympathy for the Cuban poor and sneers and taxation for the American poor is the record that the majority are making to go before the people. [Applause.]

But gentlemen said when this measure was up some weeks ago that it was not intended and it would not raise the price of butter. What are the facts? I find the actual fact to be that immediately after the passage of the oleomargarine bill in the Senate butter went up 4 cents on the New York market, 3 cents in the Chicago market, and 3 cents a pound above the current price at Elgin, Ill., the very home of the creamery industry. Yet gentlemen said this was not to increase the price of butter. Mark you, this price went up immediately after the bill had passed the other House of Congress and was thereby sure of ultimate enactment into law.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact that the price of meats has also gone up since the passage of the oleomargarine bill?

Mr. COWHERD. But butter is not made from meat, but is made from milk; and the price of milk has gone down while the price of butter has gone up.

Mr. TAWNEY. The particular butter you are favoring is made from meat.

Mr. COWHERD. That has nothing to do with it. The bill as you passed it was to put up cow butter for the benefit of the farmer. The product of the cow is milk, and the milk went down instantly, while the price of butter went up at the instance of your legislation. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman say that butter is not a product of the farm? If he does, he knows nothing about it.

Mr. COWHERD. I do know as much about it as does the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, then, you are not correctly representing yourself.

Mr. COWHERD. I say that the butter that is to be benefited by this bill is not the product of the farm, and you know it is not. It is the product of the creamery. It is the product of the factory and not the farm; and this bill is to aid the manufacturer and not the farmer, and these facts are proved by what has transpired since the passage of that bill by the Senate. [Loud applause.] Now, let me give you the facts.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Who owns the creameries?

Mr. COWHERD. The creameries in my country are largely owned by a creamery trust—400 of them—and no farmer has a single dollar in those creameries. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Will you answer this question?

Mr. COWHERD. Let me refer to the facts.

Mr. TAWNEY. One billion seventy-three million pounds of butter are made on the farms and 420,000,000 are made in the creameries.

The SPEAKER. The Chair admonishes gentlemen that before interrupting a speaker they must get permission of the Chair to do so.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to call attention to another fact, to show that these gentlemen were not honest to this House when they said they were trying to prevent a trust in this bill. What is the fact about that amendment which said process butter should be labeled as "process butter?" This committee, which now comes here and asks a special rule to pass their bill, has stricken out that provision and provided that it be "labeled as the Secretary of Agriculture may provide"—and he may provide that it shall be labeled as "refined butter" or "extra fine creamery" or anything else that he chooses.

But just one word further. Now, the gentleman says that this is for the benefit of the farmer. The butter from the farm, as everybody knows, does not go into the trade, it does not go into commerce, it is used at the farm or it is used in the neighborhood of the farm in the small towns. There are 20,000,000 people in the United States living in cities of over 25,000 population, and into those cities goes the butter of the creamery, and the country butter does not compete with it, and only in those cities is oleomargarine sold to any extent, and only in competition with creamery butter. What is the fact? The butter trust, or the creameries, have been putting up the price of butter ever since the passage of this bill, until within the last day or two when they put it down, as I believe, for the purpose of aiding this bill again through the House. They have been putting up the price of butter and putting down the price of milk, which is the farmer's product.

Now, what is the fact as to the amount of butter? Was there any reason for this great advance? I find in the New York market in March of this year, when the butter was higher than for years, on account of the passage of this bill, that there was practically as much butter on the market in New York as in March of last year. I find that in the markets of Chicago there was more butter in March of this year than there was last year, and the price has gone soaring skyward because of this legislation that you have enacted, not for the farmer, but for the creameries.

Mr. BELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. COWHERD. I will.

Mr. BELL. I notice that the price of eggs went up to 50 cents some time ago; did this legislation have anything to do with that?

Mr. COWHERD. Does not the gentleman know that when the price of eggs went up they were scarce in the market? I have read you the facts that there was as much butter in the market as there was last year, and therefore the price did not go up because butter was scarce. Can not the gentleman draw the distinction? [Applause.]

Mr. BELL. Other food products have gone up in price with it.

Mr. COWHERD. No food product has gone up in price comparatively as much as butter, not even beef, and that has been put up by the trust, as we are daily told by the press. The price of butter has been put up by this legislation which you are enacting against the table of the poor people of the United States. The only purpose that this bill can serve is to tax the man who to-day must earn his bread in the sweat of his face, and provide that hereafter he must eat that bread unbuttered. When food products were never so high, when butter was never at such a high price, and when butter makers were never so prosperous, there is not only no need of this legislation, but it is a little short of—I almost said infamous, but I will not use that word, but it is certainly an outrage in legislation that a special rule should be enacted to give this measure precedence over hundreds of other bills on the Calendar, many of them of the utmost importance. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that the merits of the oleomargarine bill are properly under discussion

now. The purpose of this rule is to give the House an opportunity to discuss that bill, and I do not propose to be drawn into any argument upon the subject.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is there any other way under the rules by which the House could have an opportunity to consider this bill unless the Committee on Rules reported a special rule?

Mr. DALZELL. A motion to go into Committee of the Whole House for the discussion of the bill would be in order.

Mr. MANN. Then it is not necessary to report the rule.

Mr. DALZELL. I will say, in answer to my friend from Illinois and the gentleman from Missouri, that the justification of the Committee on Rules in bringing in this rule arises out of the fact that this bill has been considered by both Houses, both by the Senate and the House, and we are entitled to have, at some time or other, an end to legislation. In that respect it differs from the other bills on the Calendar referred to by the gentleman from Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks for the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi) there were 101 ayes and 76 noes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 153, nays 79, answered "present" 13, not voting 110; as follows:

Mr. FOERDERER (for the bill) with Mr. JOHNSON (against the bill).
Mr. CROMER (for the bill) with Mr. WHITE (against the bill).
The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State or Territory into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, with sundry amendments, and pending that motion I would say that both the majority and minority members of the committee have agreed on a general debate of one hour, half an hour a side, to be equally divided, and I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed in one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9206) and the amendments thereto, in pursuance of the rule just adopted, and pending that motion asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to one hour, thirty minutes on a side. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Does not the rule itself resolve the House into the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that, in his opinion, it requires a motion.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to move that general debate close in one hour?

The SPEAKER. Not at present; not until after some debate had taken place. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State or Territory into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been considered in the Committee of the Whole as a whole, with the exception of two sections, comprising Senate amendment No. 9. I would like a ruling of the Chair as to whether the entire bill is to be considered or simply the two sections embraced in the amendment No. 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman's inquiry to be whether all the amendments are to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. That is it, whether the entire bill is to be considered.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the inquiry to be as to whether the entire bill should be read or only the amendments of the Senate and the amendment to the amendments proposed by the Committee on Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like distinctly to understand the inquiry. Is it as to the reading of the bill or as to its consideration?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The bill, I suppose, will be read, unless unanimous consent is given to dispense the first reading. The inquiry was as to whether we should consider in the Committee of the Whole the entire bill or simply the amendment No. 9; that is, sections 4 and 5 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that there are ten Senate amendments to the bill as passed by the House. There is a rule—Rule XXIII, section 3—requiring that all propositions involving a tax or involving the expenditure of money must be considered in a committee of the whole House, and the Chair understands the gentleman's inquiry to be whether consideration now is to be limited to such Senate amendments as do either involve a tax or the expenditure of money. Upon that inquiry the Chair would state that while the rule referred to does require absolutely that all propositions of a certain character shall be considered in a committee of the whole House it does not prevent the House from ordering other questions to be considered in Committee of the Whole. There is also another rule—No. XIII—which requires that all bills which involve a tax shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—not only the part imposing the tax, but the whole bill. This bill was originally referred to that committee and was considered by that committee before it was passed by the House.

Now, it has been returned by the Senate with sundry amendments. Those amendments have been referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the House has to-day adopted a rule and an order requiring, as the Chair understands it, the consideration of all the Senate amendments, which the Chair thinks it is quite within the province of the House to do. The Chair thinks that therefore all of the Senate amendments are to be considered in this Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand the rule, the rule itself brings up the bill as well as the amendments. I agree with the Chair as to the ruling if it were not for the rule, but my recollection of the reading of the rule is that it brings the original bill, as well as the amendment, before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the gentleman from Alabama is mistaken. The rule refers specifically to the Senate amendments and it is the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the Clerk read the rule again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Clerk will read the rule.

There was no objection, and the rule was again read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, my position is that that rule not only brings the Senate amendments which were specifically named before the committee, but it also refers to the bill, and therefore brings the bill for the reconsideration of the Committee of the Whole under the terms of the rule as well as the Senate amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that in his judgment it would not be within the province of the House itself to consider those portions of the bill which have been agreed upon by both House and Senate, but only the Senate amendments. Therefore it would not be within the province or authority of the House to direct the Committee of the Whole to consider anything more than the Senate amendments. The Chair does not understand the rule as requiring or intending that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall consider more than the Senate amendments to the House bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will allow me, I do not think there are many precedents on this question, and I think it ought to be determined at this time. The House can agree, with or without an amendment, to a bill that is returned from the Senate with amendments. Therefore it must be within the province of the House to amend the original proposition, because it must all be germane; and if it is within the province of the House to amend the original proposition, to make it suit the Senate amendments by adding an amendment, why, then, if the House determines, by its own motion, as it has done in this rule, to take up the whole proposition, then the whole proposition, the original bill and the Senate amendments, must be before the House for its consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the situation, it is this——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I submit that gentlemen can not raise this question now until some amendment is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is well taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I am talking to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that no point of order has been made.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I make the point of order, then, that this bill must be considered in Committee of the Whole, and I will state why I make that point. It is required by the rules that bills raising revenue shall be considered in Committee of the Whole. No rule of the House can change that constitutional rule. Now, it may be attempted to be answered that this bill has been considered in Committee of the Whole; but the Chair will apprise himself of the actual status of this legislation. This bill was not sent to conference. Objection was made to that course, and this bill was sent back to the Committee on Agriculture. It is not a case where an agreement has been made between the two Houses, and only a matter not agreed to in conference is left to be considered; but this bill was sent back to the Committee on Agriculture, which considered it again ab initio, you might say, and it is brought back now from the Committee on Agriculture. It is not a conference report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to a ruling apparently upon this precise point made by Speaker Carlisle in 1895:

An amendment having been proposed by Mr. HERNANDO D. MONEY, of Mississippi, relating to the transmission of certain publications of the second class through the mails, Mr. William S. Holman of Indiana made the point of order that the amendment related to a portion of the bill that had been agreed to by both Houses, and therefore was not in order.

The Speaker (Mr. Carlisle) sustained the point of order, holding that it was not in order to change the original text of a bill which had been passed by both Houses.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, that was evidently a bill that was coming before the House on a conference report, and I admit that if the House had not ordered the whole proposition before the committee, only the amendments would be under consideration; but the point that I make is that it is within the power of the House to order the entire consideration of the whole measure, and that this rule has done so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that in his judgment the position of the gentleman from Alabama is in direct opposition to the ruling of Speaker Carlisle. In that case the House itself was considering the Post-Office appropriation bill, which had passed the House and had been passed by the Senate with amendments. It had not been sent to conference. It simply came back as this bill has, with certain Senate amendments, and the Chair ruled that it was not in order for the House itself to consider anything but the Senate amendments. The House itself not having that power, it certainly can not be construed to have power to direct the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to do something which the House itself can not do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Did the Speaker there rule that the House itself had not the power to amend its own bill in committee?

The CHAIRMAN. That it could not even consider a motion to that effect—that is to say, a motion to amend that portion of the House bill to which the Senate had agreed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, Mr. Chairman, Speaker Carlisle is a very high authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the Senate amendments.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the Senate amendments be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the Senate amendments be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the oleomargarine bill as passed by the Senate is so satisfactory in most respects that a majority of the House Committee on Agriculture are agreed in recommending the acceptance of all the Senate amendments but one, and with a few changes necessary to perfect the measure, recommend the House to concur with the Senate and pass the bill as amended.

The original bill as reported in the House is but slightly affected by the Senate amendments; in fact, most of the changes are merely verbal corrections made necessary by the addition in the Senate of sections regulating and restricting the manufacture and sale of process or renovated and adulterated butter.

Only three or four of the Senate amendments are of importance sufficient to require explanation.

Amendment No. 2 strikes out the proviso inserted in the House as an amendment to section 1 of the original bill. It is held by eminent legal authority that this provision would be a violation of the rule of uniformity in taxation imposed by the Constitution of the United States, and if allowed to remain in the bill will invalidate the provisions relating to taxation.

Amendment No. 3 is intended to exempt the family table from any possible harsh construction of the law, and is altogether commendable.

Amendment No. 5 reduces the license tax upon wholesale and retail dealers who shall sell only uncolored oleomargarine, and may be regarded as equitable and fair.

Amendments Nos. 7 and 8 strike out the words "or ingredients" and insert the word "artificial," making this provision read as follows:

When oleomargarine is free from artificial coloration that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow, the tax shall be one-fourth of 1 cent per pound.

This is, perhaps, the most important change made by the Senate to the bill as reported in the House, and is a concession to the manufacturers of uncolored oleomargarine, who claim that the original provision would embarass the manufacturer of the uncolored article.

Inasmuch as it is not the purpose of this legislation to oppress a legitimate industry, this contention is conceded, and all the more willingly because, so far as we have knowledge, no practical method has been devised for making oleomargarine in the semblance of yellow butter without the addition of some artificial color, and it is not believed that oleomargarine can be given a considerable or even a very perceptible shade of yellow by the use of any known ingredient.

It is sometimes claimed that cream or butter may be successfully used, but this is manifestly impracticable, although it is barely possible that June butter, made when grasses are fresh and sweet, might, if a sufficient quantity is used, give the mixed product a slight yellow shade; but the high cost of this ingredient will prevent its use, except perhaps to a very limited extent in a high-grade article, too expensive for general consumption when sold as oleomargarine.

It may be further said that if time and experience demonstrate that oleomargarine can be colored in the semblance of yellow butter by the use of some newly discovered and available ingredient, this defect in the law can be corrected by future legislation.

Amendment No. 9 strikes out the imperfect House provisions for regulating the manufacture of process or renovated butter, and substitutes a full and comprehensive law for the regulation, restriction, and taxation of this product under the supervision of the Treasury Department for identification and taxation purposes, and of the Department of Agriculture for inspection and sanitary control.

Investigations have demonstrated that the interests of the great dairy industry will be protected and the welfare of all honest dairymen promoted by the safeguards provided in the proposed law. It is not the intention to unreasonably restrict the packing and sale of properly prepared process or renovated butter, but fraudulent adulteration should be prevented or made unprofitable. Disreputable manufacturers and manipulators are now imposing upon a confiding public an unwholesome product composed of vile and rancid butter deodorized and mixed with glucose and other ingredients designed to cheapen the article and also enable the absorption of a large quantity of water, with the result that the finished product often contains less than 60 per cent butter fat. This fraudulent and disgusting compound is now sold to domestic consumers and exported to foreign countries as dairy butter.

Dairy Commissioner Wells, of Pennsylvania, in a recent report gives this graphic description of the process of manufacturing adulterated butter:

It may be of interest to many to know what renovated butter is. It is also known under several aliases, such as "boiled" process and "aerated" butter, and is produced from the lowest grade of butter that can be found in country stores or elsewhere. It is of such poor quality that in its normal condition it is unfit for human food. It is generally rancid and often filthy in appearance, and of various hues in color, from nearly a snow white along the various shades of yellow up to the reddish cast or brick color. It is usually packed in shoe boxes or anything else that may be convenient, without much regard to cleanliness or a favorable appearance in any way. The merchant is glad to get rid of it, with its unwholesome smell, from his premises at almost any price, usually expecting that it will find its way to some soap factory, where it naturally belongs; but in this he is mistaken.

We have in our State two extensive plants using large quantities of this original stock, and converting the same into what is often branded and sold for creamery butter. It is first dumped into large tanks surrounded with jackets containing hot water, and melted at a temperature ranging from 100 to 110° Fahrenheit. After being thoroughly melted the heavier solids sink to the bottom and the lighter particles rise to the top, which, when skimmed off, leaves the clear butter fat, with the heavier sediment at the bottom.

This butter fat is then removed to other tanks, jacketed and surrounded with hot water like the first. The odor of the fat at this stage is anything but agreeable, and the main object of the next manipulation is to remove this stench from it. This is supposed to be accomplished by aeration, the fat passing out of a pipe at the bottom of the tank, and with a rotary pump it is again elevated in a pipe over the top of the tank, and discharged through a strainer into the same, thus to remove the disagreeable odors, keeping up a continuous circuit and agitation of this liquid butter fat.

It is claimed by some that chemicals are also used for this purpose, but I have been assured by parties who are engaged in the business that this is not true. When the fat is sufficiently aerated the machinery is changed by removing the funnel-shaped strainer, and large quantities of skim milk are added; in just what proportion I am unable to state, but can approximate very nearly the amount. An analysis of the finished product showed only 75 per cent of butter fat, and as it contained nothing but the fat and milk and a small amount of salt, there must have been about 25 per cent of milk added. A perfect emulsion of the milk and butter fat is obtained by the same machinery that did the aerating, excepting the strainer, and it is accomplished in a very short time. When the milk has all disappeared the melted mass looks much as it did before the milk was added.

It is next run off in pipes to a vat of ice and water, where it is quickly chilled, taking the granular form and looking like ordinary butter when in the granular form before being worked,. It is then worked, salted, if necessary, and printed or packed in tubs for shipment, often as fresh creamery butter.

I do not know how a greater fraud could be perpetrated upon the unsuspecting consumer or upon legitimate dairy interests than is done by these manufacturers of spurious butter. In the first place, 20 to 25 per cent of the compound is skim milk, for which the consumer pays the price of butter. Besides this, the filthy condition of the foundation stock before any manipulation occurs, were it known, would deter most people from eating it. It certainly should only be allowed to be sold for what it is, namely, "renovated butter." It is a fraud because it has no keeping qualities. Being so heavily charged with skim milk, unless kept at a very low temperature it soon becomes putrid. The manufacturer and jobber may get it off their hands before it deteriorates, but before it gets to the consumer usually "its last estate is worse than its first."

With these facts before us, who shall say that restrictive legislation is unnecessary?

With the intent of protecting the manufacture as well as of maintaining the reputation of pure butter and of prohibiting adulteration by unscrupulous manipulators, two grades are established under the provisions of the Senate amendment intended to include all manipulated or process butter.

Fraudulent butter in which chemicals have been used for deodorization and which is adulterated with any foreign substance is treated in the same manner and taxed 10 cents per pound alike with oleomargarine containing artificial coloring, and is placed under the supervision of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, while process or renovated butter, when pure, is taxed one-fourth of 1 cent per pound alike with oleomargarine without artificial coloring.

It is anticipated that this legislation will prevent fraud, protect the public from an article of food of unknown or doubtful origin, and insure to purchasers of butter the pure product of the churn and dairy.

The amendments recommended to certain provisions of the bill as passed by the Senate are designed to perfect the measure, and, I might add for the information of the House, that all of these amendments have been submitted to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and met his approval. Should the bill be passed as now, without further amendment, it is confidently hoped that the Senate will promptly concur with the House, and that Congress will not soon be asked for further legislation of this character.

As an indication of the views of the manufacturers of pure and legitimate process or renovated butter, I read for the information of the House a communication received from C. H. Weaver & Co., of Chicago, Elgin, Omaha, Minneapolis, New York, Boston, etc., a most reputable firm, represented to be the largest producers of renovated butter in the United States:

CHICAGO, April 19, 1902.

HON. E. STEVENS HENRY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are the largest producers of "process" or "renovated" butter in the United States and third oldest in the business, having invested here and in our branches close to $200,000; and as such we desire to register our hearty approval of the provisions of the H. R. 9206, which relates to this article.

We are in favor of these provisions, as we believe the majority of the 30 manufacturers to be, because it will save our business from a number of evils which threaten it—namely, adulteration of the product and such practices upon the part of the trade that might result in the end in more stringent and unjust State legislation.

Our product has merit and a field. It is not what Congress believes it to be—a product of rancid, dirty butter, worked over with the aid of chemicals. There may be such a product, but we are not familiar with it. It is our experience that process butter to be good must be made of the best possible dairy butter. Poor butter makes a poor product.

We are threatened with an era of adulteration in butter, however, which if not checked by some such provisions as are contained in H. R. 9206, will drive all manipulators of butter to be adulterators, because a few are already gaining advantage through adulterations that would cause others to resort to the same or go out of business. We are willing to be taxed $50, $100, $600, or even $1,000 per year and one-fourth cent per pound upon our product for the sake of having the Government take in hand this manipulation of butter and save us from being driven to questionable methods through competition. And we say further, that in the end the farmer, from whom we buy our raw material, will profit many times the amount of the small tax imposed through the standing the Government guaranty of its purity will give process butter, a product now resting under unjust suspicion of being unwholesome if not unhealthful.

You will find no evidence that the process butter makers have ever fought the laws of their States. Therefore we ask that in acting upon H. R. 9206, as amended in the Senate, you make no provisions which will unnecessarily injure our business.

The provisions of the Senate's amendments are complete. They provide for identification through a tax stamp, and sanitary inspection through the Agricultural Department. These provisions are in our interest, in the farmers' interest, and in the interest of the public. They will be lived up to, as there is not profit enough in the article to warrant the expense of fighting laws. We pay almost as much for farmers' butter in the city as the creamery does the patrons in the country.

The "process" manufacturers with whom we come in contact, with one or two exceptions, take the same view of this matter that we have expressed. They have witnessed the retribution which the oleomargarine makers have brought about through their years of defiance and evasion of laws, and have no desire to follow in their steps and live under the odium which clouds that business. Those who desire to be honest welcome laws which will make the remainder so. State laws are often so loosely enforced as to tempt the few and compel the many to follow in order to protect their own business. Let us have a law that will be enforced through the taxing power, and we will have no fear that our competitors are securing unfair advantage of us through its violation.

Therefore, in the name of honest dealing, the protection of the public, and the interest of those who produce the farm butter from which is made this product, "renovated" or "process" butter, we commend the Senate amendments to the oleomargarine bill.

Respectfully, yours, C. H. WEAVER & CO.

The Committee on Agriculture have unanimously agreed to recommend an amendment to section 4 of the bill, drawn by Prof. Henry C. Alvord, Chief of the Dairy Division of the Department of Agriculture, and approved by Secretary Wilson. This amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, strike out the lines from 6 to 16, inclusive, and after the word "cream," in line 1, insert a semicolon and these words: "that 'process butter' or 'renovated butter' is hereby defined to mean butter which has been subjected to any process by which it is melted, clarified, or refined and made to resemble genuine butter, always excepting 'adulterated butter,' as defined by this act."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The definition suggested by the Department of Agriculture for process or renovated butter modifies the terms of the Senate amendment and classifies as process or renovated butter only such as has been melted, clarified, and rechurned in milk or cream, and can not possibly interfere with any process employed upon the farm or in the country store in the harmless manipulation of butter bought or taken in exchange for merchandise.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman, before he takes his seat, answer a question or two?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. On this question of artificial coloration—I suppose the committee have given consideration to that question—am I right in understanding that the manufacturer of high-grade oleomargarine does not have the right to continue the use of creamery butter?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Yes, sir; he still has that right, and he sometimes uses creamery butter, but more often cream itself.

Mr. MANN. Well, as I understand, creamery butter is not used in the manufacture of any kind of oleomargarine except the high grade. Only in the manufacture of a high class of oleomargarine do they use butter——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Sometimes butter is used, but more often milk and cream.

Mr. MANN. As one of the ordinary ingredients?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Where milk and cream are not available, they do use butter.

Mr. MANN. Now, would it be, in the opinion of the gentleman or of the committee, permissible to continue the use of creamery butter as one of the ingredients in the manufacture of oleomargarine under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. Would it be necessary in order to do that that the oleomargarine manufacturer first analyze the creamery butter, and see whether there was any articial coloration or color in the creamery butter, or could he use it as he purchased it in the market?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. In answer to that, I would refer to a conversation which I recently had with a representative of one of the largest oleomargarine manufactories in the country, and he says it is an absolute fact that they could not use, under the terms of this bill, butter that had been artificially colored; that legal proceedings already made covered that point.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will pardon me; there has been no law of this kind in effect. I do not wish to get the opinion of an oleomargarine manufacturer, but the gentleman's opinion in that matter.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I do not regard my opinion as valuable as that of an expert.

Mr. MANN. There could have been no expert opinion in this matter, because that is a question that has never arisen up to this time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It rose in a State court, and the State court decided that the manufacturer of oleomargarine could not use colored butter, or coloring that affects the color as to oleomargarine.

Mr. MANN. That would depend upon the State, and how the local judges were influenced. I object to taking the opinion of a local judge of an ordinary State upon that question.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Do you mean to say that State judges can be influenced?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; by local opinion.

Mr. TOMPKINS of New York. What State? Not New York.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand; not New York! The judges in New York are selected with that use of political influence that public opinion has no influence on them whatever.

Mr. TOMPKINS of New York. It never influences them.

Mr. MANN. No. Will the gentleman from Connecticut pardon me another question with reference to section 4 of the bill? That is that provision of the act referring to what is the definition of butter on page 5 of the bill:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of this act "butter" is hereby defined to mean an article of food as defined in "An act defining butter."

What is the definition in the bill that you refer to?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. This language on page 5 in section 4 is the definition of what is termed in this bill adulterated butter.

Mr. GRAFF. But it starts out with adopting a definition of butter itself as to pure butter. That is already in existing law. In section 4 the bill reads: "That for the purpose of this act 'butter' is hereby defined to mean an article of food, as defined in 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.'" That is practically the definition, and defines butter as being made with pure milk and cream, with or without salt and with or without coloring matter. That is the definition of butter. Then section 4 follows by defining adulterated butter.

Mr. MANN. That defines itself.

Mr. GRAFF. In substance that definition defines adulterated butter as being butter which contains some deleterious drug or substance which has entered into the butter for the purpose of curing rancidity, and which, of course, is an unhealthful substance; and in that respect there is a line of demarcation between that butter, which, of course, no one would object to have weighted down with proper regulations and notification to the consumer as to what it was—there is a line of demarcation between that and renovated butter which is acknowledged to be a healthful article.

Renovated butter is defined in this section as butter produced by mixing, reworking, rechurning in milk or cream, refining, or in any way producing a uniform, purified, or improved product from different lots or parcels of melted or unmelted butter. The Committee on Agriculture of the House, when they had the consideration of the Senate amendments, concluded there was an element of doubt about the certainty of that definition, that it might comprehend a great deal more than anybody would desire to have it comprehend, especially in the use of the words "melted" or "unmelted." It might include storekeepers in the country, where butter that they receive from their customers, absolutely healthful, is put together in tubs and labeled. There is no reason whatever why there should be any regulation of that product, because it is absolutely healthful, and so the committee proposed to amend this Senate definition of renovated butter by adopting the following in place of the words on page 6 of the bill, after the word "cream" and down to and including line 16 of the bill, by striking all that out and substituting the following——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. If my friend from Illinois will allow me to interrupt, and then I will yield to him, the committee have unanimously agreed to offer one amendment to the bill making the definition of process butter more satisfactory, and also to make it clearer that the country grocer will not be subject to the provisions of this law when packing butter known in the market as labeled butter. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Connecticut permit me to get a little further information before he yields to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I will.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to complete my statement?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAFF. As I was saying, the Committee on Agriculture of the House propose to amend the Senate amendment by striking out, after the word "cream," all down to and including line 16, on page 6, and substitute the following:

That process butter or renovated butter is hereby designed to mean butter which has been subjected to any process by which it is melted, clarified, or refined and made to resemble genuine butter, always excepting adulterated butter as defined by this act.

Renovated or process butter is a legitimate subject of commerce, as any healthful product should be, and this regulation which is sought by this bill is approved by the manufacturers of renovated or process butter themselves in the country. We did not wish to include the innocent and perfectly proper process of the country grocers from engaging in mixing different butters which they purchase from the farmer and put them in such a position that they might not market them together by mixing them unmelted.

I have a letter from C. H. Weaver & Co., dealers in butter, eggs, and poultry, 129 South Water street, Chicago, dated April 19, 1902, which I will read. It is as follows:

C. H. WEAVER & CO.,
BUTTER, EGGS, AND POULTRY,
129 South Water Street, Chicago, April 19, 1902.

DEAR SIR: We are the largest producers of "process" or "renovated" butter in the United States and third oldest in the business, having invested here and in our branches close to $200,000, and as such we desire to register our hearty approval of the provisions of the H. You will find no evidence that the process-butter makers have ever fought the laws of their States. Therefore we ask that in acting upon H. R. 9206, as amended in the Senate, you make no provisions which will unnecessarily injure our business.

The provisions of the Senate's amendments are complete; they provide for identification through a tax stamp, and sanitary inspection through the Agricultural Department. Therefore, in the name of honest dealing, the protection of the public, and the interest of those who produce the farm butter, from which is made this product, "renovated" or "process" butter, we commend the Senate amendments to the oleomargarine bill.

Respectfully, yours, C. H. WEAVER & CO.

Now, these dealers say that they are willing to be taxed $50 or $100, or $600 even, but the Committee on Agriculture thought that the thirty manufacturers engaged in manufacturing process or renovated butter might find it easier to form themselves into a monopoly in their business if they were taxed $600, the same amount of tax fixed by the bill for manufacturers of adulterated butter, and therefore the committee concluded to strike out the provision of $600 imposed upon the manufacturers of renovated and process butter and place instead simply a tax of $50, and yet sufficient to enable the Government to inspect and regulate the business and see what ingredients went into the manufacture of the renovated butter, and at the same time permit small dealers who desired to engage in the manufacture of renovated and process butter without laying upon them a heavier burden of taxation than they could bear.

In addition to this, the Senate committee imposed the tax, and a majority of the House committee concur, that we would lay a tax of one-quarter of a cent a pound upon renovated or process butter. It is necessary for the taxing power of the Government to be exercised in order to follow it up with proper regulation and inspection. And as to this imposition of a quarter of a cent per pound of taxation upon renovated or process butter, there is no objection from any source.

In addition to this, we found from investigation that the process through which renovated butter goes is clarification or refinement. It becomes regranulated when refined, and to clarify it it must necessarily be melted; so that the confining of the definition of renovated or process butter to that of melted by the House committee in the amendment to the Senate definition is all right, because there can be no clarification, there can be no refining of butter, except by going through the process of melting.

This House passed the oleomargarine bill under protest by many because it was claimed by those who voted against it that we selected our oleomargarine for inspection and regulation; that we threw the burden of these regulations around the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine while we left the field entirely unrestrained so far as the adulteration of butter itself was concerned; that the consumer, whom it is supposed we are to consult, to some extent at least, in this legislation, was not consulted, so far as his being protected in the matter of the purchase of butter and the guaranty to him that he should know what class of butter he purchased.

First, it must be understood that we propose to impose no restriction or tax upon pure butter under the law, and the only pure butter that does exist is butter that is made entirely and solely of pure milk and cream, with the necessary salt, and some coloration, if desired. We have classified the only two objectionable classes of butter which threaten the consumer's health and perhaps his palate.

This legislation, as we propose to amend it, does not interfere with the country storekeeper who does not have facilities for engaging, and, in fact, does not engage, in the business of clarifying or renovating butter through the process of melting. The bill does not include, as I have said, the processes of ladeling or mixing it without melting, for the market by the country grocer. So that we have treated the subject fairly and from all its bearings; and in addition to the taxation of one-quarter of a cent on renovated and process butter and 10 cents on adulterated butter, there goes with it the application of the Government stamp upon the article itself—the stamping of the renovated butter as renovated butter and the stamping of adulterated butter as adulterated butter.

Mr. MADDOX. Is that the provision of the Senate amendment, that the adulterated butter is to bear a Government stamp and is to be taxed 10 cents a pound?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir; but the adulterated butter is of such a character that no one ought to purchase it. No one ought to purchase it unless he purchases it coupled with the conditions of this bill. It is not fit for consumption.

The provisions of this bill give the officers of the Government authority to ascertain where adulterated butter is made. Manufacturers of adulterated butter are subjected to a heavier burden of tax than that which is levied upon the manufacture of oleomargarine. Six hundred dollars per year is fixed in the bill as the tax upon the manufacturer of adulterated butter. In addition to this, he must place a sign on the front of his manufactory—"Manufactory of adulterated butter." In addition to this, there are provisions in the bill for the inspection of renovated and process butter, and also of adulterated butter; and these articles, if intended for export, must be branded with the name of the class of butter which they in fact are; and they are subject to the inspection of governmental authority for export.

Of course the House is aware that no tax exists under the present law, nor is any sought to be levied by this legislation, upon oleomargarine or any class of butter which is exported, because that would not be constitutional, in my judgment. The only tax that Congress ever did levy upon any food product for export was, I believe, upon filled cheese, and litigation is now pending in which those interested in the exportation of filled cheese are seeking to recover back the tax paid by them upon the filled cheese which they did export.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman allow me a question? Where does this bill provide for the inspection of adulterated butter destined for export? I think the Secretary of Agriculture is empowered to inspect only process or renovated butter.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. As I understand, all the provisions of the original oleomargarine law are applied to adulterated butter, and that law provides for exportation without the imposition of any tax.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then the two are mixed up in that way?

Mr. GRAFF. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to pages 10 and 11 of the bill—that portion of page 10 contained in lines 24 and 25 and that portion of page 11 extending from line 1 to line 8. These parts of the bill extend the provisions of the existing oleomargarine law, with reference to export, to adulterated butter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am much obliged to the gentleman for the explanation.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, there has been running through the debate, when this bill was heretofore before the House and in the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri, the idea that the greater portion of the butter of the United States is made by the creameries. But all that argument falls to the ground if it should turn out that comparatively a small portion of the aggregate amount of butter made in the United States is made by the creameries, while the major portion of it is made upon the farms of the United States. I have before me a document from the Agricultural Department, from which I desire to read.

Mr. GILBERT. What is the number?

Mr. GRAFF. It is Circular No. 36 from the Bureau of Animal Industry, and under the heading "Numbers and products of dairy farms" I find the following:

Farms: Total number in the country, 5,739,657. Reported as dairy farms—and under this report of dairy farms are farms deriving at least 40 per cent of their total income from the dairy—357,578. Reporting dairy cows, 4,514,210; number of cows in the country kept for milk on farms, 17,139,674; not on farm, or town cows, 973,033; total dairy cows, 18,112,707. Milk produced on farms, 7,266,392,674 gallons; from cows not on farms, 462,190,676; total amount of milk produced in the United States, 7,728,583,350 gallons. Under the head of "butter," butter made on farms, 1,071,745,127 pounds.

Mind you, this is the number of pounds of butter made, not simply from the milk of the farm, but made on the farm—1,071,745,127 pounds. Now, let us see how many pounds of butter are made in creameries as in comparison with that. It is 420,954,016 pounds. Total production, 1,492,699,143; so that less than one-third of the total amount of butter made in the United States is made in creameries, and more than two-thirds of the butter made in the United States is made, not simply from the milk of the farm, but on the farm itself.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAFF. I will.

Mr. FEELY. I wish to inquire for information if the purpose of this bill is not and its effect will not be to increase the number of pounds of butter made by creameries and sold to consumers and to decrease the number of pounds of butter made by farmers, as the gentleman speaks of.

Mr. GRAFF. It will not, for the reason that the bill only imposes a tax upon classes of butter which are not made by the farmer, but which are manipulated by manufacturers of renovated and process butter or adulterated butter.

Mr. FEELY. One other question. Will not the restrictions placed here on the manufacture of process or renovated butter operate throughout the country to the building of creameries and necessarily place them under a unified creamery control and the shutting out of the farmer in the ordinary store of butter?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not think so.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This morning the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] regaled the House on the great rise in the cost of butter now and said that it was because of this proposed legislation, I believe. I would like to inquire if the gentleman has anything there which will give the House the value of butter previous to this general use of oleo of last year or the year before last. Let us get a comparison, if we can, of that kind.

Mr. GRAFF. I have. I have a list here of the prices of the best creamery butter for sixteen years: 1886, 25 cents and a fraction; 1887, 25 cents and a fraction; 1888, 26 cents and a fraction; 1889, 22 cents and a fraction; 1890, 22 cents; 1891, 25 cents; 1892, 25½ cents; 1893, 25.7 cents; 1894, 22 cents; 1895, 20.6 cents; 1896, 17.8 cents; 1897, 18.4 cents; 1898, 18.8 cents; 1899, 20.6 cents; 1900, 20.7 cents; 1901, 21.7 cents.

Mr. MANN. For what time of the year is that?

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, this is the average of price of the best creamery butter on the Elgin market for the past sixteen years.

Mr. MANN. The average for the year is not any good. Have you the price for a specific month?

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman will permit me I will give the price for the specific month. I read from the Crop Reporter, issued by the Agricultural Department. In April, 1896, butter sold—the best creamery extra butter—for 14 cents; in 1897, 17 cents; 1898, 17 cents; 1899, 17 cents; 1900, 17.5; 1901, 18 cents; 1902, 29 cents.

Mr. GRAFF. What does the gentleman mean by 1902?

Mr. BURLESON. April.

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, the month of April.

Mr. BURLESON. The same period of time during each year.

Mr. GRAFF. But the month of April would be the very poorest month in the entire year for the purpose of measuring the true price of butter or the average price which the consumer would have to pay.

Mr. MANN and Mr. SCOTT rose.

Mr. GRAFF. I desire to have the opportunity to reply to the questions which have been asked me, gentlemen. Right at this time we are between hay and grass. In the course of three weeks we will be right in the middle of grass butter. Anyone who would invest in butter at this time, produced at the most unfavorable period in the year, would have to compete with the grass butter which will come in less than three weeks. He would not have a fair opportunity.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But if the gentleman will excuse me, were you not in exactly the same position in April of last year and in April the year before that?

Mr. GRAFF. It is not a fair comparison.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But the comparison is fair between the same months in different years.

Mr. GRAFF. This is the time of the transition period from hay butter to grass butter. It is a time when no one can place any credence on the permanency of the price of butter, and it is not a fair index.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, I want to conclude my speech to-day.

Mr. MANN. We will give you plenty of time.

Mr. GRAFF. I want to read an interesting telegram just received for the benefit of the gentleman who just asked me the question:

Butter market has declined to 27½, a fall of 5½ cents in four days, due to increased supply.

That is due to the increased supply coming upon the market, which will soon be face to face with the competition of the grass butter.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman claim that grass butter does not come in, in his part of the country, earlier than now?

Mr. GRAFF. It comes in whenever the grass is up so that the cows can eat it.

Mr. MANN. The grass has been up in central Illinois, where the gentleman comes from, for nearly a month.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Did not grass butter come in just as soon last year, and the year before, and the year before that, as it does this year?

Mr. GRAFF. I suppose it did.

Mr. MANN. It has been on the market in Chicago for three or four weeks.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If you object to taking April because it is the transition period between hay and grass, why do you object to taking April of last year and the year before that and the year before that, and comparing those April prices with the April prices of this year? April was as much a transition period then as now.

Mr. GRAFF. The price of butter will usually be high in April, because usually it is scarce in that month; because manufacturers of butter do not seek to flood the market with butter during that period of the year.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But they did not seek it last year either.

Mr. GRAFF. But you gentlemen try to produce statistics, selecting what you believe to be the highest period of the year for butter.

Mr. BURLESON. This is the crop report for this month.

Mr. GRAFF. If you propose to find out whether there is an excessive price or not, the more logical course would be to take the average price of the product for the entire year, taking the favorable periods and the unfavorable periods.

Mr. COONEY. I should like to make a suggestion along that line to my colleague, that the question of the high price of feed comes in at this time, when a great many cows are being fed on the feed of last year.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But it was the same last year, though.

Mr. COONEY. No; we are passing through a different condition from what we have passed through at this time for several years. The winter fodder has been pretty well eaten up, and a great many cows have gone dry. Is there not something in that?

Mr. GRAFF. I think that is a very important element in the case.

Mr. BURLESON. But it does not consist with that telegram, which says that the supply of butter has increased.

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly; there happens to be an oversupply of butter at the New York market.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If this bill passes will not the farmers and butter makers increase their stock of cattle and invest more money in the dairy business?

Mr. GRAFF. That is true.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And is not that business now being discouraged and broken down in the country by reason of this fraudulent stuff that is put on the market?

Mr. GRAFF. That is true.

Mr. HASKINS. What fraudulent stuff?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oleomargarine.

Mr. MANN. And colored butter!

Mr. GRAFF. I have some interesting statistics in connection with the subject to which the gentleman from Tennessee alluded, and that is the connection between the live-stock interest and the butter interest. As a matter of fact they go hand in hand.

Last year Hoard's Dairyman made an investigation of the profits derived by owners of cows who produce milk for the creameries. Dunn County, Wis., was selected, and the owners of 52 dairies were visited. This representative found the 52 farmers kept 647 cows. The following statement gives the result:

Average pounds of butter per cow	220
Average returns from creamery per cow	$39.51
Average cost of feed per cow	$27.00
Average net price of butter per pound, after deducting cost of making and marketing (about 4 cents per pound)	$0.1709
Value of butter, over and above cost of feed, per cow	$12.51
Cost of hauling milk to creamery, per cow	4.50
Net income to farmer for time and labor in caring for a cow 365 days	8.01

Or, reducing to further details, with 21½ cents average wholesale price for his butter, the farmer received 1½ cents net for his labor each milking, or 2¾ cents a day for taking care of a dairy cow, after paying for her feed and hauling of milk.

The record shows during the period up to 1898 and 1899 a decreased amount in the manufacture of butter. The shipments to the cities show that. The statistics of the Agricultural Department show that and the statistics also show that the milch cows are being shipped to the cities for the purpose of being killed for beef.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can the gentleman state how the number of milch cows has diminished?

Mr. GRAFF. I have no statistics on that.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURLESON. I submit very rightly the suggestion made by the gentleman from Missouri the high price of butter might have been explained by the increased price of food stuff, like hay, etc.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURLESON. Then how do you account for the decreased price of milk at the same time?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not know. Where do you get the statistics on that?

Mr. BURLESON. It is unquestioned. The market reports show that.

Mr. GRAFF. If the price of milk goes down under the manipulation of the creameries, what will be the result? The result will be that the farmer will retain the milk and make his own butter. That is the solution of that problem. It needs no aid of legislation to correct that problem. It will correct itself.

Mr. BURLESON. I was not asking you the results, but for an explanation.

Mr. GRAFF. I do not know of any man who can explain the reason for all prices in the country, and you can not put the philosophy of all economy in a nut shell.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The price of milk always falls in the spring of the year.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But the price of butter has also gone up, and the price of milk has gone down. That is the proposition you are faced with.

Mr. MANN. For the first time, ever.

Mr. BURLESON. And that is shown by statistics.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I think it is owing to the beef trust.

Mr. MANN. It is a popular thing to put everything on the beef trust now.

Mr. GRAFF. Right in connection with the discussing of the milch cows and the shipping of them by the farmers, he goes out of milk business when he ships them to the cities to have them killed for beef. I may say that that bears very immediately upon the question of the cattle interests, and when the farmer is enabled to add to the profit by the sale of his milk from the cow raising the calf, these two elements enter into the consideration of his business in that connection, and the raising of the calves and the keeping of the milch cows are coupled together irresistibly on the basis of the beef interests and coupled with the number of cattle in the country are determined by the farmer being enabled to profitably retain his milch cows.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. GRAFF. I will answer it, if I can.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman makes an argument in favor of this bill in order to produce a greater number of cattle. I may be mistaken, but I had an impression that it was the custom in the creamery districts to knock the bull calves in the head, that it never paid in the creamery districts to feed milk to a bull calf, and that it was not the custom, and that all they raised was the heifer calves.

Mr. GRAFF. That may be true as to those farmers who derive 40 per cent of their profits from the sale of milk, but I say here that the other two-thirds or three-fourths or at least a larger proportion is produced by the farmer who does not rely upon the making of butter alone and does not maintain the milch cow for that purpose alone, but it is an incident to his business and a profitable incident; and the fact that the amount of butter produced in this country was lessened during the period of years preceding 1901 shows that we can legitimately say that the cause of that was the unjust competition in the sale of oleomargarine with the cow butter.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois has kindly yielded to me to ask of the committee unanimous consent to print some remarks on this bill at some point of time after the close of the debate. I intended to have spoken on this question along the line of my former speech, but I find that I must leave for several days, and the time is about up, and therefore I ask this consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The gentleman says that the general purpose of this bill is to prevent the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine under the guise of butter. Is there anything in this bill which would prevent the imposition on the public of adulterated or renovated or process butter in the guise of butter?

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly there is.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The gentleman refers to the provision on page 9 of this bill?

Mr. GRAFF. Perhaps the gentleman has got the wrong bill. There are extensive provisions covering the taxation of the manufacture and the article itself and the inspection of both renovated and adulterated butter at the factory, and the consumer is protected in the purchase of it and it is subject to inspection for export.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. On page 9 of this bill it says that the "dealers in adulterated butter must sell only original or from original stamped packages, and when such original stamped packages are broken the adulterated butter sold from the same shall be placed in suitable wooden or paper packages," etc. Does the gentleman think that will prevent fraud?

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, I see the object of the gentleman is to renew the discussion which occurred at the time the original bill passed the House.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I was about to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that it has been the contention of gentlemen on the other side of this question that such a provision, the identical provision here contained in the present law, does not prevent the imposition of fraud on the part of dealers.

Mr. GRAFF. I think the House passed upon that question. Adulterated butter is coupled with a tax of the same amount as that which is made upon colored oleomargarine, and renovated-process butter is placed upon exactly the same level as uncolored oleomargarine.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I understand the bill provides for a tax of one-quarter a cent a pound.

Mr. GRAFF. Upon renovated or process butter, and 10 cents a pound on adulterated butter.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. If you intend to prevent the imposition of fraud on the public, why do not you impose a tax of 10 cents on renovated or process butter?

Mr. GRAFF. Because we desire to draw a distinction between the two classes of butter. Because there is a distinction as regards healthfulness as a food product.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Will this provision prevent the public from being deceived in buying adulterated or renovated butter for pure creamery butter?

Mr. GRAFF. In my judgment, it will amply protect them.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Then why will it not protect them in buying oleomargarine for pure creamery butter?

Mr. GRAFF. Because while adulterated butter is objectionable, it is still butter, and the laying of a heavy tax upon it would seem adequate to any reasonable person, and perhaps throw it out of the market altogether. It might be questionable whether it ought to go into the market. The attitude of oleomargarine is that it is sought to sell it as another article; it is sought to be sold as butter. I do not care to renew the argument, which it seems was complete enough to satisfy most anybody when the original bill was discussed in this House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say in conclusion that we have attempted to follow the majority in this House, and even the indications or the desire of the minority, when they claimed that it was unfair that we did not deal with both articles. We have done so. We have attempted to draw the bill so as to be fair, so as to protect the men engaged in the business. I believe that if uncolored oleomargarine can be sold upon its merits, if it meets with the demand when it is known upon its merits, it will result in the increased sale of the production of uncolored oleomargarine. If in the fair trade in oleomargarine it is coming, then it ought to come, and if it is desired by the public, the fact that it is labeled, and identified, and inspected will give the consumer double the assurance of what he is getting. [Applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the minority of the Committee on Agriculture have no disposition to delay the House by a protracted and profitless discussion on the merits of this measure. In regard to the amendments to the Senate amendments, which are now properly before this committee, which will be offered by the majority of the Committee on Agriculture, I wish to say the minority will, for the most part, concur. The minority, however, will have some additional amendments to offer at the proper time in order, as they believe, to make this bill consistent with itself and more adequately to guard the interests of the consumers of butter.

In a general way I may say that the Senate amendments assume to treat adulterated butter in substantially the same way that the original bill proposed to treat oleomargarine. The Senate amendments make a distinction between adulterated butter and process or renovated butter. It is the belief of the minority of the Committee on Agriculture that in practice, after this bill goes into effect, there will be no adulterated butter on the market. It would seem to go without saying that there will be no demand for a product which admits itself on its face to be impure, unwholesome, and deleterious to the public health. It is the opinion of the minority, therefore, that the firms and factories which have heretofore been engaged in the manufacture of adulterated butter will, after the passage of this bill, endeavor to continue the manufacture of the same product under the designation of process or renovated butter. Hence we believe that it is absolutely essential for the proper protection of the consumer that the same safeguards should be thrown around the manufacture and sale of process and renovated butter as the Senate amendment assumes to throw around adulterated butter, and the amendments which we shall offer will be aimed in that direction.

While, as I stated in the beginning, we have no wish to protract the discussion on this bill, I do desire to call the attention of the House very briefly to certain facts and certain expressions of sentiment which seem to me to confirm with great emphasis the position of those of us who opposed this bill when it was formerly before the House for consideration. It was our contention at that time that the legislation proposed in what has become so widely advertised as "the Grout bill" was brought forward here at the behest and for the benefit of a selfish and powerful interest. We believed (to state the matter frankly) that that bill was the result of an agitation carried on by a combination of the great creamery interests of this country, having in view the breaking down of the competition of another product which went into the same markets. It was our contention at that time that the interest which was behind that legislation had no regard for the consumer, was not influenced by any desire to protect the health or the pockets of the purchasers of butter, but was governed solely by selfish considerations.

In confirmation of the view then expressed, I desire to call the attention of the House to a condition of facts very clearly set forth in a newspaper article which is brief and which I will read. It is from the Sussex (N. J.) Independent, a newspaper published in the center of one of the greatest dairy sections of this country. The article reads as follows:

THE DAIRY SITUATION—THE RECENT DROP IN THE PRICE OF MILK UNWARRANTED BY CONDITIONS—MILK GOES DOWN IN FACE OF THE FACT THAT IT IS SCARCE AND BUTTER IS HIGHER THAN IT HAS BEEN IN MANY YEARS.

In previous years during the second week in April butter has always taken a drop in price.

Milk has correspondingly dropped in price.

Who can explain the conditions to-day? Last week the price of creamery butter jumped to 31 cents per pound, and it is an acknowledged fact that milk is scarcer at this time in April than it has been at the same time in many years, for several reasons. First, the cows in commission are giving less than their average quantity of milk. Many farmers are out of hay and there is no grass. Feed is just as high in price as it was at any time last month. Farms that have been overstocked beyond their feed-growing capacity have reduced their herd, and no particular new milk territory has been opened, and ten cooperative creameries are in operation now where one was going five years ago.

Naturally, this explains the shortage of milk, but in the face of this, what explains the action of the milk exchange on Monday?

If the oleomargarine bill pending in Congress becomes a law it will reduce the sale of that article from 100,000,000 pounds a year to practically nothing.

With 100,000,000 pounds of oleo and large quantities of process and renovated butter also withdrawn from the butter market there will be room for 100,000,000 pounds of real butter in addition to the present supply.

At 10 quarts of milk per pound of butter it will require 1,000,000,000 quarts more of milk per year to supply the extra butter. This means that to the present number of milch cows in the country there must be added 363,300 cows that yield 3,000 quarts of milk per head per year, or 436,000 cows that yield 2,500 quarts each, or 545,000 cows that yield 2,000 quarts each, or 725,000 cows that yield 1,500 quarts each, or over 900,000 cows that yield the 1,200 quarts estimated to be the average yearly production of the cows of the country as a whole.

Can there be any surplus of milk, butter, and cheese until this very large addition to dairy cows is made?

The substance of that article is condensed in another statement, which I will give to the House, showing that the price of milk in New York April 1, 1901, was 2¼ cents per quart; that butter in the same market on the same day of last year was 21 cents per pound; that milk in April of this year is 2¾ cents per quart, while butter is 28 cents per pound. In other words, we find, comparing the prices of milk and butter in April of last year with the prices of the same articles in April of this year, an addition of one-tenth of 1 per cent in the price of milk, as against a gain of 33⅓ per cent in the price of butter. Is not that conclusive evidence that the price of these products is absolutely under the control of a combination, and that this combination has put down the price of milk at the same time that it has arbitrarily advanced the price of butter?

Mr. COONEY. Has the gentleman the figures showing the comparative amount of milk produced at the given period in each year, and also comparatively the number of pounds of butter produced at the same periods?

Mr. SCOTT. I have not that information.

Mr. COONEY. Suppose that there had been an increased production of milk and not a corresponding decrease in the production of butter, might not that fact produce such an effect as the gentleman mentions?

Mr. SCOTT. I have assumed that the conditions in April, 1901, were substantially the same as the conditions in April, 1902. I can not conceive of conditions being such at to result in an increased production of milk without a corresponding increase in the production of butter. As a matter of fact, it is known to all of us that the conditions for the production of milk and butter are much worse this year than they were last year. It is reasonable to assume, and it is a matter of common knowledge, that there is less milk produced and consequently a scarcity of butter. I admit at once that there is a good reason for the advance in the price of butter, but I insist that the price of milk should keep pace with the advance in the price of butter, and that there is no reason for a depreciation in the price of milk at the very time when there is an advance in the price of butter.

I remember that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF], in the remarks which he had occasion to submit a few minutes ago to the House, objected very strenuously to a comparison which attempted to show the price of butter in April of last year and April of this year. He insisted that April is a season when we are between hay and grass, when the conditions are bad for the production of butter, and that it is unfair and inconsistent to attempt to draw such a comparison; but I submit that the conditions in one year in April are substantially the conditions of another year in the same month, and that the comparison drawn by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] was absolutely justified.

Now, in further substantiation of the remark I made in the beginning touching the attitude taken by those who opposed this measure when it was first before the House, and in confirmation and emphasis of the correctness of that position, I desire to read a paragraph from a letter which I received recently from the manager of the Continental Creamery Company, at Topeka, Kans. The writer of this letter says:

> In regard to the $600 license tax imposed by the Harris amendment upon manufacturers of process butter, I assure you it will not interfere with the business of the creameries in Kansas. My concern is doing a very large process-butter business, more, perhaps, than any other plant in the United States, and I assure you that the Harris amendment, as covering process butter and adulterated butter, gives great credit to Senator HARRIS. It is just and equitable in every way, and we would be very much pleased indeed if these amendments would be concurred in by the House and the bill passed just as it passed the Senate.

Now, bearing that in mind, I wish to read a single sentence from a letter addressed to me by the manager of a creamery, an independent concern running with a small capital in my own town, an institution which is not included in the creamery trust. This gentleman says:

> We are willing to pay the one-quarter cent per pound revenue if necessary, but the manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers' license will put dairy butter out of existence.

Now, I call your attention to the point which I think is clearly made by the extracts which I have read from these two letters. The first is from the manager of a great combination of interests, a combination which controls 400 creameries in a single State, a combination which produces a million pounds a year of process or renovated butter.

The second extract which I read in your hearing was from a man who is managing his own little creamery in a small town, outside of and independent of the trust. The manager of the trust gives the glad hand to this amendment, which imposes a tax of $600 a year on the manufacturers of renovated or adulterated or process butter. Why? Because he knows just exactly what my friend from my own town says—that the imposition of that tax will drive out of existence the small creameries. It seems to me there can be no other reason why this great interest should welcome such heavy taxation. That it does so is assuredly "confirmation strong as proofs of holy writ" that the declarations made upon the floor of this House to the effect that this legislation was demanded by the great butter factories for the benefit of their own selfish interests is more than justified. Why, otherwise, should the manager of this great combination come here and ask that this House impose what he knows will be a prohibitory tax upon the men engaged in a small way in his own business?

In addition to what has already been said, and referring in this respect but very briefly to what might be regarded as the general merits of this measure, the minority of your Committee on Agriculture are of the opinion that the bill as now before this House, carrying with it the Senate amendments, does not give adequate protection to the consumer of butter, for the reason, as suggested a few moments ago by the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. FOSTER, that there is no safeguard drawn about the sale of adulterated butter further than that which is now thrown about the sale of oleomargarine. I was amazed that the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. GRAFF, fell into the trap which his colleague evidently laid for him, by admitting or by asserting it as his opinion that the provisions of the Senate amendment would give ample protection to the consumers of adulterated butter.

Why, the gentleman—I regret he is not in his seat—certainly knows that the provisions of the Senate amendments guarding the sale of adulterated butter are precisely the provisions of the present oleomargarine law, passed in 1886, regulating the sale of that product. Therefore, when he admits that the provisions safeguarding the sale of adulterated butter as laid down in this bill are sufficient and ample he admits that the provisions safeguarding the sale of oleomargarine are ample, and therefore that there is no reason whatever for the passage of this original bill. Upon his own confession I submit that no other conclusion can be reached.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] read statistics here from a public document to the effect that less than one-third of the butter produced in the United States is made in creameries, while more than two-thirds is manufactured on the farms. It is not necessary for the purpose of this argument to dispute the correctness of those figures; and yet the gentleman himself would be the first to admit that it is the organized corporations who produce the one-third of the butter of the United States, brought together by a community of interests, who are able absolutely to control the price of butter. There is not a man on the floor of this House who will claim that the price of butter in any city market is controlled in the slightest degree by the butter produced by the farmers in their own homes. The contention that the creameries have nothing to do with regulating the price of butter, or, indeed, that the farmers realize their proper proportion of the present high prices, can not be maintained.

As I stated in the beginning, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to delay the House, and I shall not at this time ask for further indulgence. At the proper time the members of the minority of the Committee on Agriculture will ask leave to offer certain amendments. These amendments will be offered seriously and in good faith, because it is our belief, after a careful and thoughtful study of this measure, that the amendments which we offer will be in the direction of consistency, will be in the interest of the consumers of butter in the United States, and will at the same time in no manner militate against the interest of the honest manufacturers of and dealers in pure butter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to detain the House at any length.

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is entitled to the floor. He yielded a portion of his time to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MANN. I will take the floor in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman can not take the floor in his own right in the time of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman from New York finish his time then.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been changed somewhat since it went through the House, but it does not seem to me that it has been improved any. I was not one of those in the House who voted, when the bill was previously before the committee, for the amendment in regard to process or renovated butter. I did not join with those of my friends upon this floor who were opposed to the passage of this bill in putting that amendment into the bill, because it seemed to me that the same objections to the oleomargarine bill itself applied equally as well to the bill in relation to the manufacture of process or renovated butter. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is the province of Congress to determine, through the internal taxing power, what shall be eaten or how it shall be manufactured.

I know very well that this bill is before this Congress because some genius originated a plan by which he could make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before. In the history of mankind, up to this time, we have flattered and praised the man who was able to make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before; but now we are engaged in the business of attempting to blot out the second blade of grass in order to prevent rivalry with the first blade.

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen in opposition to the bill on the floor to-day have called attention to the rise in the price of butter, while milk is decreasing in value, and the gentlemen in favor of the bill have indignantly denied that it was the result of this bill. I confess, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the passage of this bill, so far as it has progressed to the present time, has had a great effect upon the rise in the price of butter; but if it were not the belief of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] and the other gentlemen who are advocating this bill that it would increase the price of butter, the bill would not receive a single moment's consideration upon the floor of this House. They would be the ones who would be disappointed. This bill is brought before Congress for the purpose of taking money out of the pocket of the consumer and placing it in the pocket of the producer of butter, and if that were not the fact no one here would be so mean and lowly that he would vote for the bill.

And now having, as they think, accomplished the purpose as to oleomargarine, they go further and say to the man who has made butter that if his butter becomes rancid he shall not cleanse it.

Mr. Chairman, when this bill was considered by the House before, and the process-butter amendment was adopted by the votes of gentlemen opposed to the bill in part, I said then that the creamery men would be the ones most earnestly in favor of that amendment when they discovered what it was, because they have had to meet the opposition of the process and renovated butter in the past and in the present as well as oleomargarine. Why, Mr. Chairman, to-day in the markets of New York City renovated butter is quoted within 2 cents of the highest price of the best creamery butter. No objection to it, perfectly good and wholesome; but it comes in competition with the creamery butter, and therefore the creamery men wish to crush it out.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to make any pretense or claim that I have better knowledge or as good knowledge as the gentlemen who are especially interested in this bill. There is in the district which I happen to have the honor to represent no single oleomargarine manufactory, not one, so far as I know, concerned in any way whatever in the manufacture of oleomargarine or in the manufacture of process or renovated or adulterated butter, and no one in my district who has a special interest in this bill except as a consumer of butter. The question of oleomargarine has been discussed before the House. I do not propose to detain the House with any discussion in reference to that subject. The few words that I say upon the subject of adulterated or process butter is from no personal interest of my own or any personal interest of my constituents, but solely because I believe that the theory of such a bill is adverse to the principles of our form of government.

What does the amendment in this bill propose? It proposes that wherever butter has become rancid it shall not be cleansed, and no one in favor of the bill explains or can explain or deny that proposition. The provision in this bill is absolutely that if dairy butter or creamery butter becomes rancid—and we all know that a large portion of the dairy butter made on the farm does become rancid—then no one can use any substance whatever for the purpose of deodorizing it or removing the rancidity from it without paying a tax of 10 cents a pound. Other people, and at other times, would urge that there be an opportunity given to make good, to make over a spoiled article of commerce. But here is a provision for what they call adulterated butter; it is easy to say adulterated.

I would better say that the statesmanship that brought in this bill was adulterated statesmanship; it would be easy to so characterize, but that would not be proof. This bill defines as adulterated butter that which contains any substance except the butter itself. It requires the aid of no ingredient to make adulterated butter. The manufacturer of process butter who takes a barrel of butter, some of which is rancid, melts it, and uses air, pure air, and water, for the purpose of removing the rancidity, under this bill is a manufacturer of adulterated butter and is liable to a tax of 10 cents a pound in addition to the annual license.

I know very well that is not the intention of the Agricultural Committee, which has framed or agreed to this amendment; but that is the result of the language of the amendment.

Adulterated butter—

In one of the definitions of it in this bill is—any butter or butter fat with which is mixed any substance foreign to butter as herein defined, with intent or effect of cheapening in cost the product, or any butter in the manufacture or manipulation of which any process or material is used with intent or effect of causing the absorption of abnormal quantities of water, milk, or cream—in which no acid, alkali, nor chemical, nor any substance whatever has been used for the purpose or intent of deodorizing or removing rancidity therefrom.

Or—

Now, of course, under this definition of process butter, melted butter, which is thoroughly cleansed by the use of air or water, would under the terms of this bill become adulterated butter.

Mr. DAVIDSON. No.

Mr. MANN. Ah, the gentleman from Wisconsin says "no." I asked the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin, when this bill was considered in this House before, whether it would have the effect of increasing the price of butter, and he said "no," but he left his answer out of his printed speech. He would not be so strongly in favor of this bill if his constituents were not, and they would not be in favor of the bill if they did not believe it would increase the price of creamery butter. This plainly provides that any butter which is refined, melted, or in which any other manufacturing process is used in it which uses water or air, shall be called adulterated butter and pay a tax of 10 cents a pound.

Now, process and renovated butter is defined to be butter where—no acid, alkali, nor chemical, nor any substance whatever has been used for the purpose or intent of deodorizing or removing the rancidity therefrom, and to which no substance or substances foreign to pure butter have been added with intent or effect of cheapening cost.

That is the trouble with this bill in another respect. The whole theory of the bill is to prevent anything which will cheapen the cost. Who would have supposed that in the American Congress, in the twentieth century, they would actually propose a bill in which they proposed to make it a finable offense to cheapen the cost of an edible article?

Mr. Chairman, a good deal of complaint has been made in the papers in the last few days and weeks in reference to the beef trust. I do not propose to discuss that subject at this time, but, Mr. Chairman, who in this Hall would rise and advocate a bill to increase the power of the beef trust? If beef products have risen in value because of the trust, because of the agreement between the producers of dressed meat, then why has butter increased in value as milk went down in price? Who here would rise and vote to increase the price of beef? But you gentlemen who propose to pass this bill propose to increase the price of butter, which is just as essential to the table of the American citizen as is beef, and I warn you that when legislation of this kind is commenced and enacted into law, the end of fair government can not be long delayed unless statesmen with a higher idea of devotion to their country and less devotion merely to the selfish interests of their constituents shall prevail. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. CROOK, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bill of the following title:

On April 22, 1902:

H. R. 13627. An act making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I now ask that general debate may be closed and that the Senate amendments be taken up in order for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that general debate be now closed and the Senate amendments be taken up in their order for amendment or concurrence? Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be read, subject to amendment, by paragraph instead of by section. Some of the sections are long, and it would be much better to amend the paragraphs as we go along.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from New York to ask unanimous consent that the entire Senate amendments be first read?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; I ask that we read the amendments by paragraph instead of by section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be read by paragraph if there be more than one paragraph in an amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read Senate amendment No. 1, as follows:

In line 4, page 1, after the word "imitation," insert "process, renovated, or adulterated."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend concurrence in that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read Senate amendment No. 2, as follows:

On page 2, lines 10 to 14, strike out "Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to forbid any State to permit the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in any manner consistent with the laws of said State, provided that it is manufactured and sold entirely within the State."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend to the House concurrence with that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read Senate amendment No. 3, as follows:

In line 24, page 2, after the word "family," strike out the words "and guests thereof" and insert the word "table."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read Senate amendment No. 4, as follows:

In line 25, page 2, and line 1, page 3, strike out the words "ingredient or" and insert the word "artificial."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend concurrence in that amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers the following amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think this perhaps is a separate amendment. I want to insert on page 3, after the word "coloration," the words "except colored butter."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut that the committee recommend that the House concur in the Senate amendment No. 4.

The question was considered, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 1, page 3, after the word "coloration," the words "except colored butter."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The Senate amendments should first be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. That we should first consider the Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Can any amendment be offered to the bill passed by the Senate where the same has passed the House except to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that such an amendment as is offered by the gentleman from New York is not in order, and therefore declines to entertain the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to reconsider the vote by which the last amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Against that I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut makes the point of order that it is not in order to reconsider a vote in the Committee of the Whole, and the Chair sustains the point. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent, because the amendment was sent up by the gentleman from New York as an original amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut objects.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a substitute to the paragraph so that it will read:

And any person that sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for the use and consumption of others, except to his own family table without compensation, who shall add to or mix with such oleomargarine any artificial coloration, except colored butter, that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow shall also be held to be a manufacturer of oleomargarine within the meaning of said act, and subject to the provisions thereof.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order that that is a substitute entirely changing the text of the bill which the House and Senate have agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand what the paragraph is that the gentleman wishes to amend. In place of what paragraph is the substitute offered?

Mr. TAWNEY. He offers the paragraph in the original bill, beginning at line 22, page 2, and ending at the end of line 4, on page 3, and I make the point of order that it entirely changes the text of the bill, to which the House and Senate have agreed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My proposition is to substitute for the paragraph beginning line 22, page 2, and ending with line 4, page 3——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] desire to be heard on the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I simply submit that the substitute is absolutely in order and that my amendment is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that if this matter were before the House for the first time the substitute amendment might be in order; but this bill has been passed by this House, and the portion of it to which the gentleman from New York offers a substitute has been passed also by the Senate. It is not in order for the House to amend that portion of the bill. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Do I understand by that ruling that no amendments to the Senate amendments are in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that amendments to the Senate amendments are in order, but not to the text of the bill which has been agreed to by both Houses.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My proposition is an amendment to the Senate amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. But the proposition is to substitute new matter for a portion of the text of the House bill which has been agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I put my proposition in that form because the Chair had decided that I could not offer it as a simple amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the first amendment offered by the gentleman from New York was to amend the text of the House bill which has been agreed to by the Senate, and was not an amendment to the Senate amendment. It was on that ground alone that the Chair ruled it out of order.

Mr. MANN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Certainly I suppose it was in order to move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment. Now, the gentleman from Connecticut moved to concur in the Senate amendment, and the gentleman from New York offered an amendment to that motion, which certainly was in order, as a motion to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he is wrong in his premises. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York was not an amendment to the Senate amendment nor a proposition to concur with an amendment, but was an amendment to the text of the bill which had been agreed to by both Houses.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair will permit me further, the gentleman from Connecticut moved to concur in the Senate amendment, which of course was in order. The gentleman from New York offered an amendment as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut. Thereupon the amendment of the gentleman from New York was ruled out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair may be permitted to state the parliamentary situation, it is this: The gentleman from Connecticut made a motion to concur in Senate amendment No. 4, which simply strikes out the words "ingredient or" and inserts in place thereof the word "artificial." Then the gentleman from New York rose to offer an amendment which the Chair understood to be an amendment to the Senate amendment, and therefore ruled that it had precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut; but when the amendment of the gentleman from New York came to be read it was found to be a proposition to insert in the text of the bill, as agreed to by both Houses, after the word "coloration," line 1, page 3, being a part of the text of the bill not amended by the Senate—to insert at that point certain other matter, which the Chair thereupon ruled out of order.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair will permit me further, is it not in order to concur in the Senate amendment inserting the word "artificial" before the word "coloration," with an amendment, inserting another word after the word "coloration?" And if that can not be done in Committee of the Whole or in the House, how can it be done in conference?

The CHAIRMAN. The word "coloration" is not a part of the Senate amendment, but a part of the text of the bill. It would be in order to offer an amendment to the word "artificial"—adding another word, possibly, thereto.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The reasoning of the Chair is perfectly correct, but as stated it discloses that the Chair is ignorant of the fact which is at the basis of all the reasoning that can be had upon this subject. This bill went to the Senate with this language: "Coloration or ingredient that causes it to look like butter." Now, if the Chair will keep that in mind, then this is the second fact upon which the Chair has to act: The Senate struck out the words "or ingredient" and substituted the word "artificial."

Therefore the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is not an amendment to the original text of the bill as agreed upon by both Houses, but is an amendment to the amendment which the Senate made for the purpose of further defining what artificial coloration means. The original language was "coloration or ingredient." The new language as effected by the Senate amendment is "artificial coloration."

Then the question arises as to what is or is not "artificial coloration;" and certainly any amendment that goes to define what is or is not artificial coloration is an amendment to the Senate amendment, which put in the word "artificial" before "coloration" and struck out the words "or ingredient."

Now, two divergent ideas arise immediately. Suppose that butter which has been colored artificially is used as an ingredient in oleomargarine, then shall the oleomargarine be pronounced to be artificially colored oleomargarine or not? In order to obviate all uncertainty about that the gentleman from New York offers an amendment to the Senate amendment to define what artificial coloration is, and in limiting what that shall be construed to mean, he uses the language "not from butter." That is what? Coloration not from butter? No artificial coloration not from butter.

In other words, if the artificiality of the coloration proceeds not from the manufactured oleomargarine but from the fact that butter was put into it which itself had been artificially colored, then undoubtedly the amendment is an amendment to the artificiality of the process and the word "artificiality" was inserted by the Senate; therefore, it is an amendment to the Senate amendment and not an amendment to the original text of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has listened with interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. In other words, it limits the meaning of the word "artificial."

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair is still of opinion that the amendment, coming as it does in the text of the bill after the word "coloration," although it is only one word beyond the Senate amendment, the effect is just the same as if it were ten words or ten lines, and the Chair therefore adheres to the ruling that the text of the bill, which has been agreed to by both Houses, is sacred and can not be amended in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the Chair hear this suggestion just one moment? Suppose the gentleman from New York were to offer his amendment coming after the word "artificial;" then the Chair would rule it would be in order, but it would not make good sense.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be in order. Its good sense would be for the committee and not for the Chair to determine.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the inquiry.

Mr. SCOTT. I understand the Chair to hold that the text of the original bill, which has passed both Houses, is sacred and can not be touched in this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the opinion and ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SCOTT. My inquiry is this: When the meaning and context have been materially changed by a Senate amendment, can it be properly claimed that the text has been passed by both Houses? This House has never passed upon it, and the inquiry I make is whether or not the amendment which the Senate put into this section did not so change the entire meaning of the paragraph as to make proper a ruling that the text had not been passed upon by this House?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not within the province of the Chair to construe the meaning of words which have been agreed to by both branches of Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. This Senate amendment has already been concurred in by the Committee of the Whole, has it not—that is, Senate amendment No. 4?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I make the point of order that the amendment comes too late.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, while I dislike very much to disagree with the ruling of the Chair——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With all due respect, I appeal from the decision of the Chair on the point of order ruling the amendment I offer to the paragraph out of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, before the question is put I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this amendment has already been concurred in by the Committee of the Whole, and that therefore the ruling of the Chair, independent of any other question, is perfectly proper, because an amendment would not be in order after an amendment has been concurred in.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that no appeal was taken from the ruling of the Chair sustaining the point of order against the gentleman from New York. Subsequently various parliamentary inquiries were made, to which the Chair replied. Replies to parliamentary inquiries are not subject to appeal.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well. Does the Chair hold that we can insert immediately after the word "artificial" the words "except other butter?"

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that it would have been in order had not the committee already concurred in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The House has not concurred in the Senate amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It can now be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not suppose the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] would permit me to do it by unanimous consent.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; we would not. That would be carrying generosity too far. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SCOTT. I rise to make a statement upon which to base a parliamentary request, upon which I intend to base a demand for a ruling from the Chair.

My contention, Mr. Chairman, is that the entire sentence which is now under consideration, beginning with line 22, page 2, has been so materially changed by the amendment of the Senate that it is no longer a part of the text, and no words in it are any longer a part of the text agreed upon by both Houses; and therefore, regardless of the fact that the Senate amendment has been concurred in by the committee, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is germane and in order, and I would like a ruling of the Chair on that point.

The CHAIRMAN. That question has already been ruled upon. The point of order was sustained, and the committee has concurred in the Senate amendment. There is therefore nothing before the committee, unless the gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to open that question again.

Mr. SCOTT. Would an appeal from the decision of the Chair on that point be in order?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8587) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. MASON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12346) "making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. ELKINS, and Mr. BERRY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 3 of said act is hereby amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided further, That wholesale dealers who vend no other oleomargarine or butterine except that upon which a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound is imposed by this act, as amended, shall pay $200; and such retail dealers as vend no other oleomargarine or butterine except that upon which is imposed by this act, as amended, a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound shall pay $6."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to concur with an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to concur with an amendment, which takes precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "two hundred" in line 9, page 3, and insert "fifty."

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the license tax of $200 here put upon this product is burdensome; that it is out of proportion to the purposes of the bill as it applies to the license upon colored oleomargarine. The bill provides that there shall be a tax of 10 cents a pound on colored oleomargarine. The contention for that tax, or rather the argument for it, was to increase the price of the oleomargarine to something near the price of butter in order that it might not come in competition with it. The tax of one-quarter of 1 cent per pound was placed upon the uncolored oleomargarine simply for the purpose of using the governmental agency in regulation of the manufacture.

Now, it occurs to me that to follow that up with the additional tax of $200 upon the wholesale dealer is unnecessary and burdensome, and will result in the fact that the consumer will have to pay it. It is unnecessary to the proper policing this article, nor is it necessary to the proper protection of the manufacture of the article that this tax should be so heavy, and I believe it ought to be the same as that upon renovated butter. I understand there will be an amendment offered to place the tax at $50 upon the wholesale dealer in renovated butter. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment be adopted, and I hope that gentlemen in charge of the bill will not object to it.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, just a few words, and then I shall be ready for a vote. This section of the bill was framed by the oleo manufacturers themselves. It is all they ask for. It was inserted in the Senate with the assurance of members of the Agricultural Committee in the House that there would be no objection offered to it. There is no special reason why the United States Government should concede $150 a year to these dealers, when nobody has asked for it except my benevolent friend from Kentucky.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit a question? You do not contend that this is necessary for revenue, do you? It is not the purpose of it to raise revenue?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. It is certainly a revenue bill.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. But the purpose of this act is to police the manufacturer and dealer in this article. Is not that the prime purpose?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. There can be no considerable revenue made from uncolored oleomargarine, and the contention is that it is not burdensome. We have reduced the retail tax to a nominal figure of $6 a year, or 50 cents a month, and that was where the real burden would come.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. How does the gentleman know this was prepared by the oleomargarine people?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Because one of them told us so.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Who?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. A prominent manufacturer.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Told you so?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. That does not appear from any record in the case, and I had no such information.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I think my authority is good.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask my colleague, the gentleman from Connecticut, if it is not a fact that in this provision the tax on the wholesale dealer in oleomargarine is reduced from $400 to $200?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Certainly; and all the reduction was made that the dealers themselves asked for.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Do you put the same tax on renovated butter that you do on oleomargarine?

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Why do you charge the wholesale merchant for selling unobjectionable oleo?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. In order to preserve the police supervision. The dealers themselves do not wish to have this license tax entirely removed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word. Here is a merchant who is selling the real oleomargarine as "oleo," and not as "butter." No one objects to that. He is dealing in an honest article, and he is dealing honestly with his fellows and honestly with the Government, and yet you want to impose a tax of $200 upon him.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. They wish to have it themselves.

Mr. TOMPKINS of New York. And it was $400 when the bill left the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman say the merchants are asking to be taxed $200 to carry on this business?

Mr. TAWNEY. Did the gentleman vote for the bill when it was before the House?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; I voted to recommit the bill in the hopes the House bill would be improved by amendment. The House did not recommit, and then I voted to pass it as it was, believing the Senate would improve it, which I hope has been done, and as this is about the best that can now be done, I shall vote for it as amended. I am for the farmer.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then, when you did that, you voted to put a tax of $400 instead of $200 on the merchant.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That shows that your bill was wrong, and that the House was in error in not recommitting and changing this item, but I voted for it believing the Senate would amend and rectify; still I am ready to make the provision entirely right. I am glad that you now say you were wrong in your bill when it was here before. Now here is the proposition——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut has not yielded the floor.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman had resumed his seat and I moved to strike out the last word and proceeded.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I am willing to yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must first obtain the recognition of the Chair.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Connecticut had resumed his seat and I rose and asked him a question.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I think I have been on my feet all the time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman is certainly mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman think he has the floor now?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman desiring the floor will address the Chair.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire the floor?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has the gentleman the floor now?

The CHAIRMAN. He has not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I move to strike out the last word, and I want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, I voted to take up this measure to-day. This is the only means now we can employ as new legislation to curb this oleo butter fraud. Something must be done to do this, and at once. I am for the farmer, first, last, and all the time. I am against dishonest butter, and I am against encouraging anything that breaks down the prices of the farmer, because the farmer is the cornerstone of society.

We need the farmer from the time we come into the world until we go out, and I would do nothing nor permit anything that wrongfully destroys his business. Though unsatisfactory, I am going to vote for the bill as amended; but I say this part of the bill is wrong in imposing a tax of $200 on the merchant who is selling the real oleo as oleo to his neighbors and customers. He is dealing honestly with the Government, and dealing fair with his customers. Why tax, why burden an honest merchant for doing the honest thing? I say, gentlemen, such an act is palpably wrong.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I desire to favor the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky. I do not think the gentleman in charge of this bill, the gentleman from Connecticut, has stated fairly what the people desire and what the manufacturer of oleomargarine desires. I take it that we are not called here to do what the farmer desires or what particular oleomargarine manufacturers desire. It is a creditable thing in the committee and in the Senate that they have reduced the tax from $650 to $200. It will be more creditable to them, and it will be more creditable to this House, if it further reduces that tax on an honest occupation, in order to allow all men to enter upon it who desire to do so without payment of an exorbitant tax.

In reference to the necessity of policing, it must be admitted, and it is admitted by the opponents of this bill, that some tax is necessary to police and supervise the manufacture of this article; but it can not be held, and I shall wait to see it held here this afternoon, that a tax of $200 is necessary for the purpose of policing and supervising its manufacture. The great trouble is that there is to-day centralization in the manufacture of oleomargarine, and I do not doubt that some representatives have stated to the gentleman from Connecticut that this $200 tax was satisfactory; but for the consumer, for the people who desire to eat a cheap product, a wholesome product, even if the ban is placed upon it, and if they are not accorded the advantage of eating it colored, there ought to be some consideration. At least latitude ought to be allowed for general manufacture of an honest food product now monopolized. If the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is adopted here, a field for honest competition will be opened all over this country, and it will not be so easy to centralize the control of the manufacture of oleomargarine. It is but fair, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the motion to concur with an amendment by adding a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Do the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Tennessee withdraw the pro forma amendment?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why, certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Then an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky is offered by the gentleman from Illinois. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concur with the further amendment by inserting at the end of line 13 the following: "And provided further, That the artificial coloration provided for in the preceding paragraph shall not include colored butter."

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order that it is not an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is a separate amendment and not an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. It will be in order after the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky has been disposed of.

Mr. MANN. It would not be in order, Mr. Chairman, after the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky has been adopted, because his motion is to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, and if that motion is adopted the amendment is concurred in, and it is beyond the control of the committee. I take it that it is within the power of the committee to concur in a Senate amendment with one amendment, and that amendment be subject, under the rules, to an additional amendment, and so to concur with two amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken in his premises. The motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is to amend the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. If that is its standing before the committee, very well. The motion of the gentleman was to concur with an amendment, as stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands differently. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, without expressing any opinion as to the merits of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, I submit that it would not be in order anyway, because it is an amendment in the third degree. The Senate amendment is pending, and the gentleman from Kentucky moves an amendment to that amendment. Now, the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois is to amend an amendment to an amendment, which can not be done, and therefore the Chair must be right in his statement. There is no difficulty about it. If the Chair holds the proposition of the gentleman is first to amend the Senate amendment, if that is voted down or up, it would be in order for the gentleman from Illinois to offer his amendment to the Senate amendment, as the Chair has stated.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand the ruling of the Chair to be that the committee can amend the Senate amendment without a motion to concur?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the opinion of the Chair. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky) there were—ayes 53, noes 85.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Now, Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion to concur.

Mr. MANN. I believe, Mr. Chairman, my amendment has precedence.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which has precedence over the motion to concur. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "dollars," in line 13, the following:
"And provided further, That the artificial coloration provided for in the preceding paragraph shall not include colored butter."

Mr. TAWNEY. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The amendment is not germane to the paragraph to which it is offered as an amendment.

Mr. MANN. It is all one section, as the gentleman will discover if he will read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentlemen from Illinois upon the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the section we are reading is all one section. If it is not the same subject-matter, it is not the fault of this House or this committee, which includes two different subject-matters in one section. It certainly is within the province of the House to amend a section upon a particular subject by inserting a provision in reference to one subject-matter in that section anywhere it pleases in the section. That ought to be a matter within the discretion of the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you think if we have passed a provision even in the same section relating to a certain subject and the committee declines to entertain an amendment, you can pass on to another subject in the same section and offer the same amendment to it?

Mr. MANN. We have not passed upon any other subject; we have only passed upon a Senate amendment, and merely because the Senate amendment occurs at a particular place has nothing to do with this question. We did not pass upon the bill. The Chair expressly held that we could not amend the original bill. We passed upon the Senate amendment. Now, I take it, it is within the province of the House to agree to an amendment cutting down the amount of the license tax, with a provision governing the action of the people who operate under that tax. There might very well be added to this amendment of the Senate a provision that the $200 license tax should only apply to people who made a particular kind of butter.

Now, that is the subject-matter. The very question before the House in this amendment is the tax upon oleomargarine, which is taxed only one-fourth of a cent per pound; and the question as to what that tax shall be is within the province of the House to determine. We may say that this tax of one-fourth a cent a pound shall apply only to one kind of oleomargarine or to another, but when we limit the tax, we certainly have the right to decide what that tax shall apply to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Just one word. The paragraph which the gentleman from Illinois proposes to amend is an amendment to section 3 of the existing oleomargarine law, relating entirely to the license taxes paid by wholesale and retail dealers in oleomargarine. Now, the proposition which he offers as an amendment to this paragraph relates entirely to another subject-matter. It relates to the use of coloring matter in the manufacture of the article which these men are likely to sell. I do not think it can be held for a moment that it is germane to the proposed amendment of the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. Senate amendment No. 5 reads thus:

Section 3 of said act is hereby amended by adding thereto the following:

And then follows a certain proviso. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is to add at the end of that proviso these words:

And provided further, That the artificial coloration provided for in the preceding paragraph shall not include colored butter.

The "preceding paragraph" referred to, as the Chair understands, is section 3 of a former act of Congress, which is not now before the Committee of the Whole.

On page 323 of the Manual the Chair finds this language:

To a bill amending a general law on a specific point an amendment relating to the terms of the law rather than to those of the bill was offered and ruled not to be germane.

That ruling was made by Speaker Reed. The Chair thinks that it covers this case. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, while it may be germane to the preceding paragraph of section 3 of the earlier act of Congress to which it refers, is not germane to the proviso which constitutes the Senate amendment, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I now renew my motion to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Senate amendment No. 6 was read, as follows:

After the word "consumption," in line 21, page 3, strike out "and" and insert "or."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I move that the Committee of the Whole recommend concurrence in this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Senate amendment No. 7 was read, as follows:

Before the word "coloration," in line 25, page 3, insert "artificial."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I move that the Committee of the Whole recommend that the House concur in this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Senate amendment No. 8 was read, as follows:

In line 1, page 4, strike out before the word "that," the words "or ingredient."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I move that the Committee of the Whole recommend to the House concurrence in this amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] makes a motion to amend which takes precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut. The amendment of the gentleman from New York will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Senate amendment No. 8 by inserting, after the word "ingredient," line 1, page 4, the words "but colored butter shall not be construed as artificial coloration."

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order that this amendment is not in order, as it proposes to change the text of the bill as agreed to between the two Houses.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair correctly understands the motion of the gentleman from New York, it is to insert at the place where the Senate strikes out the words "or ingredient" the words which the Clerk has read. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order and overrules the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the point of my amendment is simply this: Under the law of 1886, the original oleomargarine law, manufacturers of oleomargarine were required to file with the Secretary of the Treasury a statement of the ingredients of the commodity which they manufacture; and among those ingredients is butter. Now, when they go on the market to buy their butter they can not tell whether it is colored or not (although I know that all butter is colored). Why should they not have the privilege of buying butter (which is an honest ingredient used in the manufacture of oleomargarine) on the market just as anybody else can buy it? That is all there is of it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from New York explain the effect of this amendment in using colored butter in the manufacture of oleomargarine?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Under the law there they must not add any colored butter, if it even gave a straw shade to oleomargarine.

Mr. TAWNEY. I mean the effect upon the business of the manufacturer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would simply compel the oleomargarine manufacturers, probably, to have their butter made absolutely without coloring matter. I offer it because there has been a case in one of the State courts where the question has been decided that coloring coming through colored butter was contrary to the State law.

Mr. TAWNEY. And the manufacturer of oleomargarine, then, by the use of butter, no matter how much of a shade of yellow it might give that yellow oleomargarine, would be exempt from the 10-cent tax under this provision.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is it exactly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then the purpose of it is to destroy the entire effect of this bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The purpose of it, frankly and openly stated, is to allow the oleomargarine people to color their oleomargarine in an honest and legal way, as provided in this bill, because butter is an ingredient of oleomargarine and has been since 1886, when the law compelled manufacturers to file with the Secretary of the Treasury the list of ingredients.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Just a word, Mr. Chairman. If this amendment is adopted we might as well strike out the enacting clause of the bill and let our work go for nothing. It means that oleomargarine may be colored as it is colored now. Butter will be colored expressly for use in oleomargarine, to be expressly used as an ingredient, and it will color the oleomargarine for all practical purposes—avoid the tax and kill the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division, demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi, there were—ayes 51, noes 88.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves that the committee recommend the House to concur in the Senate amendment No. 8.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of this act "butter" shall be understood to mean an article of food as defined in "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886; that "adulterated butter" shall be understood to mean a grade of butter produced by mixing, reworking, rechurning in milk or cream, refining, or in any way producing a uniform, purified, or improved product from different lots or parcels of melted or unmelted butter, in which any acid, alkali, chemical, or any substance whatever is introduced or used for the purpose or with the effect of deodorizing or removing therefrom rancidity, and any butter with which there is mixed any substance foreign to butter as herein recognized or understood, with intent or effect of cheapening in cost the product in any way, either through cheaper or inferior ingredients, or with intent or effect of causing the absorbtion of abnormal quantities of water, milk, or cream: Provided, That in case of the addition of animal fats or vegetable oils the product shall be known and treated as oleomargarine, as defined in the aforesaid act approved August 2, 1886.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In lines 5 and 6 strike out the words "shall be understood" and insert the words "is hereby defined."

In lines 10 and 11 strike out the words "shall be understood" and insert the words "is hereby defined."

In line 15 after the word "butter" insert the words "or butter fat."

In lines 18 and 19 strike out the word "and" and insert the word "or," and after the word "butter" insert the words "butter fat."

In line 20 strike out the words "recognized or understood" and insert the word "defined."

After the word "product," in line 21, strike out the word "in" and insert the word "or."

After the word "any," in line 22, strike out the words "way, either through cheaper or inferior ingredients, or," and insert the words "butter, in the manufacture or manipulation of which any process or material is used."

On page 6 strike out the proviso.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee concur in the amendments with the committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the motion would first be on the adoption of the committee amendments to which I have no objection, but immediately after that I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be first upon the adoption of the committee amendments, unless some one offers an amendment to one or all of them.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut has sent up a committee amendment in addition to the committee amendments which are incorporated in the bill, and, as I understand, he wishes to have them considered and adopted at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] proposes to insert certain words on page 6 in lieu of those which have been stricken out, and then strike out the succeeding paragraph, which has not yet been read, and it is not in order at this time to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I thought that paragraph had been read. I withdraw the amendment for the present. I move concurrence in the committee amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the adoption of the amendments offered by the Committee on Agriculture. If there is no objection, they will be considered together. [After a pause.] Hearing none, it is so ordered. The question now is on the adoption of the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the adoption of the committee amendments offered by the gentleman from Connecticut, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, after the word "cream," in line 1, insert a semicolon in place of the colon, and these words, "that process butter or renovated butter is hereby defined to mean butter which has been subjected to no process by which it is melted, clarified, or refined, and made to resemble genuine butter, always excepting adulterated butter as defined by this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PARKER. That will not prevent my going back to the definition of adulteration.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to know what it means. Does it mean that the butter that is made by the farmer and sold and is not consumed in a few days can not be sold to the manufacturer, who washes it and makes it sweet, without his paying a tax of 10 cents a pound for the privilege of washing it?

Mr. TAWNEY. The definition of a manufacturer of process butter meets your objection. The people you have been speaking of will not be included in that definition, and therefore will not be subject to this.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The very object of the amendment is to exclude those people.

Mr. CANNON. Let us read it again. I do not understand it. I thought you were going to strike out——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. It does strike out and insert the definition prepared by the Department of Agriculture to cover the very point the gentleman makes—to exempt the farmer and the country grocer who wishes to pack his butter. It was not believed that the bill as passed by the Senate would affect those people, but the Secretary of Agriculture was of the opinion that the definition should be more definite.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment read again? I should like to hear it. It may not be necessary to hear it, but it might be a good thing.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask again. Suppose 50 farmers in my township sell their 10 pounds of butter each at the place where they trade. The local demand does not consume it until it becomes strong, which it will in two or three days. Then that butter is of no account except as it may be shipped and washed and aerated and colored, and then it is good butter, without the use of acids. Can that be done under this bill without penalty?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The butter that the gentleman refers to, rancid butter, comes under the provisions of process or renovated butter. To be frank with the gentleman, it would not be exempt; but butter that the country grocer takes in over his counter and packs down in an unmelted condition, without the use of any process or acid, is exempt under this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Well, then, what tax will such butter be subject to, the kind I speak of?

Mr. HAUGEN. None whatever. The ladlers are exempt.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. If that butter is treated as adulterated butter, it would be subject to the tax of 10 cents a pound. If it is sold to the process man to be renovated, it is subject to a tax of one-quarter of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. CANNON. Then the process man can take this butter, whether it be 10 pounds or 10 tons, and he can treat it, as long as he does not treat it with acids.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Or remelt it.

Mr. CANNON. He can wash it and mix it and remelt it, if he chooses, provided it is butter all the time, and color it; and when he has cleansed it, and by cleaning it has become sweet, then how much tax does he pay on that butter?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. One-fourth of a cent a pound.

Mr. CANNON. One-quarter of a cent a pound?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is, provided he melts it.

Mr. GRAFF. He can not clarify it nor regranulate it unless he does melt it, because that is the only process by which there can be a refining.

Mr. HAUGEN. The Senate bill proposed to tax ladlers as well as those who remelt the butter, but the bill has been amended so as to exempt the ladlers.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, we should like to hear this debate; or is it a private conversation?

Mr. CANNON. I do not want it to be private, because I want to know about it. I have been busy with my work that has been committed to me, as other gentlemen have been busy with theirs, and I want to know about it, because my constituency and the people at large are interested in it, both the consumer of butter on the one hand and the maker on the other, outside of the creamery. Now, I want to know if thers is anything in this bill that will subject the butter of my constituents, made in the farmer's home, which butter has become strong, when it is made sweet by washing, by melting, by mixing different kinds of butter together, and by coloring it with annotto—I want to know if there is anything in this bill that will subject that to a tax?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. One-fourth of a cent per pound.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not if the farmer does it himself.

Mr. MANN. Ten cents a pound, as plainly as the English language can state anything.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Not unless adulteration is used.

Mr. CANNON. What does my friend mean by adulteration?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. By putting in a portion of glucose or any other foreign material.

Mr. TAWNEY (reading):

Every person who engages in the production of process or renovated butter or adulterated butter as a business——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to move to strike out the last word. I just want to know about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY (reading):

Every person who engages in the production of process or renovated butter or adulterated butter as a business shall be considered a manufacturer thereof.

And subject to this taxation.

Mr. CANNON. Subject to a taxation—license tax?

Mr. TAWNEY. License tax; and the product is subject to a quarter of a cent a pound.

Mr. CANNON. Not 10 cents a pound?

Mr. TAWNEY. Not unless he is engaged in the business of adulterating butter, and is a manufacturer of it, by the use of acid or other chemicals described in this act.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I merely want to say in my five minutes that the farmers of this country by and by, when forced to give attention to matters which affect their interests, and I think that nine out of ten of them never saw the inside of a creamery, perhaps never will, somehow or other they have a notion that this legislation touching oleomargarine will protect them in the real butter industry. Maybe it will. I do not know whether it will or not.

But I want to say to gentlemen in charge of this bill if it should turn out now by virtue of a provision of the legislation that you enact here that the product of the farmer, the farmer's wife now making butter—and there is 9 pounds of it made where there is 1 pound of dairy butter made—if by virtue of the operation of this act is discriminated against and depreciated in value, then you will find that somebody a little later on will tramp on you. That is all. [Loud applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is the pending motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut. If there be no objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the definition of process or renovated butter, is it not?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now I want to read to the House what Mr. Levi Wells, dairy and food commissioner of the State of Pennsylvania, says upon the subject:

It may be of interest to many to know what renovated butter is. It is also known under several alias, such as "boiled" process and "aerated" butter, and is produced from the lowest grade of butter that can be found in country stores or elsewhere It is of such poor quality that in its normal condition it is unfit for human food. It is generally rancid and often filthy in appearance, and of various hues in color, from nearly a snow white along the various shades of yellow up to the reddish cast, or brick color. It is usually packed in shoe boxes or anything else that may be convenient, without much regard to cleanliness or a favorable appearance in any way. The merchant is glad to get rid of it, with its unwholesome smell, from his premises at almost any price, usually expecting that it will find its way to some soap factory, where it naturally belongs; but in this he is mistaken.

I do not know how a greater fraud could be perpetrated upon the unsuspecting consumer or upon legitimate dairy interests than is done by these manufacturers of spurious butter. In the first place, 20 to 25 per cent of the compound is skim milk, for which the consumer pays the price of butter. Besides this, the filthy condition of the foundation stock before any manipulation occurs, were it known, would deter most people from eating it. It certainly should only be allowed to be sold for what it is, namely, "renovated butter." It is a fraud because it has no keeping qualities. Being so heavily charged with skim milk, unless kept at a very low temperature, it soon becomes putrid. The manufacturer and jobber may get it off their hands before it deteriorates, but before it gets to the consumer, usually, "its last estate is worse than its first."

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. When did he say that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In 1898.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is not that an argument for the passage of this bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut if there is anything in that definition of renovated butter that prevents it from being colored in imitation of June butter?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I have already put that into the RECORD.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I merely want to call the attention of the committee to it. Is there anything contained in this definition which prevents the manufacturer of this renovated butter from coloring it in imitation of June butter? I would like an answer to that question.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I think that covers the definition—adulterated butter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want an answer to this question. Is there anything in that definition which prevents the manufacturer of this stuff from coloring it in imitation of June butter?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. It is adulterated butter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am speaking of this renovated butter described by Mr. Levi Wells.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I have the same thing, and it will be found in the RECORD to-morrow. It is adulterated butter—process butter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is renovated butter.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. There is just a difference in the use of the terms.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would like a straight answer to the question.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I regard it as a straight answer. It is adulterated butter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can they color this butter?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. It is adulterated with milk. [Laughter. Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, is there any other gentleman on the floor of this House who can answer this question? I would like an answer for the information of the House and the country.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] is recognized.

Mr. COWHERD. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman while he has the floor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would like to hear any gentleman on the floor answer that question, as the gentleman from Connecticut has not answered it.

Mr. SIBLEY. I would like to say to the gentleman that the farmers of Pennsylvania rose up practically en masse in a demand for the resignation of that man, and he had to tender it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Because of his connection with the oleomargarine manufacturers?

Mr. SIBLEY. That was four years ago.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Connecticut and the committee to what appears to be in the amendment. As I understand the amendment it is not materially different from the Senate amendment, excepting this: It strikes out words in the Senate amendment which prohibited the using of alkali or chemicals in the butter, and strikes out the use of the words "foreign substance added to butter, adulterating, cheapening, or increasing the weight." In the gentleman's amendment all that is stricken out.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. If the gentleman will allow me an interruption, the definition of adulterated butter is on pages 5 and 6, and is a definition prepared by the Department of Agriculture for renovated butter, that the Department under the terms of this bill will control and supervise.

Mr. COWHERD. If your amendment is adopted, then in the making of process or renovated butter they can use, under the terms of it, alkalies and chemicals——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. They can not, for then it becomes adulterated butter.

Mr. COWHERD. Under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. It becomes adulterated butter.

Mr. COWHERD. Under the provisions of this bill, if your amendment is adopted, when alkalis and chemicals are used, it will become adulterated butter?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Undoubtedly.

Mr. COWHERD. Then, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote, and will answer the gentleman's question after it is taken.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Let us pass upon this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sees two gentlemen on the floor and hears nothing from either [laughter], doubtless owing to their distance from the Chair and the conversation which was going on around them.

Mr. MANN. Neither gentleman has been able to learn who has the floor. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois rise for any purpose; and if so, what?

Mr. MANN. I rose and addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked the gentleman from Illinois for what purpose he rose and heard no response.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois could not ascertain whether the gentleman from Connecticut has the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again ask for what purpose the gentleman from Illinois rises?

Mr. MANN. I rise to take the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon this amendment?

Mr. MANN. Upon this amendment, or to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to speak to the amendment if he so desires. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Connecticut for a construction of this definition of process butter?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I have not the floor at this time. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman declines to give information, I know of no process by which he can be forced to. I want to call his attention to the fact that there is absolutely no way, as suggested by my colleague from Illinois, of doing anything whatever with rancid butter, except to make it into axle grease, under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is all it is fit for.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota, who represents the creamery interests, says that is all it is good for. We want to know if that is the intention of the bill. The bill says if they use any substance whatever, not if they mix it with the butter, but if they use any substance whatever for taking out the rancidity, it shall be called adulterated butter. If they boil it or use heat, it becomes adulterated butter; if they sprinkle it with water, it becomes adulterated butter.

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois says, "Oh, no;" but he has not read the section with care. If they said that it shall not be mixed with the butter, that would mean one thing, but when they say use any substance for taking out the rancidity it does not apply to any substance put into the butter, but it applies to anything and forbids the use of salt, it forbids the use of water, or anything except milk.

Mr. TAWNEY. That provision of the bill is stricken out and this is offered as a substitute.

Mr. MANN. I have not heard any amendment striking it out; it is the same section as that in regard to adulterated butter. They did not strike out the definition of adulterated butter, and precisely the same definition is there. If they did, they ought to change it in reference to adulterated butter, or else we have the definition of adulterated butter with a tax of 10 cents a pound and the definition of renovated butter, covering the same thing, with a quarter-of-a-cent tax. The gentleman will find out when this bill becomes a law that the men who are struck down by this bill will undertake to enforce the provisions of the letter of this law against these people. If the gentleman imagines they can strike down an industry on one hand and then beg the question under the working of the law on his part, he will find himself mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I have sent to the desk an amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 5 of the bill strike out, in lines 12 to 15, the following: "Produced by mixing, reworking, rechurning in milk or cream, refining, or in any way producing a uniform, purified, or improved product from different lots or parcels of melted or unmelted butter, or butter fat."

Mr. PARKER. The committee may well be careful about definitions, for they are the pith of the bill—the definition of butter, the definition of adulterated butter, and the definition of renovated butter. Under the law of 1886 butter was defined carefully as a product made with milk or cream by churning, with the addition of salt and proper coloring matter. By the act of August 2, 1886, Supplement to Revised Statutes, page 505—

The word "butter" shall be understood to mean the food product usually known as butter, and which is made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, with or without common salt and with or without additional coloring matter.

Any such product is by that act not to be an adulteration. This bill is intended to guard against adulterations. We know that formaldehyde was said to be used to embalm beef. We hear from time to time as to milk that borax is put in, and the physicians of our various great cities testify that children are dying because what is put into milk for its preservation tends to make it unhealthy and indigestible. We know, too—I think we all know—that when butter gets sour or rancid, soda is used to wash it and to take out that sourness and rancidity, and that when the butter is reworked and the soda all washed out, sweet butter is left for the market. I think the gentleman from Illinois will confirm me in this statement—that a little soda takes away the sourness and leaves the butter good.

Now, if it be intended to declare, when butter is so worked over and soda is used in washing it, that the butter shall be called adulterated, I think it should also be regarded as adulterated if such articles as acids or alkalies, or whatever they may be, are added to the butter in the first place.

The gentleman from New York has called attention to an old definition of renovated butter. I stand by this bill, but let me say at the same time that there are firms who ship from this country enormous quantities of the very best sort of butter for tropical use, which they manufacture by reworking ordinary butter, adding to it large quantities of salt and getting rid of any sourness whatever by the soda process, to which I have referred. That would be under this bill called adulterated butter.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not necessarily.

Mr. PARKER. It would, by reason of the addition of the soda.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not necessarily.

Mr. PARKER. Necessarily it must be regarded as adulterated under this bill, although the same construction would not be adopted with reference to creamery butter, though subjected to the same adulteration.

Let us in our definition consider carefully what is to be defined as butter. If butter is to be regarded as adulterated because it contains certain ingredients, then it is adulterated whether those ingredients are put into it in reworking or in the original manufacture. Let us strike out everything in this bill that has to do with the reworking, and provide in effect (for that is what I presume is meant) that adulterated butter is hereby defined to mean a grade of butter in which any acid, alkali, chemical, or any substance whatever is introduced or used for the purpose or with the effect of deodorizing or removing therefrom rancidity.

What difference does it make whether the butter is reworked? The butter should be regarded by the law as adulterated, not only if it has been reworked and certain substances added, but also it is just as much adulterated if those substances or ingredients are used in the beginning. I am one of many who believe that the addition of borax or salicylic acid or anything that prevents decay likewise prevents digestion and spoils the article. If this bill is passed we want the people to have real creamery butter—butter as defined in 1886.

Mr. TOMPKINS of New York. Does not the gentleman think that the word "mixing," in line 12, makes the definition apply to the original manufacture of the article as well as to the reworking?

Mr. PARKER. No; that referred to mixing different lots of butter.

Mr. TOMPKINS of New York. It does not say so.

Mr. PARKER. Oh, yes; it says:

Butter produced by mixing, reworking, rechurning in milk or cream, refining, or in any way producing a uniform, purified, or improved product from different lots or parcels.

It refers to the mixture of different lots. If the process is applied to a single lot the product is exempt.

May I add that immediately after this amendment is disposed of I shall move to strike out, in lines 20 and 21, the words:

With intent or effect of cheapening in cost the product.

The question of adulteration does not depend upon whether it is done with any particular intent. If there is mixed with the article any substance foreign to butter, as herein defined—if any foreign substances are put in—the article is not butter as defined in this bill.

If the substances are added, it is not such butter as defined, but whether it is with the intent to cheapen in the process of reworking, or whether the product is taken from different lots or in single lots is beside the purpose of this bill. Let us have a bill that means something instead of one that means nothing, and with that purpose I offer likewise this other amendment. I think they are so much to the same purpose and effect that I shall ask unanimous consent to have them considered together.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the amendment he has offered and the one which he desires to offer may be considered together. If there is no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I admire the sincerity and good intentions of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], but we can not reform the whole moral law in one little bill. I suggest that any amendment of this character will simply complicate the bill. The bill has been carefully considered, and I trust the amendment will be voted down. I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Connecticut concluded his remarks?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PARKER. Then I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend lines 21 and 22, page 5, by striking out the words "with intent or effect of cheapening in cost the product."

Several MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor for a moment. I want to ask the gentleman from Connecticut what is the good of the words "with the intent or effect of cheapening in cost the product?" What do they add to the bill? What help do they give? The clause provides for adulteration by mixing foreign materials.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I would say that the committee has considered this bill carefully, and they believe it to be as near correct as it can be, and they object to further amendments.

Mr. PARKER. Has the gentleman any reason to give me why those words should be there?

Several MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. PARKER. Well, I would really like an answer. [Laughter.] Does the gentleman decline to give an answer?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I do not think it requires an answer. The committee objects to any further amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKER) there were—ayes 27, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I notice it is 5 o'clock, and I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL) having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 9206, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ALASKAN BOUNDARY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, in response to the resolution of the House of Representatives of April 10, 1902, requesting him "to inform the House of Representatives whether the State Department has received from official or other sources information as to the reliability of reports which have recently appeared in the public prints to the effect that in American territory, near the border of Alaska, British and Canadian officials (exercising authority by an agreement entered into by the Government of the United States and the British Government) are making surveys and encroachments upon territory not included in said agreement, and are removing and destroying ancient landmarks and monuments long ago erected by the Russian Government to mark the Alaskan boundary."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 23, 1902.

The message, with accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY IN THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, covering a report on the progress of the beet-sugar industry in the United States during the year 1901.

Your attention is invited to the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture that 10,000 copies of the report be printed for the use of the Department, in addition to such number as may be desired for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, April 23, 1902.

The message was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 4506) granting an increase of pension to Ann E. Collier, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DEEMER for the remainder of the week, on account of important business.

AMENDMENT TO INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. RUSSELL, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the bill (H. R. 179) to amend the internal-revenue laws; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented this day to the President of the the United States, for his approval, bills of the following titles:

H. R. 1455. An act granting an increase of pension to Aaron S. Gatliff;

H. R. 11314. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Pettit;

H. R. 611. An act granting an increase of pension to Theodore F. Collins;

H. R. 1326. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Thatcher;

H. R. 12697. An act granting a pension to M. C. Rogers.

LONDON DOCK CHARGES.

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, at a very late hour yesterday afternoon there was a discussion in the House of a very important question. I refer to the bill relating to the London dock clause. It is a subject in which the shipping people of this country are very much interested, and the committee to which that bill was referred have differed in their opinion as to the merits of the bill. I therefore ask unanimous consent for leave to have the views of the minority printed in the RECORD, in order that the members of the House may avail themselves of the information on this important question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOMPKINS] asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the views of the minority upon the bill H. R. 9059. Is there objection?

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, have these views been filed, and are they already in print?

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. Yes; they are in print.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The document referred to is as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

[To accompany H. R. 9059.]

The undersigned members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, being unable to agree to a favorable report of this bill, beg leave to state their views, as follows:

Several strange features appear in this bill for which no explanation was offered in the committee. While nominally intended to apply to the port of London only, as has been repeatedly stated by the advocates of the measure (millers and lumbermen), and aimed solely at shipowners, the phraseology of the bill is so broad and sweeping that it applies to property transported to a great number of foreign ports. The bill deprives not only shipowners in this country, but "any persons or agencies other than the consignee or consignees" of the right or privilege of entering into any form of contract to protect even our American shippers or shipowners from unjust or even iniquitous laws, statutes, or customs of any country or countries, whether civilized or uncivilized, friendly or hostile to the American people.

The bill is drawn so as to protect the consignee in every foreign country; yet it is a prohibition of freedom of contract on all those interested in developing the export trade of the United States.

No two foreign ports in the world are exactly alike in their natural surroundings and consequent conditions. It has been the practice from time immemorial that the shipowner and shipper the world over, not alone in the United States, should clearly provide in the contract for the carriage of property to a foreign port that their responsibility ceases when the same is delivered over ship's rail. In ports of many foreign countries there may be customs or laws which would be absolutely injurious to American shippers and shipowners if they were unable when shipping to limit their liability for costs and all else up to the point when the property is delivered over ship's rail at the port of destination. The character and effect of some of these customs and laws we do not know.

Should this bill pass, it is well to consider the effect in respect to business to a foreign country where citizens of the United States and citizens of another country were endeavoring to do an export business. The freedom of contract being taken from the American, his foreign competitor in that particular business would be at a decided advantage.

No reason has been assigned by those advocating this bill why American exporters or shipowners should be denied the privilege of protecting themselves in this manner. Therefore, although it has been so frequently stated by the advocates of the bill (the millers and lumbermen) that it aimed at London, it would seriously prejudice and injure the methods of conducting trade to foreign countries and would prevent the shipper and shipowner in the export trade of the United States having a right to contract themselves into the same necessary position as are the shippers and shipowners of other countries.

The arguments submitted in support of the bill are all based on London, and consequently it seems well to develop facts with respect to the actual conditions prevailing there. By an ancient custom of that port, dating as far back as 1512, the Watermen's Company, by permission of the Crown, issued licenses to certain persons to work on the River Thames about the city of London as lightermen or bargemen, in consideration of their supplying men for the King's barges and for the royal navy. Under this license the bargemen had the privilege of going alongside of the vessels anchored in the river and removing the cargo from ship's rail free of any tax or charge.

When the first of the London docks were constructed, one hundred and twenty-five years ago, these bargemen had sufficient influence in the British Parliament to have this privilege continued to them, provided their barges were alongside of the ship in the dock and prepared to take any cargo within twenty-four hours after the ship entered. During all this period the goods that were taken from the dock by land instead of water were obliged to pay certain regular charges to the dock companies, which now and for some time past have amounted to 4 shillings per ton minimum. These barges were then and are still propelled by no power of their own, either steam or sail, but depend entirely upon the ebb and flow of the tide in the river.

This discrimination in favor of the bargemen was not founded on any principle of justice, for no reason has been assigned or attempted to be assigned showing why the delivery by barge should have any peculiar advantage over delivery by land, nor why one consignee of goods should be given a preference over another receiving goods from the same vessel. This, however, was not of special importance so long as the vessels entering the port of London were of comparatively small capacity, carrying a few varieties of cargo from a small number of shippers to a limited number of consignees; but as years went on and the size of ships increased, and with the development of commerce the number of shippers and consignees multiplied as did the diversity of the cargo; then the injustice of permitting these bargemen longer to enjoy this special privilege to the disadvantage of all other persons became manifest.

In the development of modern commerce vessels now carrying the American exports to London are of such great size that they are obliged to enter large locked-in tidal docks 8 to 14 miles distant from the center of the city of London. This increased distance required, of course, longer time, and the ebb and flow of a greater number of tides for the barges to float on their journeys and to get in and out of the docks, as they could only enter and leave at high water, and made more evident the impossibility of conducting business by the means and in the mode inaugurated four hundred years ago.

So when the shipowners engaged in the American trade some years since determined to construct large freight-carrying steamers, as large as any in the world—which have become so large that at present steamers now in service have a carrying capacity of eleven to twelve thousand tons of freight—they found it necessary to arrange with the London Dock Company, and did arrange, after considerable effort, that in order to expedite and cheapen the handling of the miscellaneous American exports the shipowners themselves, in addition to the ordinary duty of carriers of cargo, would undertake, after unloading, to assort, shelter, and deliver all goods transported by them from ports in America to the port of London. And in fulfillment of the purpose the so-called "London landing clause" was framed and inserted in bills of lading as long ago as 1888.

Among the many advantages the clause gives consignees seventy-two hours instead of twenty-four hours, as on cargo from other countries, after the steamer was reported at the custom-house, within which time their goods would be delivered without charge on American goods on the part of the dock company. The items of the expense for this service and the privileges accorded the American export movement are all set forth in the clause. The arrangement which resulted in this operation was only agreed to by the dock companies upon the assurances of the shipowners in the American trade that the speedy handling and delivery of cargo at a moderate charge would greatly enlarge the American business at the port of London.

This has been amply justified by the result. For instance, the American flour shippers in 1890 sent from the United States to London 10,000,000 hundredweight, which ten years later, in 1900, had increased to the enormous sum of 17,000,000 hundredweight of flour, while in the same year, 1900, the receipts of flour from all other countries in the world at London was only 178,000 hundredweight.

The result of this arrangement is that the bargemen at the port of London no longer enjoy the unreasonable discrimination in their favor allowed by the ancient custom of that port, but all American exports are subject to a definite charge, covering speedy assortment by responsible parties, care, shelter, and prompt delivery.

In view of this arrangement the shipowners in the American trade have provided themselves no only with the most modern and enormous steamers, but they themselves, without any increase in ocean freights, have at great expense hired quay space, installed modern apparatus for unloading, and pay dues for other facilities, by which working with a force of hundreds of men, day and night, they are enabled to unload a steamer with 10,000 to 12,000 tons of cargo in two or three days, load their west-bound cargo, turn their steamers about, and return to American ports on regular schedule, while vessels from other countries, not working under these modern methods, often occupy two or three weeks in unloading a much smaller cargo and at a greater cost to the receivers thereof, who are in the hands of the dock companies and must pay the dock company's charges for work equivalent to that performed under the so-called "London landing clause."

The rate of freight on the North Atlantic to London has steadily decreased year by year as the steamers have become larger, faster, and are consequently able to carry more cargo and make more trips.

The benefit to all of the shippers of the United States is apparent. They have regularity of service, the cheapest rates of freight ever known, and goods are delivered quickly and are not subject to any charges by the London dock companies, so that the American exports by sea to London are handled with as much certainty as will be found on land.

There can certainly be no discrimination against American exports at London in regard to handling after delivery from ship's rail as compared with the cost of handling exports of other countries to London through the dock companies, when it is shown that the "London landing-clause" rate is less than one-half of the minimum charge of the dock companies for the identical service.

The effect of the bill, as is stated by its friends, is to take from the shipowners the power to make a contract for assorting, caring for, sheltering, and delivering cargo after it leaves ship's rail, at 1 shilling 9 pence per ton, or any other charge, and to restore the ancient and actual discrimination in favor of the bargemen of London, who may choose to float in and out upon the tides of the waters of the Thames.

The services for which the charges in the "London landing clause" are made are entirely different and distinct from the simple carrying of cargo on the ocean. They have grown out of the requirements of modern business methods and the necessity for speedy dispatch of the cargo and the vessels, that the enormous exports of the United States may be moved economically in all departments.

Ambassador Choate in his report, page 6, says:

"The 1 shilling 9 pence charge, which is the subject of the present contention, is made, not for discharging the goods from the ship onto the quay, which is still borne by these steamship companies and is a heavy cost, but for the accommodation, shelter, and care of the goods upon the quay, and for all the labor done upon them from the moment they touch the quay until they are delivered to the barges, including sorting, piling, and removing, i. e., delivery to craft, car, wagon, or other conveyance."

The agents and attorneys for the millers and lumbermen, who alone advocated this bill before the committee, stated several times that they did not object to the amount of the charges embraced in the clause, but insisted that they should be included in the ocean freight rate with the expectation and object, as alleged, that they would be finally absorbed by competition, that is to say, the ocean rate varies according to supply and demand, as was admitted by all at the hearings given. The charges for assorting, etc., after delivery from ship's rail are not so regulated. From this, as we understand it, it is meant that the millers and lumbermen want the work for their benefit to continue at the port of London as it is now done, but they do not want to pay for it.

The services for which the charges in the "London clause" are made, as shown above, are for totally different work from that of ocean carriage and delivery over ship's rail. They cover the equivalent work that is performed at Liverpool, Glasgow, and other ports in Great Britain and on the continent of Europe, and became necessary in the present form at the port of London because of the special favors that were granted to the bargemen so many years ago, and from the necessity for the speedy handling of cargo by responsible parties. If this bill is passed it will be entirely within the power of the dock companies at London to charge a minimum of 4 shillings for every ton of cargo upon their docks instead of the lesser charges under the "London clause."

Ambassador Choate, in a note on page 11 of his report, records that the dock companies at London are "afraid of the shipowners, who are well organized; but if the shipowner was allowed to complete his obligation when goods were delivered over the vessel's side, the cargo would be in the hands of the dock companies, who are in a position of absolute autocracy toward cargo interests."

The large steamers with American exports carry to London on one voyage ten to twelve thousand tons of cargo from as many as 800 or 1,000 shippers and intended for a thousand or more consignees. After delivery the cargo must be assorted, cared for, sheltered, and delivered in a systematic way, as only modern methods and energy can bring about.

If each of the great number of consignees sent his own men to attend to his own consignment, the docks would be overcrowded with men all searching for their own particular property, and causing not only delay to themselves but to everyone else, the result of which would be chaos. It seems useless to say that the modern methods must be overthrown by preventing the shipowners from making a reasonable contract because of the absurd privileges claimed by the bargemen of the port of London.

The question of the right to make the charges stipulated in the "London landing clause" for the services rendered by the shipowners was contested in the royal courts of justice, England, about three years after the clause was put in force, and Justice Day, in rendering decision April 7, 1891, held that the contract growing out of the clause was perfectly legal. He made the following, among other observations, in respect to it:

"The 'London clause' has been entered into, it is stated, by shipowners and merchants in London for the purpose of expediting business. It contains most reasonable provisions, which are almost necessary for the conduct of commercial business in these times, and when one finds immense vessels, such as the Lydian Monarch and other vessels, coming into the port of London, it is ridiculous to have applicable to such vessels and to such cargoes the old custom of the port of London, which was no doubt very applicable to small vessels containing very limited cargoes indeed.

"If the shipowner had entered into this contract for the purpose merely of pecuniary benefit, he would have been entitled to the benefit of the contract. It was quite clear, however, that it is not merely for pecuniary benefit, but that it is to the interest of all parties concerned that their goods should be delivered in the most convenient manner, and should be delivered in such manner as to enable them always to get their goods within the shortest possible time."

The Lydian Monarch, the immense vessel referred to in the decision which is given on page 42 of Senate Document No. 96, was a large steamer for her day, but there are now steamers in the London trade three and four times her size.

It is pertinent at this point to refer to page 10 of Senate Document No. 96, Appendix 2, giving an extract from a portion of section 493 of the merchant shipping act, 1894. From the reading of this it would appear that the shipowner is obliged to do certain things which, from a reading of all of the portion of the act referred to relating to the disposal of cargo—Part VII, sections 422 and 501, inclusive—is not found to be invariably incumbent upon him. Section 501 is short and to the point, nullifying, as far as established local port conditions are concerned, all of the preceding sections under Part VII.

Section 501 reads:

"Nothing in this part of this act shall 'take away or abridge any powers given by any local act to any harbor authority, body corporate, or persons whereby they are enabled to expedite the discharge of ships or the landing or delivery of goods; nor shall anything in this part of this act take away or diminish any rights or remedies given to any shipowner or wharfinger or warehouseman by any local act.'"

The statement has been frequently made that London is a "free port." Ambassador Choate's comments on this point will be found in Senate Document No. 96, page 3, fourth paragraph, as follows:

"In harmony with these enactments, which thus secured to the bargemen and to the cargo exemption from dock charges for unlading, it was and still is, unless otherwise agreed, the custom of the port of London that a consignee of goods has the right to the delivery of his goods overside, and therefore free from landing charges if he is ready and willing to take delivery of the same within twenty-four hours after the arrival at her place of discharge of the vessel in which the goods are borne. This, I take it, is what is meant—and all that is meant—by London being a "free port" by act of Parliament."

And page 14, second paragraph, as follows:

"It should be mentioned that if the merchant's barge is not alongside the ship within twenty-four hours from the date of the vessel's report the right of obtaining free delivery is forfeited, and the dock company have the right to levy their quay dues upon the scale charged to the merchant, a right which in all circumstances is rigidly enforced."

One result of the passage of this bill must be to put the shippers of this country at the mercy of the London dock companies, whose minimum charge is 4s. per ton of freight, as against the average of 1s. 9d., now being paid under the "London clause," with the possible privilege to a few shippers to receive their goods over the side of the ships free of charge, provided the barge floating down the river upon the tide can be alongside the ship within twenty-four hours after the vessel reports.

A barge floating down the river, as a matter of practical knowledge, can not once in twenty times be alongside the ship in the dock within twenty-four hours after her entry.

The barges are small and open, and enough to remove the cargo of a modern steamer from the United States could not be floated in the docks at one time.

If this bill is passed and the existing agreement between American shipowners and the London dock companies is abrogated, the effect on the American trade at the port of London may be most disastrous. Without the "London clause" as it now exists in the bill of lading, which is based upon the contract between the shipowners and the dock companies, the full duty of the shipowners, both by law and custom, will be completed when they deliver the goods over the side of the ship onto the docks. Formerly the dock companies took charge of the goods as soon as landed on the dock for the purpose of delivering them. It will be seen, however, from page 6 of Mr. Choate's report, that—

"In the year 1890, after a very serious strike among the dock laborers, the dock companies declined to have anything more to do with the cargoes discharged upon the docks for transfer to barges or to perform any labor thereon, which they had theretofore done under a claim of right, and since that time such labor has all been done by the steamship companies."

And, on page 14, Mr. Choate says:

"The delay that merchants suffer arise in part from the inadequacy of the dock quays, and also from the unwillingness of the dock officials to assist the lighterage traffic in any way whatever."

If Congress wishes to revive this ancient privilege at London and attach it to modern methods of doing business, the bill should be so drawn as to express that purpose.

There is certainly no need of a bill which takes from every shipowner and shipper in the United States the ordinary rights of contract and expressly protects the consignees of every foreign country to the disadvantage of our own citizens.

Some effort has been made before the committee to justify the enactment of such a law as this by comparing American shipping business with that of other countries whose ships enter the port of London. The circumstances surrounding these two different lines of business are so dissimilar that no just comparison can be made. The business of other countries is conducted in an old-time, easy-going method. Their ships are comparatively small and can enter the docks higher up the river, nearer the center of the city of London and its warehouses. The cargo often consists of one or two classes of freight, consigned to a limited number of persons. Freight entering from the American ports is carried in the largest vessels afloat. By reason of their size they are confined to a couple of docks, located from 10 to 14 miles from the center of the city of London.

Their cargo consists of every kind of farm products and manufactured goods produced in this country. They carry goods in the same vessels from as many as 800 to 1,000 consignors to an equal or greater number of consignees, and it is physically impossible to unload and handle this enormous quantity of freight of such varied character in a mode that is entirely suitable to the business from other countries. The difference in the two kinds of business can not be better compared than by the difference in the one article of flour shipped from the United States and that of other countries. As shown above, in 1900 the United States shipped 17,000,000 hundredweight of flour to London, while all other countries only shipped 178,000 hundredweight. One steamer from the United States carried on one voyage 74,000 sacks of flour.

It must be apparent that the mode of handling this great and increasing business is bound to be different from that of handling the business from all other of the world's ports, and no greater injustice could be done to the American shipping business than to overthrow the modern method of handling it at London, which has proven so beneficent in its results.

A bill (H. R. 7982) granting an increase of pension to William T. Peterson;

A bill (H. R. 7507) granting an increase of pension to James M. Ashley; and

A bill (H. R. 11894) granting a pension to Hannah A. Timmons.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12148) granting an increase of pension to Frederick O. Clark, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9037) to allow the commutation of homestead entries in certain cases, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3209) for the relief of the heirs of William Tinder, deceased, to submit an adverse report thereon. At the request of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], who introduced the bill, I ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

TRANSPORTATION AND SALE OF MEAT PRODUCTS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr.

HARRIS on the 22d instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 6,000 copies of Senate Report No. 829, Fifty-first Congress, first session, with testimony; 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

PARK SYSTEM OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] February 12, 1902, to report it with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 10,000 copies of Senate Report No. 166, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, being the report on the improvement of the park system of the District of Columbia, 4,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The amendments of the Committee on Printing were, at the end of line 2, before "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "six;" in line 6, before "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "two," and at the beginning of line 7, before "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "four;" so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 6,000 copies of Senate Report No. 166, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, being the report on the improvement of the park system of the District of Columbia, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

DECAY OF TIMBER.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report a joint resolution providing for the printing of an edition of 10,000 copies of Bulletin No. 14 of the Bureau of Plant Industry, and I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 88) providing for the printing of an edition of 10,000 copies of Bulletin No. 14 of the Bureau of Plant Industry—The Decay of Timber and Methods of Preventing it—was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be printed 10,000 copies of Bulletin No. 14 of the Bureau of Plant Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF GOVERNOR OF OKLAHOMA FOR 1901.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print 5,000 additional copies of the report of the governor of Oklahoma for 1901, and to deliver the same to the Department of the Interior.

REPORT ON BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, yesterday the Presiding Officer of the Senate laid before the Senate a message from the President, transmitting a report from the Secretary of Agriculture covering the progress of the beet-sugar industry during the year 1901. I find that it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The President in his message says:

> Your attention is invited to the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture that 10,000 copies of the report be printed for the use of the Department, in addition to such number as may be desired for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives.

It seems to me that the message belongs to the Committee on Printing, if we are to comply with the suggestion of the Secretary of Agriculture, which I think we all want to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It must go to the Committee on Printing if any objection is made to the reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. TELLER. Then I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the reference and let the message be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the reference will be reconsidered and the message will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

CORRECTION OF RECORD OF CITIZENSHIP.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5314) to confirm and legalize prior admissions to citizenship of the United States where the judge or clerk of the court administering the oath to the applicant or his witnesses has failed to sign or seal the record, oath, or the judgment of admission, and to establish a proper record of such citizenship, to report it without amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read to the Senate for its information.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps before the bill is read Senators may catch the purport of it better if I make a simple statement. A considerable number of persons were naturalized by Territorial courts where all the necessary requisites for naturalization were complied with, but the certificates of the clerk of the court are defective in form. The court has gone out of existence, so that it now can not amend its record or make a certificate nunc pro tunc. Of those thus naturalized a few have taken up land, which they could only do if they were citizens, and all are entitled to vote. This bill, which was drawn by direction of my honorable friend from North Dakota, provides that there may be a hearing before a United States court, and if the judge finds that the requisites were in fact complied with, notwithstanding the defect of the certificate, he may so adjudge. It makes a general bill for all like cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5332) to confirm divers records and judgments admitting certain persons to be citizens of the United States and to confirm the filing, entry upon, final proof of, and title obtained to public lands, to report adversely thereon. It is merely another bill providing for the same thing. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

WARRIOR SOUTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 13575) to grant a right of way to the Warrior Southern Railway Company through the tract of land in the State of Alabama reserved for the use of the United States in connection with the improvement of the Black Warrior River, and known as Lock 4.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Arkansas. It is a very short bill, giving the railroad company a right to cross the lands of the United States at a lock on the Warrior River.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN Q. A. MOORE, E. D. SWEENEY, AND W. D. CADDELL.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills:

A bill (S. 174) for the relief of John Q. A. Moore;

A bill (S. 175) for the relief of E. D. Sweeney; and

A bill (S. 1045) for the relief of W. D. Caddell—reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bills entitled (S. 174) for the relief of John Q. A. Moore, (S. 175) for the relief of E. D. Sweeney, and (S. 1045) for the relief of W. D. Caddell, now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 5409) to create a board for the condemnation of insanitary buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 5417) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Behymer; and

A bill (S. 5418) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William H. Taylor.

Mr. PETTUS introduced a bill (S. 5419) to add a corps of dental surgeons to the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery of the Navy; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PETTUS. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and make a request of that committee that the bill be referred to the Navy Department for its opinion on it.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS introduced a bill (S. 5420) to reorganize the corps of dental surgeons attached to the Medical Department of the Army; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I ask also that that committee be requested to refer the bill to the Secretary of War.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a bill (S. 5421) granting a pension to William H. H. Avery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PERKINS. By request of my colleague [Mr. BARD], who is unavoidably absent, I desire to introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 5422) authorizing the county of Maricopa, Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds for the construction of reservoirs and dams for water storage, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. MCCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 5423) to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors in Government buildings; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 5424) granting an increase of pension to Cynthia J. Shattuck; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 5425) for the relief of honorably discharged officers and privates, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina introduced a bill (S. 5426) to repeal the import duties upon pork, veal, mutton, and beef imported from foreign countries; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MONEY. On the 4th of this month I introduced a bill (S. 4956) for the relief of the estate of W. R. Butler, deceased, which was referred to the Committee on Claims. In order to correct an error in the bill, I move that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the same and that it be postponed indefinitely, and I will introduce a new bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 5427) for the relief of W. R. Butler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 5428) to amend the internal-revenue laws; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi introduced a bill (S. 5429) for the relief of the heirs of Moses Meyer, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CARMACK introduced a bill (S. 5430) for the relief of the estate of William Parks, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PENROSE introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5431) granting a pension to Daniel Dougherty;

A bill (S. 5432) granting a pension to Joseph Tusinski; and

A bill (S. 5433) granting a pension to Anna E. Harman.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 87) to permit steam railroads in the District of Columbia to occupy additional parts of streets in order to accommodate the traveling public attending the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in October, 1902; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AGREEMENT WITH CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

Mr. HARRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4848) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, and for other purposes; which, together with the memorial of the full-blood Mississippi Choctaws relative to their rights in the Choctaw Nation, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of War to procure a suitable medal to be presented to those members of what was known as "Young's Scouts" who participated in the engagement at the burning bridge over the Cabon River, Philippine Islands, May 16, 1899, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment providing that the number of cadets authorized to be appointed by the President from the United States at large shall be 10 per annum, but the total number of cadets at large at the Military Academy at any one time shall not exceed 40, intended to be proposed by him to the Military Academy appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BUFFINGTON-CROZIER GUN CARRIAGE.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of all official reports from artillery officers in regard to the Buffington-Crozier disappearing gun carriage, made either to the War Department or to the Board of Ordnance and Fortification.

REPORT ON BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Mr. BURROWS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 400 copies of the report of the Secretary of Agriculture relative to the progress of the beet-sugar industry in the United States, and transmitted to the Senate on the 23d instant, omitting for the present any process plates that might otherwise delay the printing of said reports.

UNION RAILROAD STATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I understood that the Senate was to go into executive session this morning, and I made arrangements to have a meeting of the Committee on the District of Columbia to discuss the amendment which was proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]. I therefore should like to have Senate bill 4825, which was under consideration in the morning hour yesterday, go over until to-morrow morning, and I give notice that to-morrow morning I shall again call up the bill.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS OF ROSEBUD RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 2992) to ratify an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has been an arrangement made in relation to this bill. It goes over without prejudice.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1792) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to navigation of vessels, bills of lading, and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with the carriage of property," was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let the bill go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (H. R. 3110) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

COURTS IN WYOMING.

The bill (S. 1919) fixing fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts in the State of Wyoming" was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has been heretofore read as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LABELING OF WINE.

The bill (S. 1347) for the proper labeling of wine purporting to be champagne was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that that bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Retaining its place?

Mr. McCUMBER. Retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

FOOD ADULTERATION, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 9960) to prevent a false branding or marking of food and dairy products as to the State or Territory in which they are made or produced was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not know but that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] is ready to take it up.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am ready to take it up, and I have an amendment to suggest to which I think there will be no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw my request that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Manufactures with an amendment, in section 2, line 4, before the words "more than $2,000," to strike out the words "less than 500 nor;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That if any person or persons violate the provisions of this act, either in person or through another, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000; and that the jurisdiction for the prosecution of said misdemeanor shall be within the district of the United States court in which it is committed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I submit an amendment as a substitute for section 1.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota, in behalf of the committee, offers an amendment; which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That no person or persons, company, or corporation shall introduce into any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia from any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or sell in the District of Columbia or in any Territory any dairy or food products which shall be falsely labeled or branded as to the State or Territory in which they are made, produced, or grown, or cause or procure the same to be done by others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I sympathize with the object of the bill, but I would like to have it so framed as to escape any possible trouble. Does the provision make the sale of the article an offense if the person who sells it does not know that it is falsely or fraudulently labeled?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will state in reply to the inquiry of the Senator that the bill deals with the article only as interstate commerce. It simply prohibits its transportation when it is labeled falsely as to the State or country in which it is made.

Mr. HOAR. My question is not answered by that suggestion. Suppose a man sell in a grocery store something which he bought innocently of a wholesale dealer in a neighboring city that is marked as having been produced in Massachusetts when in fact it was produced in Iowa. This provision does not say that it must be knowingly done. So in regard to transporting the article by a common carrier. An expressman has a bundle put in his cart. It is covered with a wrapper, and it turns out that it was falsely labeled. He does not know anything about it and can not know anything about it. Should not the amendment contain some words which would imply guilt on his part likewise?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think not. That suggestion might be made in regard to nearly every criminal law on our statute books. It might be said with reference to the sale of intoxicating liquors in prohibition States. The moment that you make such a provision as that a part of the law you open wide the door for the escape of almost every person against whom any complaint is made.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, it is now proposed by the Senator from North Dakota to amend the bill, and I think it should go over, in order that we may know exactly what is proposed. I object, therefore, to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. It has been read, and I hope the Senator will not object to its further consideration.

Mr. MITCHELL. In order that the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota may be printed and that we may know precisely what legislation is intended, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator makes his objection, I wish he would allow me to say a word, as I can not be here to-morrow, when I suppose the bill will again come up.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. There is a very wide distinction between this case and the cases alluded to by the Senator who proposed the amendment. Undoubtedly the man who sells liquor knows what he is selling, and he may be fairly compelled to do it at his peril; but where the act is one which of itself is guilty or innocent according to circumstances which the man can ascertain, we do not require knowledge, but the man does it at his peril. But here is a case where there is to be a transportation of ordinary food products which are sold in every grocery, wholesale or retail, which are carried by express companies from cities, not merely on the railroads, but by the little expressmen, by truckmen, from a depot to a store. They can not know what the thing is, and could not do their business if they did know. Now, this bill says that a truckman who takes a package wrapped in any kind of a wrapper, and which on the inside is branded that it was made in Massachusetts, when, in fact, it was made in North Dakota, is a criminal, whether he knows anything about it or not.
